And then you know that there's anxiety without calling it anything. That is a huge difference to know that anxiety is in you, anger is in you right now, for example, or anxiety, whatever else it may be, or some mood that suddenly gets a hold of you, and then you're suddenly in a bad mood. Don't talk to me, don't think.

I'm grumpy. Well, to say I'm grumpy is already a little bit step forward because at least you know that you're grumpy. If you're totally unconscious, the grumpiness is you, and you don't even know that you're grumpy.

To say, don't talk to me, I'm grumpy, that's already means there's a little bit of awareness there, it's great. So there's a huge difference between saying, I'm angry, and I feel angry, or there's anger in me. I feel that there's anger in me.

I feel angry. There's somewhat a difference when I am angry because then you equate identity with emotion. So it's not, I am angry, that's a huge, you've fallen into a huge trap.

If you equate emotion with your identity, or if you equate a thought with your identity, or a story in your mind, you equate that with your identity, or an opinion, which is thought. The world is full of people who don't know the difference between their opinion and their identity. Their opinion becomes their identity.

And then they have lots of fights with other people because they are totally confused about who they are. They derive their identity from a set of opinions, politics, for example. It doesn't mean you cannot have opinions, everybody has opinions.

But where does your sense of identity come from? Does it come from the opinions, or do you realize that you have certain opinions which may be valid or not? You're on a human level, you have opinions, or viewpoints, or perspective, mental positions, you have them, they are there, but do these give you your sense of self?

Or if they do, then you're continuously arguing with other people, making other people into enemies, because when you contradict somebody who equates opinion with identity, unconsciously they believe that you are attacking their very self, because there's a confusion about who they are, they don't know who they are. So you attack the opinion of somebody who's totally identified with their opinion, and you become their mortal enemy. They might even try to kill you in an extreme form of unconsciousness.

So, this is why it's so important to transcend that. Transcend doesn't mean you exclude it, it doesn't mean no more opinions. I'm now, I'm having no opinion about anything or anyone, no, that's not going to work.

What do you think of the Republican Party, the Democratic Party? Nothing. But there is a deeper level, if you can go to a deeper level, and your sense of I does not come from the movement of thought, it comes from a deeper place, your identity, who you feel or sense you are, does not come from the emotional field, or from the mental formations.

And that is the awakening, that is to be awakened, is, first of all, it is to discover that dimension. For some people at first, it comes in little glimpses, perhaps sometimes in protected settings, environments like here, and I say, are you able to, this moment, are you able to let go of thinking without falling asleep, but remaining alert, in a gentle way, not through willpower, just relinquish, conceptualization, no need to interpret compulsively this moment. What could you add to it?

Interpret, you like it, you dislike this, I don't like that. Yes, likes and dislikes still exist on the surface of your being, but when you become rooted in the deeper presence, the being of you, then you're suddenly free. And you can sense that in that stillness, if we want to call it that, stillness just means the absence of thought, and what remains when thought goes, but you don't fall asleep, is conscious presence, pure consciousness remains.

And that is the deeper I, the deeper I am. So a moment of presence or stillness, in that moment, you have transcended the person, the personal self. Of course, you go back into it after a while, and the question is, are you going to lose yourself in it again, perhaps?

And then you come out of it again. And after a while, this is your, the aim of spiritual practice, that your connectedness with the deeper dimension is not lost, even when you're engaged in daily activities, or discussions, or whatever it may be, that connectedness remains in the background, which may be the case with you now, as you listen to this, something in you recognizes what the words are pointing to, and that's not the conceptual mind, that which recognizes it as true, is the immediate realization of it, of the truth of it. You don't have to think about it, you can't think about it. So it's, you know, immediately, yes, I know, there's a direct knowing, not conceptual knowing.

Conceptual means knowing through thinking. Most people live through a conceptual reality, their identity is a conceptual identity, and they conceptualize everybody else they meet, they immediately form judgments that come very quickly, and you form a conceptual identity for the other. You trap the other person in this mental concept, but you do that because you've already done it to yourself.

So you live through a conceptual identity, me. And so we step, we go to a deeper place, or you could call it higher or deeper, it doesn't matter. I prefer deeper, well, you go to a deeper place where the movement of thought ceases, and immediately you have transcended the self, the egoic self, if only for a few seconds, or a minute.

And everybody is longing to be free of this problematic entity, unconsciously, they want to be free, but they don't want to let go. There's a paradox here, they don't want to let go, and yet they can't stand it, they want to be free. So much drug taking in this world, or they want to transcend this heaviness of experiencing life as this heavy burden, and their identity is very unsatisfying.

So they're longing to be free, but they're going below thinking, the road that takes you below, you fall below thought, and to some extent, yes, you have become free of the self, before you go to sleep, there's a transitional moment when you're in bed, and you're halfway to sleep already, and that moment feels really good. You feel, ah, it feels, you can feel the pull of sleep, and you can feel, you can't think about your problems anymore, your entire sense of identity isn't there because you're too tired, and then you're pulled into sleep. Same with many substances that you take, they'll pull you below thought.

At first, it feels liberating, at least, even the smoking of this dried leaf that people like. They smoke, and it slows you down, it slows down the mind. I tried it once.

I tried another thing, too, but this was, this was, I tried it in a hotel room in Amsterdam. It's true. It's not that great, but I can see what it does, it kind of creates a fogginess in your mind, kind of fog, and you go, oh.

And you fall below thought, and that is why, for many people, that's so liberating. They, for once, they experience a kind of freedom. Oh, I can let go, ah, I need a bit more, ah, right.

For some people, it gives them a glimpse of something, it's fine, it's not a permanent solution at all to a human problem, it's not a permanent solution at all, because it takes you below thought. Here, it's rising above thought, transcending thought by rising above thought. That is the most fundamental thing in human life, because that's the next step in human evolution, the evolution of consciousness for humanity, which has been trapped in thought, ego, egoic thought, complete identification with thought for thousands of years.

And now we've reached a crisis point where we have created a world that amplifies the dysfunction of the egoic mind through technology and science. Dysfunctions which before were already there, 1,000, 2,000, 5,000 years ago. The technology amplifies the dysfunction, and then there's the possibility of destruction.

So our entire gathering here, the retreat, is only really about one thing. Well, it's not a thing, but that is, discover in yourself this possibility of shifting from being a person to being the awareness. And then you can, in some situations, you may find you're completely the person again.

You might lose the awareness. Eventually, you won't lose it, but you have a person you prefer, especially when you talk to others with your mouth. You can see when people talk how they are in the grip of a mind stream.

They are not talking. Their mind is talking through them. The conditioned mind is talking through them.

They can't stop it. They don't even know they're there. Basically, they are asleep while the mind is talking.

And the talking mind says, I, I, I. And by the way, it's easier to observe this state of being lost in the mind. It's easier to observe it in others than in yourself, by the way.

Because the moment you observe it, you're no longer lost. The moment you know that the light of awareness is suddenly there, that's the light which I believe is in the title of our retreat. This light is a light of consciousness, is a light of awareness.

It's a light that in the mythological account of creation, which is actually quite inspired and quite deep in the beginning of the Bible, the entire thing starts with, creation starts with the words, let there be light. And that is uttered by God. We'll, we may explore what that means later.

This is uttered before God creates even the sun and the stars. So it's more than that. So it points to something else.

Let there be light. That's the very foundation, the light of the consciousness that underlies the phenomenal existence. Phenomenal means consisting of phenomena.

Everything that happens, everything that's manifested are phenomena, they come and go. They're all ripples on the surface of the ocean, as you are and I am, as this physical form and the psychological form.

I'm Oprah Winfrey and you've been listening to Eckhart Tolle, Essential Teachings, the podcast. You can follow these essential teachings on Spotify or wherever you listen to podcasts. If you haven't yet, go to Spotify and follow this podcast.

Join us next week for more enlightened teachings from Eckhart Tolle. Thank you for listening.

Eckhart Tolle The Most Important Thing to Realize Is the Deep I [3c582911-659f-4940-864e-cd0e052d5dde]

The most important thing to realize is the deep eye. In this episode, Eckhart talks about a collective awakening, growing on the planet, even while the majority of people remain spiritually asleep. He explains most of us are completely identified with our thoughts, the constant compulsive stream of thinking that dominates our awareness and creates a very limited identity.

He says beyond thoughts is a more profound and truer self, which Eckhart calls the deep eye. We begin to awaken when we recognize the difference between the two.

You're welcome. Makes me feel a little emotional. I'm finally back in Toronto.

We are starting a little late. And, but of course, you're already practicing presence as you are sitting there, not waiting for me or anything to happen. That's a very simple spiritual practice.

And you might be amazed to discover how often during a normal day, you're waiting for something or someone, even spiritually advanced people like yourselves. Most of you. There are always some who didn't come of their own free will.

Or they couldn't say no to someone who said you need to come to this. And if that's you, then you're in for a wonderful awakening or an excruciatingly boring experience. And whether it's one or the other, depends on something inside you that is not really to do with intellectual understanding or intelligence in the conventional sense of the word, but something else.

There's something in you that could be described almost as a faculty that in many humans is still either undeveloped or dormant, like a seed. It's a faculty that is now awakening in a growing number of humans. But in the majority of the planet's population is still dormant and that's just how it is.

Now, we are going more deeply tonight into this, what that is in you. And if that has awakened already a little bit, that faculty, then you will sense something as you listen to the words. You will sense something within you that recognizes not only what these words point to, because the truth that is within you, which is inseparable from that, what I call right now the faculty, the truth that is within you, needs to be a little bit awakened to be able to hear what I'm saying.

So if you're still totally close to that, then it may be difficult for you to sit here for two hours listening to a man sitting on a chair and with nothing else happening. If you went to a movie, you would expect a lot of action in order to sit through one and a half to two hours. And if it is not enough action, then you fall asleep or you walk out.

But here, just a man talking, sitting on a chair, there needs to be something extraordinarily important. And there needs to be something in you that recognizes that this is extraordinarily important to keep you here. So just, if you are one of those few who came here because you couldn't say no, and after a little while, you just can't stand it anymore, please feel free to get up and leave.

You will not be judged. Because everybody here is spiritually advanced. It is also possible that you may need to go to the bathroom, in which case you could say, I'll be back, I'll be back.

So I just, to start with, I mentioned the fact that it's surprising how much time humans spend waiting for the next thing. They're always looking ahead to the next thing. And that's, if you detect that in yourself, in a normal day, that is already a little shift.

If you detect that, it's an unconscious movement in you. It's a mental movement. Some emotions may be connected with it too.

It's a mind that wants to tell you that there's always the next moment that's more important than this one. That's the implication. It doesn't say that out aloud, but the implied, the mindset that's implicit in that is that the present is of less value than the future or the past.

There are some people who carry a lot of past weight, and especially as you get older, if you get older and the amount of future that you have shrinks, then there's a shift. Instead of looking always to the future, because there may not be that much, then you look to the past. And we all know that, how old people start talking and thinking about the past more and more and more.

And before they reached that stage, they were thinking about the future a lot of the time, missing always something vital. And that vital thing is the present moment, which is just this. So, and that's a kind of awakening when you come to, when your attention moves away from past and future into the present moment.

It's a shift. It's sometimes you may register it almost as if you were waking up from a dream. And that is why in traditionally, in various spiritual traditions, you have the term awakening, spiritual awakening, or the awakening of consciousness.

And this is why the very word Buddha, for example, which is a title, it's not anybody's name, it's a title given to someone 2,500 years ago. The title Buddha means, it has a Sanskrit root, which means the one who is awake. So that's, the Buddha is awake.

Now, normally a person would say, well, what does that mean? I'm awake, obviously, look at me, I'm awake. So it's not, we're not using awake in a conventional sense of the word.

We're using awake in a different sense. You get the first glimpse of this awakening when your attention moves into the present moment. And when your attention moves into the present moment, it sometimes feels to you as if you were stepping out of a dream.

Or now, what kind of a dream? It's a dream of, this dream of thinking. The voice in the head, and the voice is failing right now.

But, we may have to spend the rest of the evening in silence. I have a little book called Stillness Speaks, which I highly recommend, you can, maybe we can distribute copies here and you can start reading. When you, let's say you observe somebody else, it's always easier to observe somebody else.

You can see when they're very much identified with a stream of thinking, that's, I call it the voice in the head. You might have noticed that you also have one. The voice in the head, which is a monologue or sometimes a dialogue.

It comments on what's going on around you or it takes you completely away from what's going on around you and you're thinking about the past. What happened yesterday? What you could have said when you met this unpleasant person, but you failed to say it.

And then you can replay the scenario in your head and you have a very satisfying experience. And then the next thing comes up and then you're in there. And when you observe many people, they live in a kind of, the intention is here, they're not really, they're only present enough not to stumble, bump into furniture or they have, they're vaguely aware of where they are going and so on.

But 80 to 90% of their attention is in the stream of thinking. And so they go through it. And some people spend the whole day, the whole, all their waking hours in the state of complete identification with that inner voice.

And that is the state of, in spiritual terms, we call that unconscious. Unconscious has a different meaning when we use it with reference to the spiritual rather than conventional meaning. The conventional meaning of unconscious is obviously you're knocked out.

So when you tell somebody, you are unconscious, you say, what are you talking about? Of course, the thing that's saying, what are you talking about is the voice in the head that now is actually speaking out loud through that person. And there may be an angry reaction perhaps because the voice in the head is often accompanied by certain emotions.

And the voice in the head says, what is that rubbish you're talking about? I'm not unconscious. You can see I'm completely conscious.

What is this nonsense? Why do you go to this guy, Eckhart Tolle? And that's not a person speaking.

It's the conditioned mind speaking through this human being. But this human being who is actually almost completely asleep somewhere in the background doesn't even know that he or she is being possessed by this, we could call it entity, which consists of thought forms that consists of the continuous stream of thinking. And the type of thinking you do is of course conditioned by your past, your personal past and the past of your environmental and cultural past where you grew up, what happened to you.

And so you have certain types of thought that go through your mind. And after a while, these thought become your identity. You do not exist or you rather, you don't know that there is in you.

And that's the faculty I mentioned a little earlier. You don't know then that there is in you a deeper, more profound identity, a more essential identity, a truer identity than the sense of identity or sense of self that is derived from complete identification with this continuous incessant and compulsive stream of thinking. So when you discover that there is in you another dimension of consciousness, that is the beginning of the spiritual awakening, or we could call it the awakening of consciousness.

That is the beginning of you becoming the Buddha or in Christian mysticism, the Christ, the Christ in you, the Christ in you is, or Buddha nature is a term that is sometimes used in certain Buddhist traditions. They say everybody has Buddha nature. Your true nature is the Buddha nature.

And I call that sometimes the deep I, I meaning I, you, I, as opposed to the surface I. And now this is very interesting. I is everybody's favorite word.

Because it's probably the word that's used most frequently in the language. How many times during the day do you say I? And what that refers to, usually it refers to your likes or your dislikes or your whatever feelings, your opinions, your desires, whatever you remember, it refers to the mind made entity, which is the surface I.

So the surface I is the conditioned you. The deep I is something that is not yet awakened in many humans, but is a possibility in all humans. The reason why you are here, most of you, is that this deep I, the unconditioned self, if you want to call it that, which the Buddhists, by the way, call the no self, this unconditioned self is awakening in you.

And it has brought you here in order to deepen the awakening that you already sense that's happening in you. So something that is transcendent to who you are as a person is awakening. It is not totally separate from the person.

And my favorite analogy is to compare it to a ripple on the surface of the ocean. Let's say you are a ripple on the surface of the ocean. It's not a bad analogy because a ripple on the surface of the ocean has a limited lifespan.

It goes, oh, it's gone. Of course, you could give it a name. Then you give it a kind of identity.

Oh, this ripple is called John. Oh, there's John. Oh no, he's dying.

Oh no, he's dead. That was John, he's gone, completely gone. Oh no.

Now, perhaps John never realized that John is a ripple on this vast ocean. Perhaps John was so identified with his ripple identity that he always looked on the surface of the ocean for whatever fulfillment and desires and how to make himself happier. He was always looking on the surface, looking at other ripples, liking some, disliking others.

Disliking more than liking. And other ripples say, come, if you join me, we can be a bigger ripple together. Let's sign a contract.

Now, if John never realized, then he missed something very important. He missed the very essence of his being. He missed his essence identity.

And you are, in a way, that ripple because you exist here as a form identity, undoubtedly. You have a physical form. You have a body.

You might've noticed that people say, I have a body. They don't say, I am a body. Well, in the power of now, there's a little meditation where I suggest that people change it to, I am a body, but because I want them to realize the inner body, which is not the physical body that you see.

So it would be very rare, though, to hear a person say, I am a beautiful body, or I am an overweight body. No, they say, I have. So they know that the body is not who they are.

And that the body is a first stage of form identity. And for many people, it's extremely important that their kind of body is a source of either pride or misery for many people, even young people. The way the body looks and is perceived by yourself and others, it causes a lot of suffering to many people because they are not happy with their body.

It's an important part of their sense of identity. And others are very happy with their body because it happens to look better than others, other bodies, and that can already be a wonderful thing as long as you're young. This form identity of identifying with the body, which is better than other bodies or stronger, that strengthens your identification with the body, which, so the body becomes a source of pride and can become the foundation for your identity.

Even if you're unhappy with the body, it can become a foundation for your identity. It just happens to be an unhappy foundation. So you have either a happy foundation or an unhappy foundation.

And body, of course, you add clothes to your body. So they are very close to the body so that your clothes become an extension of the body. So you can change things a bit there because now you have a choice.

And so the body is first the beginning of this mental image of who you are. It's not really so much the physical body as the mental image of this is in your mind. You experience the body.

And so it's the experience of my body, me, that's me. But that's not the end of your form identity. Your form identity is also your psychological form of who you are, that's me.

This starts with your name as a child. You're given a name that becomes the receptacle for all the other things that you put in that over the years develop into who you are as a person or as a personality. Experiences and memories and stories and achievements, possessions.

Mind, the idea of mind becomes very important even for a little child. Also, we are talking, of course, about the growth of the ego. That, and you cannot stop it.

You cannot stop the growth of the ego in a child. It would be absurd, don't try it, to say to a child that you give the child a car and then another child takes away the car and the child screams and says, this is a terrible, my, it's mine, mine. Terrible suffering arises in the child.

No, you cannot tell the child, no, this is your ego developing. You need to be detached, detached from the car. You need to be as detached as your daddy is detached from his BMW.

Until somebody scratches it. I thought I was detached. So possessions become an important part for many humans because they're incorporated into your form identity.

But of course, if you don't have possessions, then there are many other avenues for your ego to grow and to develop a more enhanced form identity, for example, through achievements or abilities, which are wonderful things, there's nothing wrong with them. You can listen to little children when a child says, I can jump this far. You can't jump.

Look how far I can jump. Can you do that? No, you can't.

The ego grows. I can do something that you can't do. It's a great thing for a child that feels what the ego is growing.

So you can't stop it. My dad has a bigger house than yours. Terrible blow to the other child.

But if the ego in the other child is clever and has already developed certain strategies, the other child will say, well, my dad has a friend who knows somebody who has a house that is four times as big as your dad's. Thus devaluing the other person's ego identification. And this sounds a little weird, but it's done, adults do that kind of thing all the time.

In slightly more subtle ways. And so you see, after a while, you have a personality. You are a person, a personality.

It has its certain likes and dislikes and opinions. And you have a sense of who you are, a sense of identity, which is the most important thing for humans after shelter and sufficient food. The most important thing for humans is to have a sense of identity.

Because the question is, who am I? What am I? And this is for young people who grow up in deprived environments where they don't really have anything.

They feel a great need to identify with something. So they become members of gangs. So you have gang warfare.

So you get a little tattoo or lots of tattoos. And so you're a member of this gang, and then it's completely arbitrary. And then you join another, somebody else joins another gang, and they kill each other.

Now, these are rudimentary manifestations of the ego, but the ego can manifest in many, many different ways. Some people have an enormous identification with their sports team. That becomes part of who you think you are.

Why? I don't know. Because you happen to live in one particular city, so you associate with that particular team.

These are rudimentary egos that are not very subtle egos, but these are rudimentary egos that lead to warfare. The football hooligans in many countries, they fight each other. These are rudimentary manifestations of egoic conscience.

And they love it because that's who they are. That's me. It's great.

It always gives the ego food, fantastic. And so, very interesting to see how much a human being is in the grip, completely possessed by this mind-made, conditioned entity. And this is when they say, I, this is what is speaking through them.

The conditioned entity is speaking through them, But they might not say, I, they might say, we. We, you have a personal aspect of ego. That's either your possessions, your achievements or your failures, all kinds of things that form the narrative of me in your mind.

And you have also the collective aspect of ego. That's the we, when the I becomes a we.

And when the I becomes a we, that's a very satisfying thing for the ego because you identify with a collective, which may be a political party, which may be a religion.

It may be, as I said, a football team, any kind of collective that you identify with, a nation, nationalism. That is very satisfying to the ego. You can become a part of a cult.

We become part of a cult. You get a huge ego inflation. And some nations are like cults, the bit less so now than they used to be.

There was Soviet communism. There was communist China. There's still North Korea, and which is very much like the entire nation becomes a cult.

So every human is in the grip of that. And a significant part of their identity is linked to the collective. And then it looks as if those humans had overcome their ego because within the limited sphere of the collective, they operate beautifully and they help each other.

And they sacrifice, they work for hours without pay, and they do everything. And these become completely egoless. Isn't that wonderful?

In this cult, these people are so egoless. Unfortunately, the cult itself is one gigantic ego. So the personal ego has been relinquished and something else has taken the place of the personal ego, which is the collective ego.

Now, the personal ego is a huge troublemaker. The personal ego causes a lot of suffering, but the collective ego is far worse, potentially. All these, the great atrocities that humans perpetrate upon each other, most of them are perpetrated by people who are identified with the collective ego.

So you have one group fighting the others, which are the enemies, especially if the collective ego needs enemies to define its identity through it, because without the other, you lose your identity, the egoic identity. You need the other who is not us. On a personal level, you need somebody to disagree with.

You love somebody to disagree with you because in that struggle to be right and to make somebody else wrong, the ego grows. If everybody agrees with you, who are you? Everybody shares all your opinions and all your positions.

And everyone says, yes, absolutely. Who are you? Or let's say people identify racially too with their race.

So, and again, you need the other who is not us that sharpens your sense of identity. Again, it's ultimately an illusory sense of identity. So let's just imagine you're very much identified with one political party.

I won't name any. And let's say suddenly the entire country is totally in favor. There's not a single person who is not a member of this political party.

Who are you suddenly? Nobody. Because the other is gone.

So without the other, you cannot define your identity anymore or race. Let's say everybody suddenly is exactly the same skin color. There's no difference.

And if you had been strongly identified with your race and suddenly you wake up on this planet where everybody is exactly the same skin color as yours, who are you? You disappear. You go, oh my God, I'm nobody anymore.

Because the other has gone. The egoic identity needs the otherness of others. It needs to strengthen in their mind the otherness of others in order to enhance their own identity.

And on the personal level, the ego does that with very simple things like easy to overlook. I mentioned that here because these things are obstacles towards the realization of the essence of who you are, the deep I. We'll be going into the deep I.

Don't worry. So, but what stands in the way of the deep I? And that is, these are things, some things are very, very common that apply almost to everybody.

I just mentioned the need to emphasize the otherness of others because that defines who you are more. And that is done, for example, whenever you disagree with somebody, then you strengthen the otherness. When you need to be right in an argument, nobody's more unconscious than somebody who is engaged in being right.

Let me tell you how it is. And you know what's happening to that person. That person is identified with a certain thought or group of thoughts.

Identified means derives, they derive their sense of self from these thoughts. So these thoughts are imbued with self, to use a kind of Buddhist terminology. The thoughts are imbued with a sense of self.

They're not just thoughts. They are thoughts that I'm so identified with that I don't know the difference anymore between who I am and these thoughts that are floating around in my mind. I become those thoughts.

That is the essence of unconsciousness. And that is the essence of ego. And that's an amazing realization.

Every time you are engaged in being right with somebody, it may happen occasionally, you may notice this either extreme defensiveness or aggression. And when you notice that, that's a wonderful thing to notice because what you're noticing is the ego in you. The need to be right is so distinct, it is destructive of many relationships, intimate relationships.

There are many marriages that break down because both partners are completely identified with their mental positions. And then they're fighting. One mental position against another mental position.

Then they don't have no idea what's happening. So engaged in being right, which means somebody else needs to be wrong. And for many people to be right becomes more important than the truth.

So you would even start to lie, not you, but some. You would even start to lie in order to continue to be right. That's an amazing thing to discover in yourself.

It's the emotion that comes in when you're discussing something. Now, does that mean you let go completely and you say, okay, you're right. I have no opinion.

I'm so spiritual. I have no position anymore. Eckhart said, it's all ego.

You won't be able to do that. No, there continue to be mental positions. You continue to have, of course, certain viewpoints and certain opinions.

This part of who you are as this form identity. But you're no longer totally identified. You can total shift in a discussion, for example, when two people are not identified with their mental positions, they can put forward, this is how I see it.

And that, and that, and that. How do you see it? Complete opposite.

That, that, that. Okay. So whether or not something comes of it, perhaps out of the opposing positions, some new synthesis arises.

If you're truly able to listen to the other, perhaps you both come to a new realization that perhaps each person has a little bit of the truth, but no person has the whole truth. That would be an amazing thing. That would be part of humans living more consciously instead of needing somebody to be wrong in order to be right.

So that's already one important thing that can happen as you become more conscious. But this little thing, while you're engaged in a discussion, needing the other to be wrong because you need to be right to strengthen your sense of self. The moment you notice this energy behind the need to be right, then that is the ego in you.

But the fact that you notice it means you're no longer totally in the grip of it. Now, where does that come from? This, the ability to notice the ego in you when it appears, what that is, that is the awakening of the unconditioned consciousness that we could call awareness.

We could call presence. That is something that arises from the depth of you that is not part of the stream of thinking. That is the ocean becoming aware of the ripple and then the ripple becoming aware of the ocean.

There's an arising awareness in you that that's not who you are. And that's an amazing liberation because people who need to be right, they are like trapped in their own minds in a very limited sense of identity. Another one that's very common, I'll just mention it because it appears so often in human beings that prevents you from realizing the transcendent dimension to who you are, which is the most important thing in your entire life is to realize this deep eye, the transcendent dimension to who you are.

And so another obstacle that is very common is certain tendency, automatic kind of thinking, compulsive and automatic types of thought. A very frequent one is, I call it complaining. Complaining is, it starts even with a little thing like you're waiting here and it's 10 past seven and I haven't arrived yet.

There's a certain thoughts go through your head. Why can't he be on time? Why is he keeping us waiting here?

Keeping me waiting, me. Even there, you could already have a narrative arising in your mind that says, it's not just that he hasn't arrived yet, that's a simple fact. But you could have a spin a narrative around it and the narrative says, why can't he have the decency of being on time?

So you haven't got a huge thing already built up in your mind. And you don't know what you're doing it. Forgive them for they know not what they do.

And once you start with a thought like that, why can't he have the decency that will lead to another similar thought? And before you know it, you are trapped in an antagonistic attitude towards this person who is keeping you waiting. Keeping me waiting, me.

And then that can color the entire interaction of when this person finally arrives, this unhappy, luckless person finally arrives. And then the assassin doesn't know that you've already created a huge mental phantom of who that person is. And then you're no longer meeting that person, you're meeting your mental phantom.

So you're still, yes, you see this human being, but there's a huge veil between you and him. And that veil is the mental phantom that you have created. It's a narrative.

And that narrative provided food for your ego. That narrative emphasized the otherness of the other and the ego loves it. And then once you've done that, then you go home and then you pick up the phone and then you tell the story of what happened to somebody else.

And it blows up, it goes even more. And then the other person, oh, that's nothing. You know what happened to me?

Now, there's always an element of the need to be superior that's concealed, but the need for superiority is always part of these egoic strategies. So even when you're pronouncing judgment, you're creating these strange narratives about assumed motivations and all kinds of things about this other person. There's always, there's something in the background and that is the, my thought has suddenly stopped.

There's something in the, thought stopping is a wonderful thing, by the way. We'll come to that. I'm going to stop all your thoughts.

So there's always, there's something in the background which is the need to be superior that's concealed. You might not even always see it very clearly that it contains a need to be superior because whenever you pronounce judgment upon somebody through a narrative, it implies that you are superior because you are pronouncing judgment about this person. This is how, it is an implication of superiority.

The need to be right is an enormous need to be superior to the other because if you are right, you elevate yourself to superior position, obviously by implication. Related to that, another very common ego strategy is complaining, complaining about all kinds of things, all kinds of things. Other people, that's a favorite one.

What they, that's related to what I just said earlier, but what other people did, but should not have done, failed to do or any kind of, any judgment, they should have done this, but they didn't do it. They failed to do that. If you're complaining about other people, complaining about situations you find yourself in, complaining about what you're doing, but you're doing it, but while you're doing it, you're complaining about doing it.

Very unconscious. In other words, it's a terrible way to live. If you are engaged in an activity and mentally you're complaining about being engaged in this activity, it's a terrible mental, emotional dysfunction, but it's not recognized as such.

And it provides food for the ego. So be very careful that whenever you are doing something that there's not in the background, a complaining entity that doesn't really want to be doing this. Why do I have to do this?

Well, it's always me is doing. And so you can, the ego grows in that. And even then there's an element of superiority because you're superior towards what you're doing.

When you complain about a situation, a place where you are, there's something wrong here. You've just, wherever, there's something not right. Immediately there's an element of superiority because you can pronounce judgment about something.

Oh, suddenly if you're isn't elevated yourself. And complaining is a very common thing. And even some of you may still occasionally, mentally complain about your life.

Oh, not just other people. You can complain about your life. That's even better.

You can go on for hours, days, weeks, and years. And in your mind have developed a complaining voice about how effed up your life really is. And the ego loves even that.

Because you become the judge and it's awful. And you have an enemy. And for some people, the enemy is weirdly, very weird, weird.

The enemy is what they call my life. They're so unhappy with it that my life becomes their enemy. I hate my life.

And I know exactly who to blame for my life. It started when I was born. That's why it's so.

That's why it all started going wrong. And of course, obviously everybody has had their share of suffering. There's no human being who has not had their share of suffering of various kinds.

I don't know if it's news to you that you are not the only one who is suffering. But this might be difficult to believe because especially if you only relate to other people or predominantly you're young and you predominantly relate to others, not in person, but through Facebook, then you will find it difficult to believe that they are also suffering. Because on Facebook, it shows they are not suffering at all because they're very happy.

Everybody's happy except me. And that means you need to polish your Facebook page too. And so you go to a restaurant and then you take a photo of your food.

So you strengthen the image, the mental image of you and you project it out into the world. You couldn't do that before this miraculous technology happened. You had to project a mental image in your mind only and maybe a little bit in your immediate surroundings.

But now you have a polished, you've polished this mental image of who you are and you sent it out into the world. Great progress. Selfies are helpful too.

You're no longer just yourself and you begin to have a relationship with yourself. This is the mind-made image of me, the narrative of me. And you would be surprised or maybe not surprised how many people have a very complicated, uneasy and even very unpleasant relationship with themselves.

And there's a self-talk often in the head in many, many people that is so self-critical and negative if you lived with somebody who voiced those thoughts that your mind is creating on a daily basis, you would have left this person a long time ago. Just, it's intolerable. I don't want to be with this negative person that's telling me all that stuff.

I'm leaving, goodbye. But you can't do it with their side. You can go to another continent and your mind goes with you.

Amazing. So be careful with complaining unless there's something that can be changed.

Then say, please take some action.

There's something wrong here. The toilet won't flush. Action is needed.

I'm not talking about that kind of complaining, but the useless complaining that only serves the ego. And whether you do it in your mind only or out aloud doesn't matter. It's the same kind of pattern.

So if you catch yourself in any situation saying how bad this is, this should be different. Whenever you're waiting somewhere, the complaining means you're not present, but you're waiting. If you were waiting for something without complaining whatsoever, you wouldn't be waiting anymore.

You would just be present. So waiting means this moment isn't as good as it should be. It implies that some next moment is going to be better and you want to be there already.

So very interesting about how complaining, how waiting arises. And if you observe yourself when the arising of any negative state in you, any form of unhappiness, which is a generic term, which I use for all unhappiness, could be anything from mild irritation to extreme anger or extreme sadness. There's a whole range of unhappiness that you can experience.

And as a spiritual practice, one of the best spiritual practices is to observe in you, in any given situation, the arising of any form of unhappiness and see where it comes from. Where does this come from? And you need to be, there needs to be some awareness in you so that I feel unhappy.

I'm standing in line at the supermarket and I'm beginning to feel unhappy. Why? I'm beginning to feel unhappy because these people are so inefficient.

And this woman, I mean, this woman is talking to this client when she should be going through there. And why is she, does she want to cash in those vouchers? Why?

Why has she got 50 vouchers and keeping everybody waiting? Doesn't she have any decency and people? And you're beginning to feel very unhappy.

And finally, when you get your, I'm not, I'm not coming back here. I can tell you that. And then you leave and another 30 minutes, you're in.

This is unhappiness, but it's not recognized when you're totally unconscious. You love it when you're totally unconscious. The ego loves it.

The body doesn't, because the body doesn't, gets affected by any negative state. It disrupts the otherwise harmonious functioning of the body, the heartbeat, the circulation of blood, all kinds of functions. Now, if you were, if you could wake up in the moment of the arising of unhappiness, you could say, oh, okay, I'm feeling, beginning to feel very irritated here.

Why? Well, the first thing the mind would say is, well, because these people are so inefficient. But that's not the call.

That is not what's making you unhappy. What's making you unhappy is the narrative that these people are so inefficient and which is thought movement in your mind that interprets the situation in a particular way. It's a narrative that your mind creates unconsciously.

This narrative produces emotion, and that emotion is unhappiness. Then you can experiment. How would I experience this situation if I did not add any narrative to it?

My mind. You've got plenty of time because the lineup is moving so slowly. So you might as well experiment.

So experiment, how would I experience this situation without adding the unnecessary baggage of narrative or storytelling to it? Okay, let's experiment. And there you stand.

You've just let go of the baggage. And suddenly you realize the irritation is gone. This moment is as it is.

You haven't added anything to it. A huge weight was lifted off your shoulders. You have not created unhappiness or suffering out of this situation.

Isn't that amazing? And then you go into another situation that will be very similar. And you say, how does it, where does the unhappiness arise?

Is it in the situation or is it in the voice that's telling me that there's something wrong with this situation, which is the present moment always. So the voice that argues with what is, is part of the conditioned mind, is part of the ego. And then you come to a point, awareness grows, and you're no longer totally in the grip of this unconscious mind movement.

And then increasingly, you become free in situations that before would have produced enormous amount of unhappiness of whatever kind, you become free and you can face situations in that state of absolute clarity. This is what is. Because it already is.

What is the point of arguing with the is-ness of the present moment? It is. Of course, some situations require you to take action.

Yes. And then you look at the situation and there's a moment. Now, this is probably the most important part of all this.

There's a moment where you look at a situation, you face a situation, not through thought, but through awareness or presence, which means you are able to look at it.

Look, not necessarily visually, but it might also include visual perception of whatever the situation is. But looking in a wider sense, this means you give it attention.

And this attention is awareness. And in that awareness that enables you to be with a situation and look at it, thought, thinking, has subsided. But you have not become unconscious in the conventional sense.

Thinking has not subsided because you have deadened yourself to thinking and you've had six whiskeys. This is not why thinking has subsided. That's not the way to go.

You're falling below thought. We don't want to fall below thought. We've been there.

We spent 2 million years below thought. That's fine. We've come out of that.

The ability to think arose with a credible, wonderful evolutionary development. But of course there was a price to pay and had a huge downside. With like everything in this world of polarities.

So thinking was a wonderful thing until over thousands of years, thinking took you over so completely that you no longer realized the essence of who you are that far transcends thinking. That is the big downside of thinking. And now we don't need to abandon thinking.

That would be absurd. But we need to be able to think instead of being at the mercy of our thinking, which is unconsciousness. People say, I think, but in most cases, unless they are awakening or awakened, it's not really true.

They don't think. I think implies that there's some volition, that you are doing something, but it's as untrue as to say, I'm beating my heart. You can't, you're not doing it.

It happens to you. And to most people, they are not thinking. Their thinking happens to them.

They are being thought. They are not thinking. And they are so identified with the thoughts that they are trapped in the movement of thought.

And that's the ego and that's unconsciousness. So when you have developed the ability, this awakening is, you realize that there is another dimension in you that is not thought and that is vaster than thought. It's not so much that he has thought and he has not thought.

It's more like he has thought on the surface. This is why I use the ripple analogy. He has thought on the surface and he has a vastness underneath it that is consciousness.

So there's a difference between consciousness, awareness, and thought. Thought arises out of awareness, but awareness or consciousness is much vaster than thought. And so if you can meet any situation or any human being with the ability to look without immediately going into thought, that means you're awakening.

And also means you're beginning to transcend who you are as a person or a personality. It doesn't mean it disappears completely, but you are beginning to transcend it. This is why I sometimes call that the transcendent dimension to who you are or the transcendent dimension of consciousness.

And when I say the transcendent dimension of consciousness sounds like a deeply philosophical and abstract concept, but it's not at all because it begins with a simple thing like standing in the lineup at the supermarket or not add unnecessary baggage to that situation. So now we have the transcendent dimension of consciousness is no longer some mental abstraction that belongs in the realm of philosophy. No, it's something very vital and practical and immediate and can be realized within yourself in any situation at any given moment.

So the transcendent dimension of consciousness is when there's a cessation of compulsive thinking and a little gap of no thinking. In that little gap of no thinking, you haven't fallen below thinking, you've risen above thinking. And that is the next evolutionary step for humanity is to rise above thinking.

And once you have risen above thinking, then you know that that dimension exists in you. Of course, then yes, you come back into thinking. Then you fluctuate between moments of stepping out of thought like now and thinking again.

So at first you have the little compartment of no thought, but it doesn't stay like that. It becomes incorporated more into your life where you're able to frequently step back from thought and then use thought again. Step back from thought into awareness and use thought again.

You're no longer used by thought, you are now using thought. And then dysfunctional thoughts tend to dissolve after a while when you recognize them as really very dysfunctional. So dysfunctional states, when you recognize them as dysfunctional, you don't want them anymore.

And then they tend to dissolve. You don't even need to do anything. And then your thinking becomes more powerful and focused.

Eckhart Tolle The Next Stage of Human Evolution [379ca02d-f98f-49ba-970d-adb201499346]

The next stage of human evolution. In this episode, Eckhart talks to a live audience. He says most of us are going through a transition in consciousness, which he calls awakening.

He sees that as the next stage of human evolution. There have been rare periods in history when collective awareness made great leaps forward. Eckhart sees a similar shift happening now.

He says we must continue with our practice, release our inner turmoil and align ourselves with the inevitable now.

So it's good to be back here. We'll be spending the evening together, it seems, unless you can't stand it anymore and you run away. So you are here because most of you are going through a transition in your consciousness, where a new dimension of consciousness emerges in you.

And that's sometimes called awakening or spiritual awakening. And it is, as I see it, the next stage in human evolution, because human beings are not finished yet. God hasn't quite finished with them yet, because if humans were already finished as a species, that would be tragic, because they are obviously a work in progress.

That's a charitable way of looking at humans. Maybe they are at an adolescent stage, and now we're going into adulthood. There are many ways of looking at it, but there is undoubtedly something new emerging.

And at the same time, the old, I sometimes call it the old consciousness, the egoic consciousness that has created what we know as human history, which is a history of, to a large extent, of insanity. The old consciousness continues, even intensifies. At the same time, the new consciousness is arising in a certain number of humans, more than ever before.

And so you are all here because that is emerging in you. One could almost say it's a faculty that in most humans still lies dormant. And this faculty, in some, begins to sprout and emerge.

And this is what the ancient teachers, of course, have already pointed to. There have been few rare periods in human history when a huge step forward happened in collective consciousness. One, for example, was about 500 years BC at a time when the Buddha lived.

So that's 2,500 years ago. At the time, the Buddha lived at that time and taught. The ancient Greek philosophers were teaching at that time, including the pre-Socratic philosophers.

Lao Tse, the author of the Chinese Tao Te Ching, Confucius, Zoroaster in Persia. So we are at a similar period now where a shift is happening in the collective consciousness. And it often coincides with a critical situation in the collective.

And this is happening again now. So that's all fine. And as I just said, you're all here, not all, most, because something new is emerging.

And if it is not emerging in you, it will not be pleasant for you to be here for these two hours or so that we are going to spend together. You will become restless and you will feel either extremely bored or you will feel the need to leave here or to shout something out that nobody wants to listen to. And it could be in the case of some of you that somebody dragged you here.

You didn't really want to come. But your spouse or friend said, you really need to listen to this guy. And then you sit here and you go, what the hell is he talking about?

So this works on two levels. I will be speaking for two hours or so. That's the conceptual level.

And at that level, mostly what the words point to is something that is beyond words. And if that's something from within you responds, and you can sense that as a sense of intensified aliveness, or one could simply say, you enjoy being here and you can feel that there is a deepening happening in you. Because the whole purpose of us being here together is to deepen something and to intensify something that's already happening in you.

And what is that? That is the disidentification from the stream of thinking. And that is one way of looking at the awakening that's happening.

And that's very interesting. As you might have noticed, most of the time there is a voice in your head that comments and has opinions and viewpoints and interpretations about what's going on in your life. I call that the voice in the head.

For most humans, that is completely involuntary. They don't even know that they have a voice in the head that never stops talking. Most of the time, silently in your head.

At other times, it may even shout something out. So it wants to be heard. And so if you walk in the street, you will find most people look fairly sane.

They're not talking to themselves, it seems, because they're not talking out aloud. But if you listened into everybody's head, you would be amazed of how noisy the inside of every human is. It's like a radio, you know, these radio stations where the people talk in an excited voice.

They go on and on. If you go to a foreign country and you don't know what they're talking about, you might think this must be extremely important. But if you can understand what they're saying, you realize it's completely meaningless.

It's just noise. So a significant part of what happens in your mind, the larger part, is actually just superfluous noise. Thinking is a wonderful ability, a wonderful tool.

If used rightly, it is an instrument that causes dysfunction and misery for millions on the planet, unhappiness for millions on the planet, if thinking is not used, but if you are used by thought. So when humans say, I think, in most cases, that's actually not true, because they have no control over their thinking. It's a compulsive and involuntary.

And they are so identified with the thought processes, they don't even know that they are in the grip of their thought processes, because they are so identified, they become their thought processes. So whatever comes into your head, you completely believe in it. When I was struggling to survive on a physical plane, I often ate baked beans on toast.

I was living in England. There's a little bit of relevance here, too. And that could have been a very unhappy period in my life, not being able what to live on the next day or the day after.

I was already in my 30s. And so my mental commentary, the involuntary thought processes, would normally have said, you're a complete failure. You can't afford the rent.

You don't know. You have no income. You've made a mess out of your life.

And this is what I'm reduced to. Baked beans on toast. Look at your contemporaries that are driving around in their BMWs.

They've got all that. And so this is what life has done to me, or what I have done to mess up my life. I could have had many kinds of narratives accompanying what was happening in the present moment that would have created unhappiness.

And I wouldn't even have known it. And this happens, just a small example of how a narrative that you have, that accompanies something that you are doing, causes unhappiness. And you can do the same thing without the narrative, and you're free of unhappiness.

You're eating baked beans on toast, and actually it doesn't taste that bad at all. And it's useful, and it is nourishing. And you don't even have to say that.

You can simply enjoy the sensory perceptions associated with that, without building a sense of self around it. The sense of self that you build around it arises through involuntary and compulsive thinking. Me.

And the Buddha was already talking about that. So, and this, I'm saying this now in case you need to leave early or want to go across the street. If you only take this away from this evening, but hopefully there will be much more.

If you only take this away, if you look at whenever you feel unhappiness, this is a generic term, unhappiness in whatever form. Unhappiness can arise as irritation, can arise as anger, can arise as even boredom, is a form of unhappiness. Sadness, all kinds of states that they don't feel pleasant, unhappiness.

And usually they are attributed to a life situation, something that's going on in your life. So for example, waiting at the airline counter, and of course how often things don't go well there. Let's hope they don't drag you out of the plane, but that could, that could happen too.

Whenever you feel irritation arising, anger arising, upset in whatever form, ask yourself, is this caused by the situation or is it caused by what my mind is telling me about the situation? And in 95% of cases, you will find that the mental commentary, that argues and complains about something that's going on, but should not be going on, but it is, but shouldn't be. And the gap between what is and what the mind says should be, or should not be, that gap is the arising of unhappiness and misery.

Or as the Buddha called suffering. It arises in the gap between the isness of things in this moment, and the arguing with the isness of things in this moment, imposing a narrative on it that says, no, this should not be. I'm not talking about situations where you can take action to change it.

There are certain situations where action is possible and necessary. That's fine. But even if action is possible and necessary at this very moment, it still is as it is, then you can take action.

But this moment is as it is. So when you allow this moment to be as it is, because you recognize the inevitability of is, this seems so obvious, but it's not obvious to most humans, the inevitability of what is already the case now. And if you can internally align yourself with this inevitable now, the next moment is a different thing.

But when the next moment comes, it's now, of course. There is no next moment except as a thought in the head. Where is the future?

You've never experienced it. You can't. Impossible.

And yet humans think about it more than the present moment. They want to get to the future because they don't want what is. They believe some kind of liberation or fulfillment will come next, always missing the essence of things.

So if unhappiness arises, examine, does it come, is it caused by the situation I'm in or is it caused by how my mind is interpreting the situation? And in most cases you will find it's the mind interpretation that causes the unhappiness. The body reacts to that.

It is a narrative that you carry with you. And the interesting thing is many humans carry a very heavy burden of negative narrative concerning what they call my life. My life is so problematic.

There is so much going on and so many things happen that should never have happened. I never expected them to happen when I was 18. It wasn't supposed to go like that.

But it did and that's my life. It's so problematic. Let me tell you about it.

Now the strange thing is there is no human life, although you might not believe this when you read glossy magazines that have pictures of celebrities or even when you walk around the street, but you can't look into people's heads. They all seem quite sane and they might even seem happy. But if you could look inside you would see there's a lot of turmoil going on.

There's a great deal of unhappiness and suffering going on in humans. And a huge amount of suffering is caused by what I call my problematic life and situations that I find myself in that are connected with my relationships. Relationships?

Huge source of suffering. Because humans are so difficult to live with. And that's why the French philosopher Jean-Paul Sartre said hell is other people.

So a lot of the problematic life situation that you encounter and find yourself in is caused by other humans. And often it is caused by precisely those humans who three years ago caused you intense happiness. That's called the wedding.

And three, four years later the same human that made you happy now makes you unhappy. Strange. It seems to be a fairly common pattern and even if there's no wedding can still happen.

All you have to do is move in together. Humans are faced with obviously I'm not denying that to be a human being is not easy. Even to be another life form is not easy.

But human being is even more difficult because we have a mind. But for every life form on the planet life is experienced as challenging. And every life form encounters from the moment it is born its own set of challenges to survival.

Every life form. And humans also the challenges are never ending to being. You might have you still might think you will arrive at a point in your life where suddenly you can relax and say now I have sorted everything out.

I've sorted out my professional life. My work situation is going great. I've sorted out my relationships.

They're also wonderful. I've sorted out my financial situation. I'm doing fine.

I've got the investments. It's all there. You've sorted out your life, your living situation, the house where you are and you've got the vacations and you are recognized by others as very important person.

And you are loved by others and it's it must be possible. Well, it could happen for short a period of time. And if you happen to be in a situation right now where everything works together in the way I just described you may have to wait a little and see what happens.

Now humans believe that there is something wrong with life when they're being challenged, when problems arise and they will arise in the area of health, in the area of finances, in the area of work, in the area of relationships or living situation. Broadly speaking, those are it and you can see by where your main problems are at this moment. And so every life form is challenged and every life form, this is the truth of why every life form is challenged by life.

This is how they evolve. Every life form only evolves by encountering obstacles and by encountering obstacles that calls forth new power, new energy, more consciousness in order to overcome or transcend the obstacles that arise on your path. So it seems almost that life is maliciously putting obstacles in your path.

You can sometimes overcome them and at other times they stop you completely and then you have to go somewhere else. But every human experience is that life is not always helpful. At times it is, but everything is impermanent.

Every situation you find yourself in is impermanent as the Buddha always pointed out. So sooner or later it changes. So even a situation that makes you happy now can make you unhappy a little later or loses the capacity of making you happy.

So if we see a fundamental truth of life, which is it seems that the world is not designed to make us happy, the world is designed for something else. The world is not designed to produce comfort zones for everybody. Although it's nice to occasionally have comfort zones.

It's lovely when they appear, knowing that they may not last, but of course enjoy your comfort zones when they are there, but know that your comfort zone is not where your awakening happens. It is unlikely that your comfort zone is where you will find more intense consciousness. The comfort zone is lovely as a rest, but where humans evolve, it's when the life takes you out of your comfort zone and challenges you.

And that's when you lose something, you fail at something. So-called failure is from a spiritual viewpoint much more conducive to spiritual realization than so-called success. And this is why there's an ancient saying, I believe it comes from Sufism, but I'm not sure.

When the spirit weeps, when the ego weeps for what it has lost, the spirit rejoices for what it has found. And that is, many of you can verify in your own life if you had not experienced those seemingly negative events in your life, you probably would not even be here. You would be in the crown temple.

And getting very excited about it. So, and once you, the delusion that life is here to make you comfortable, that expectation, you can drop that. And then you can actually approach life in a different way, knowing that life is meant to be challenging.

And then once you know that, then you also realize that the challenges arise in the present moment. It's where everything arises, in the present moment. And then you can find a different relationship with the present moment that is no longer antagonistic, as most, many, many humans still live in a relationship with the present moment that is not good.

Because most of the time they don't want to be in it. So they mentally project themselves out of it always. This isn't what I want.

I want that. Let me just get there. Whether that is a minute from now, or tomorrow, or in 10 years time, or whenever I find what I think will make me happy, it doesn't matter.

But it's away from now. So you deny the present moment. Let's say if the present moment were a human being, you would be always living with someone you don't want to live with.

Why am I stuck with this person? Now you may have actually experienced that too. That's another matter.

But I'm using it as an analogy now. If the present moment, and you cannot get away from it. So there's no way you can divorce this person.

There's no way you can even leave this person. If the present moment is a person, in this analogy. Now imagine having to live with this person, and just can't stand him or her.

So you have to mentally always project yourself away from thinking, oh there, I need to get to that other person. But that other person doesn't actually exist except in your mind. Because when that other, we're still using an analogy.

When that other person comes, it's the same person again. That's a nightmare. So these people have a dysfunctional relationship with the present moment.

And to have a dysfunctional relationship with the present moment has enormous repercussions. Because if you have a dysfunctional relationship with the moment, then in some way you have a dysfunctional relationship with the present moment. With virtually everybody you meet.

Very soon, sometimes it's fine at the beginning, but very quickly. Again, it turns dysfunctional. Places you go to.

Situations you encounter. Very quickly you find something that's not right. That shouldn't be.

So a very foundation for enlightened living. Is asking yourself, what is my relationship with this moment? And this becomes of extreme importance if you realize something that seems on the one hand obvious, but on the other hand almost paradoxical or hard to understand.

If you realize that all there ever is in your life is this moment. Everything unfolds in the now. There is never a moment that's not now.

There is only this moment. It's always now. Isn't that strange?

But people live as if the now were not a desirable place. Some other now is the desirable place, but no other now exists. Except this one.

So this is an enormous realization and awakening that all you have in your life, and this is why it's so precious, and of such vital importance, all you ever have is this moment. So you might as well have a good relationship with this moment. You might as well become friendly with this moment, because after all, that's all there ever is.

And if your mind pattern is one of antagonism towards the present moment, denial, antagonism, then your entire life, you miss the whole thing. You basically miss your entire life, because even when you're 75, 80, 85, you're still, in some way, you've waited to start living. And it was always going to happen any moment now.

It was always going to happen. And the last thing that you wanted, you're looking towards retirement. That was the big thing that was going to come.

So your whole working life, you stared at the clock in the office, reaching, when is it, five o'clock? Or whatever, in whatever way you denied the present moment. And then retirement comes, and then your first day of your retirement, you sit in the chair, and now what?

And very soon, where's your identity? You don't have the, other people don't tell you anymore who you are. The function that you had is gone.

There's nothing left. What am I going to do with myself? And that's the reason why, actually, many people die soon after they retire, because life has become totally purposeless.

So, present moment, make the present, as I put it, make the present moment your friend. Not your enemy. So, one way in which the present moment is denied, is you reduce it always to a means to an end.

Which means you're always on your way. Away. So, I just need to get this out of the way, because I want to get there.

And you do it even with small things, like preparing a cup of coffee or tea. You just go walking from here to there. How much time do you spend moving the body, either by walking or by driving or by sitting on a bus?

How much time of your life do you spend moving your body from point A to point B? And what is your state of consciousness while you're moving your body from point A to point B? Are you present with every step and enjoying the aliveness of this moment, while you run towards the bus, or while you run from one end of your room to the other?

Or are you so mentally fixated on where you need to get to, that the intervening period is stressful? Stress is the disease that in our civilization most people suffer from. And it is a dysfunctional relationship with the present moment.

It is a movement away. You would rather be somewhere else. You would rather already have finished what you're doing.

And that mental projection away from now causes what we call stress. You are actually mentally ahead in the so-called future, which doesn't even exist. And you're being pulled towards it.

And that pull is painful. And that is stress, which is conventionally called stress these days. And you can look in families, how families live with their children.

There's always this never giving full attention to the child. You're always telling the child, have you done this? Now go and do this.

And you call it responsible parenting. Have you brushed your teeth? No.

Have you done your homework? Do good. Go and now do this.

Now do that. There's always, we need to do, do, do, do, do. What do I need to do now?

I need to think. And so you don't realize that there needs to be a balance in your life between doing and being. The being is totally forgotten in our civilization.

It's been just for most humans completely, they don't even know what being is. Now being does not mean that necessarily you stop doing completely. Although as you first experience being, it might be associated with meditation.

It might be associated with sitting still for a moment. But being and doing can actually coexist together when you're not being mentally pulled away from the present moment. I can move from A to B and walk fast and be present with every step and enjoy the intense energy of moving my body from A to B and I'm in the present moment.

So it doesn't necessarily mean that you become ineffective and extremely slow when you are being, when you are in the present moment. I am perhaps a little slower than most people, I must admit that, but I can move fast if I have to and enjoy it. So the balance between being and doing is extraordinarily important.

Now everybody knows doing. Doing includes thinking. Thinking is where doing happens primarily and then it becomes external doing.

Never being able to to be in this moment and actually say, wow, this is it. This is, this is my life. It's, my life is not the narrative in my head.

The narrative in my head is my life situation, my past and my so-called future. And this narrative in the head for many people is a source of great unhappiness. Because the story of me is not a pleasant one.

And I have to think about it a bit more because maybe I can solve this dilemma of myself. I am a problem to myself. This is how many people experience their lives.

I am a problem that needs to be solved somehow. But it is so multifaceted, this problem that needs to be solved. I don't know how to go about it.

I could seek the help of a psychiatrist who might reveal to me the different, many different layers of unhappiness and the problematic nature of my existence. But people carry this burden around with them, which is an essential part of their personality. Which is the me, which is a story you tell yourself.

It's your whole past, what you have done, what you have failed to do, what you did to other people, what other people did to you, things you identify with that give you your sense of self, your possessions, your achievements, your failures. You can have a positive identification. You can have a negative identification.

It's all thought. Your so-called life is thought structures and what you call my life. Thought structures in your head, stories in your head, and images in your head that you identify with.

So you derive your sense of self. This is so important. You derive your sense of identity from what your mind is telling you about yourself.

That is, for most people who have not awakened, that is where they derive their sense of self from. In other words, they derive their sense of self from the movement of thought. Repetitive thought, yes.

Rarely an original thought. It just goes on and on, year after year. The same thing that, the unsatisfying sense of self that is based on thought.

I call it the mind-made sense of self. This is the source of most people's identity. So it's a mental identity.

It's identification with a narrative in your mind. Certain thoughts, certain pronouncements, certain judgments. And then you come to a conclusion about your life.

And you carry this heavy burden in which you call my life. And this, for many people, it makes them unhappy every day of their lives. When they start thinking about my life, they become unhappy.

This is amazing. They don't know. They don't know what they're doing to themselves.

They don't realize that's not their life at all. They don't realize that that is a narrative that is connected in some way with their past. But it is a narrative that is thought.

It reflected emotions. The emotions reflect the thoughts. So the emotions are not pleasant because the thoughts you're telling you about yourself is my life, which hasn't turned out the way I wanted it to turn out.

And if it has at this moment, maybe next year or in five years time, something will shift and you become unhappy with your life. You need to get out of that identity that is based on a story in your head. So that's why we're here.

I call that your life situation, but it's not your life. Everybody has a life situation. You have a past and you probably have a future.

Probably, you never know. You have a past. You have a future.

Your sense of identity is derived from the past and your failures and successes in the past, whatever the mind interprets as failure and success. It's just an interpretation. It doesn't mean I have failed at everything that I ever did.

It won't be so terrible. Or what life has done to me, my parents, if I had had more conscious parents, everything would have been okay, but they were so unconscious that, of course, I've turned out the way I've turned out. What could I have done?

Or you can argue with God. Why did God give this burden to me? Why did God inflict this upon me?

It's all thought also. So let's see. Is there something else in you?

Is there something else in you that is more vital, more real, more alive than the movement of thought in you? And that is what we could call being, the being of you. And let's just see if we can explore this experientially, more deeply here, because if that becomes the source of your sense of self, then everything shifts.

Then you're no longer an unhappy human being. You're no longer made unhappy by the challenges of life. So, at this moment, let's just go do a little, I don't want to call it meditation.

Let's find that place where you are, but not the historical you. Very simple. Very simple.

Right now, I suggest you forget that you have a history. You don't need to remember, you don't need to remember your past right now, or even your name, or your email address, or your phone number, or anything that has happened to you in the past. What is left of you if you don't mentally revive anything from your past as you sit here?

Okay, let's forget about the past. There's only this moment. Okay.

You don't even have a name. Okay. If you don't even have a name or past, is there still a sense of you? So, what does it mean to sense yourself without your personal history?

So, if you dismiss your personal history, what is left of yourself? And that's a very interesting thing to explore. What is left is undoubtedly a sense of presence.

And in that sense of presence or beingness, you realize I am. You know that. But since you don't remember your past, you don't know what you are, but you know that you are.

And that is a vital thing to realize. The I am-ness in you, which is at this very moment, this I am is perceiving this room. This I am is perceiving auditory perception, my voice, the totality of this room, and whatever else this I am is perceiving at this moment.

Undoubtedly, they are the sense perceptions. And what is it that makes all the sense perceptions possible at this moment? It is the I am.

But what is that? Who am I if I am not my personal history? If I let go of my personal history first for this moment, and I can still sense very clearly and deeply, there is an underlying I am-ness, a beingness, a presence.

Because if there were not this underlying I am-ness, beingness, or presence, there would be nobody here to perceive this room. There would be nobody here to listen to that voice. Would this room still exist?

Who knows? That's a philosophical question. You could see, well, yes, there would still be molecules and atoms floating around here and there, but would there be a room?

No. You create this room, the I am. Its perception creates this room at this moment.

I am. Now, so you're conscious of your sense perceptions right now. The room and the voice, whatever else is there, you're conscious of that.

Okay. That's interesting. You can actually be conscious of sense perceptions without mentally labeling your sense perception.

And that's an amazing thing, and that is part of the awakening, that you no longer compulsively label in your mind everything that you perceive, and call it this or call it that. You can know that this is a room without having a mental concept that says, oh, this is a room that just looks like that and is like that and like that. You can just perceive, in other words, you perceive against a background of stillness in you.

That's the I am. When you remove personal history, when you remove thought, which is personal history, your entire personal history is thought. When you remove thought, it's fine.

You don't worry. You'll remember it again when you need it. But for the moment, you don't need it.

So you remove thought, and when you remove thought, two things are possible. Either you fall asleep, which could happen to you as you sit here, because I'm not a speaker who makes a lot of noise. I don't jump up and down the stage or just, well, I do gesticulate, but you can either fall asleep, which means you're falling below thought.

That's what I call it. Or you can rise above thought and be still, alert, and present. And then you can look around the room.

You're totally awake, but there is a stillness against which you're perceiving whatever it is you're perceiving at this moment. And that's an amazing state. It's a beautiful state to be able to be in that state of presence when there is no interference of thought upon your sense perceptions.

And that is a state of absolute presence. In that state, you are connected with a deeper intelligence that transcends who you are as a person.

Eckhart Tolle The One Transcendent Source Of All Light [b4589bb4-58df-4e1b-8a4e-6a65960dcc66]

The one transcendent source of all light. In this podcast, Eckhart talks with an audience in Paris and he contemplates the mysteries of space and the subatomic world. He says the greatest mystery is that the universe is conscious.

He remarks that science has not yet been able to examine consciousness because it's not an object and it's not generated by the brain. He says science has not yet discovered its source. However, Eckhart says there may come a time when science and spirituality merge.

He explains there's only one consciousness which is beyond space and time and he compares it to the sun which shines rays of light into this dimension. He says we are those rays emanating from the one transcendent source of all light.

The universe is a miraculous and mysterious thing. Outer space, so much we don't know about it and it's vast and unimaginable. Subatomic space, also very, very mysterious realm, very mysterious dimension.

So you have two great mysteries, the smallest and the biggest. But an even greater mystery is that the universe is conscious. That is the greatest mystery and that's not even mentioned by most scientists because they don't know what to do with consciousness.

Where? Where is it? Well, the thing that's looking for it is it.

Okay, so consciousness can never become an object. Consciousness is the eternal subject. This is why science cannot examine consciousness.

So the universe is conscious, but is that true? How do I know that? I know that because I am conscious.

And you know that because you are conscious. But they are not two different consciousnesses. The word in English does not even have a plural.

I don't know if the word in French has a plural. There is one consciousness and this is something that science has not discovered yet. Maybe one day science and spirituality will merge into one.

And what I'm saying now, you don't have to believe it comes from an intuitive realization. Whether or not you believe it doesn't matter very much. It's not the absolute essence of our evening together.

Consciousness pervades the entire universe and consciousness becomes focalized where certain life forms appear. The brain is an instrument through which consciousness expresses itself in a particular form. Undoubtedly, there is a link between the brain and consciousness.

So in the same way that there's a link between the television receiver and what it is that it receives. This is so amazing that it is possible for you to realize your essence identity as the consciousness of the universe. You are a person for a little while.

You are a person here. That's fine. Not for long.

But you transcend something that there's something in you that manifests briefly as a person. Like a ray of sunlight manifesting briefly as this or that person. Let me talk for just one moment about the taboo word.

And that taboo word is God. I say it is a taboo word because I usually try to avoid it because it creates many misunderstandings. But now I'll use it for a moment.

God is the source of all life. Transcendent source. Has no location in space or time.

It transcends this dimension. The best analogy for God perhaps would be to say it's a bit like the sun, which continuously pours out energy and light. Well, we perceive it as light.

And when the ray of sunlight touches your skin, are you touching the sun? Well, no, because if you touch the sun that your hand would disappear immediately. However, the ray of sunlight is still connected to the sun.

It is an extension of the sun. So when Jesus says, you are the light of the world, he refers to the consciousness that you are. And the consciousness that you are is an emanation of the source, the transcendent source of all light in the same way that the light that we perceive from the sun is an emanation of the sun.

And this emanation from the source is you, appears as a person. And it's like a ray of consciousness. And perhaps it appears as another person and another.

The same ray may continue for a while until it fully realizes its identity. You are an emanation of that. And this is not just abstract.

The strange thing is you can sense that in yourself, the moment thinking subsides and presence, I am presence, remains. And there's an absolute stillness there. In that stillness, from the point of view of conceptual self, you don't know anything anymore, because there's no thinking.

There's no conceptual knowing in that stillness. And yet, you are connected with a much vaster and deeper non-conceptual knowing. This connectedness with a source of who you are, that is also the source of wisdom.

Wisdom is not created by analytical thought, is not created by more information. Wisdom arises from the depths of non-conceptual, unconditioned consciousness or intelligence. If you are connected with that, which means sense that space within yourself.

If you're connected with that, then you have access to the source of what is traditionally called wisdom. And not only wisdom, also you have access to the source of all creativity, because the conceptual mind itself cannot create anything new. It can give it form, but it cannot create it.

And to create anything new, or even to have an original insight that suddenly manifests as a thought, even to have that, you need for a moment to be connected with a non-conceptual intelligence within you, which means for a moment, your thinking needs to subside. There needs to be just a little, just a space of aware presence, stillness. You've risen above thinking, there's stillness.

And then out of that stillness, if anything that is needed comes as a realization, an intuition, an interesting or new thought, any form of creativity arises out of that. And not only that, something else that arises out of that dimension of consciousness is a feeling of connectedness with other life forms and other human beings. A feeling of strong connectedness with other human beings, which is particularly important, but you can feel it more easily at first with animals, perhaps, or nature, trees, flowers, plants.

You look at them and you're not thinking, you just perceive them, and then you can perceive their essential beingness. You can, for example, you can look at a flower or a tree for a minute, and you can sense the stillness in which it exists as a living presence. Some trees survive for hundreds of years, even thousands of years.

The trees are so still. And if your mind is still also, and you're looking at a tree, you can sense the essence of that tree in that stillness of the tree. There's a living essence there that is very, very different consciousness from yours, the same consciousness, but a very different manifestation in a completely different vibrational frequency.

And then you connect with this tree as you'd never connected before, because before the tree was a label, and the label covered up the reality of the tree. It covered it up. It said, oh, that's an oak tree, such and such.

That's a label. When you need the label, you have it. But when you don't need it, you put it aside.

That's the art of living. You can use labels when you need them, but don't let life be obscured by mental labels. So you can look at the oak tree, but it's no longer an oak tree.

It's just a beingness there. And the trees, you connect it in that stillness. You connect with a tree and the flower.

And then you look into the eyes of a dog and you love that dog. Not so much the, although it's very pleasant to the touch, but what you really love when you look into the eyes of a dog is the consciousness of the dog. You connect with that.

You can sense there's a being in there that is invisible. Just as most of you is invisible. Wasn't there a French writer who said, Saint-Exupery said, what is essential is invisible to the eye.

Everything that is essential is invisible to the eye. The eye, this eye. You are, most of you are invisible, even on the mental, even still the form identity that you are is already invisible beyond the physical body.

Nobody, if they can open up your brain, they're not going to find a single thought. They don't even know what a thought is. You have a million memories in your brain.

How do they survive in there? In what form do they survive in there? Who was your first teacher at school when you were five or six years old?

There he or she is. Where was this teacher until now, when I remembered? I don't know.

Was it a molecule that said, this is my teacher? We don't know. It's all invisible.

You are invisible. The essence of who you are is consciousness. And the dog, the essence of the dog is invisible.

But that is what you love in the dog, because you recognize it, not conceptually, but experientially, you recognize it as one with your essence. Just a different expression of consciousness, just as you recognize the tree as ultimately one with your essence. There's the oneness in all life forms, an expression of the one.

And then comes the most fascinating thing. You connect with other humans in that way. And that's amazing, because when you connected to the ego with other humans, there was continuous labeling, judgments, evaluation.

Is this human being a threat to me? Or can I use this human being? Or do I want to add this human being to make myself feel better or bigger?

There's always that. And that goes. And from this deepest level of presence, when the mind, the thinking mind subsides for a moment, and then you look at another human being, and suddenly all these, I talked about wisdom arising from that dimension of consciousness.

I talked about creativity arising from that dimension of consciousness. And now talking about empathy arising with other human beings. Now, what does that mean?

It means there is a benevolence, to use that word. It's probably a similar word in French, because it goes back to Latin. There is a benevolence that emanates from you towards the other.

And the other is no longer completely other. And that, when you connect with another human being, and yes, yes, you are aware, perhaps, of their personality that covers up the essence of that human being. And yet, you don't get caught up in the personality.

You can actually look deeper and can sense in another what you share, which is consciousness, the one consciousness. And so ultimately, what that is, is love. Not love in a romantic sense, but love as a realization that ultimately, you are looking at yourself, loving the other as yourself.

So there's a self-recognition. And so one could almost say that ultimately, you only always love yourself, not in an egoic sense. But ultimately, when you love any other life form, it's a recognition of the oneness, but you can only recognize it when you are present and for a moment, free of mental concepts and thoughts.

Then you are the presence. And then you recognize, you can sense the presence in the other who is no longer other. And that's a wonderful thing, because then you go around the world always meeting yourself, ultimately.

And that makes it very pleasant. It is much easier then to tolerate or even overlook the madness that is still there in many human beings, the dysfunctional, egoic behavior. You can very often look through it and realize there is that essence.

Underneath all that, there is the essence, and I can feel the essence of that person. And if you can feel it, sometimes you bring it forth out of the other. So one person can make a lot of difference when you honor the other person by recognizing who they are in their essence, then that has a very healing effect on the other person.

And generally, if you live in connectedness with that dimension, then you truly create a different world and a different reality. So that is, it's really ultimately very simple. And yet, we are shifting from thousands of years of being identified with thinking increasingly more and more and more.

And there's a shift that now happens when we step out of identification with thinking, we're no longer addicted to thinking, because otherwise, when you are a compulsive thinker, you are addicted to thinking. And a most large percentage of that thinking is not only unnecessary, it also creates unhappiness, misery, and suffering. So this is the essence, is stepping out of thinking.

Meditation can help. If you have a meditation method, the way I teach is choosing to be free of thinking. What we are doing now is become aware of the present moment, and already thinking begins to subside.

Become aware of the present moment, then you look around, and you listen, you look, you sense your surroundings. And if you're very alert, thinking subsides. And already the world seems more alive suddenly.

And you perceive beauty everywhere, even in seemingly insignificant things, like how the light is reflected off the floor, which I see here. So that you step out of thinking into the present moment, this moment. The first step is usually become aware of sense perceptions.

Then you become aware of your inner body, that you're alive, the inner body is alive, and you've sensed that aliveness. And then you are, you look around, and you're breathing. And then you become aware of the deeper dimension of the present moment.

The way I put it is the present moment has the surface dimension, which is sense perceptions, and that's good. The present moment has a depth dimension, which is consciousness. The mind becomes still, and that stillness is the essence of the present moment.

It's the light of consciousness. That is the essence. You've gone deeply into the present moment.

And that's something you invite into your life as much as you can, and use your smartphone a little bit less. So instead of uselessly looking at your phone when they're waiting for something, become present. Look around.

Sense that alertness. Become familiar with that. And also catch yourself when spontaneously you experience a moment of just being present.

It could be when you're engaged in some kind of physical activity, especially a dangerous activity, or they don't recommend it. But some people get addicted to dangerous activities, climbing a mountain, racing a car. Why do they get addicted?

Because it frees them from the personality, from the person, from the mind. It forces them into presence. But you don't have to do that.

Just go there. Another thing that does it is life gives you a little shock, a little accident or big accident, some loss. These little shocks can also shock you into presence, and suddenly you go, oh.

So if you need it, life will give it to you. But the more you voluntarily go there into that dimension, the less life will need to give you a shock, because you're already doing it. You're aligning yourself with the entire purpose of the universe, which is consciousness, growing in consciousness in this dimension.

And one could say, to use theistic language, God expressing himself, herself, itself more and more fully in this dimension. The ultimate purpose, who knows? We cannot go there with our mind.

But when the mind stops for a moment and we rise above thinking, we can get some intuition of what the ultimate purpose of the universe is, which is connected with your life purpose here and now. And that's why we can get an intuition of that, but we cannot put it into words or even thoughts. There's a knowing that's completely non-conceptual.

So I've spoken about the most important things in human life, the transformation of consciousness, things that perhaps one day will be the primary subject at every school. It will be the very foundation for every human life. Right now, it's still a relatively small percentage of humans who are ready and are awakening, but it's growing.

Don't let yourself be deceived and think that because the political situation is becoming so chaotic that that means humans are becoming more unconscious. There's an intensification of unconsciousness as there is an intensification of consciousness. The two polarities are there, and it's usually at critical time periods, challenging times, both in the person's life and in the life of the collective.

At challenging times, transformation is more possible than at times when there's little or no challenge. Your comfort zone, I don't know if you know that expression, your comfort zone is not the best place for your spiritual awakening, unfortunately. Sorry about that.

So this is the secret. Well, it has been a kind of secret for a long time, but now it's out in the open, and it's a great adventure to be part of the unfolding consciousness, which transcends whatever purpose you may have on a personal level. Yeah, of course, that continues.

You continue to honor your form identity. It doesn't mean that you're only now totally interested in essence identity. I'm not going to eat much anymore.

I'm not going to have any bath or shower anymore because the body is an illusion. No, that's not. You honor your form identity.

You do your best. You look after the body. You can also honor your form identity on the mental, emotional level, both collective and personal.

You have your parents. You have your ancestors. Maybe if you remember them, you have your family.

You can have your country. You can honor the culture of your country. There's nothing wrong with that.

It's a beautiful thing. But if that's the only thing that gives you your identity, then it becomes a huge limitation, and then you probably need others to be less than, or you might even need others to be enemies. But to be honoring your culture is great.

If you're not attempting to derive your ultimate identity from that, it's a beautiful thing. So honoring form identity, but being rooted in your essence identity. And that is the secret of life.

And with that, I will leave you for tonight. Thank you.

Eckhart Tolle The Paradox of Order and Chaos [2e48580d-98ac-4930-a8d9-ad2d01584d24]

[Speaker 2] (0:01 - 0:28)

Order and chaos. In this podcast, Eckhart talks about the paradox of order and chaos. From the minor disruptions we experience in daily life to bigger events like the loss of income or someone we love, Eckhart says chaos and disorder are an essential part of a higher order.

If we surrender to the present moment, life's challenges will shake us out of our complacency, transforming our consciousness.

Two fundamental opposites in this world, without which the world could not even be, are the opposites of order and disorder. Another word for disorder, when it becomes more extreme, would be chaos. Order and chaos, or order and disorder.

Usually we would prefer, of course, to have order in our lives, which means to have things going well, things growing, we learn things, we experience new things, your life unfolds, we would like relative harmony in our lives, and yet that very often is marred by the eruption of some form of disorder. And usually we resent that. We can get resentful or angry or despondent or sad.

Things in our lives are not going in a way we would want them to go. And so disorder can come in many forms. What I call disorder, although it may not usually be recognized as disorder, a simple thing, whenever the smooth way in which your life unfolds on a daily basis is interrupted by some form of adversity, let's say you lose your wallet, so suddenly something comes in which looks like an act of sabotage against you, and you're thrown into fear or panic or confusion.

Suffering arises, and that's a relatively small thing. You're at a meeting, and suddenly there's a huge disagreement and people shouting at each other before it was going well, and then one person made a comment and everybody reacted, and before you know it, the meeting has degenerated into disorder. It comes in so many forms, small forms, missing an appointment, missing the plane, contracting a small illness or having a small accident.

Disorder comes in many, many forms, big and small, and usually when disorder comes, it creates a kind of havoc sometimes in our lives for a while, and there's definitely the strong underlying belief that there's something very wrong, that this should not be happening, or the underlying belief there's something wrong with me, or somebody's against me, maybe God is against me, otherwise why would this be happening to me?

Slightly bigger forms of disorder, breakdown of a marriage, you lose your job, you lose your home, a more serious illness, something bad happening to somebody very close to you, a child, a spouse, or something connected with a collective pandemic, financial breakdown, civil unrest, hurricanes, earthquakes, and so usually it brings up a very strong reaction.

As I said, the ways in which you can react is through anger, through fear, through panic, becoming sad, despondent, say what's the point of it all, I strived so hard to build up this business and now this has to happen. Now we need to understand that, again, disorder, which earlier we called adversity, is inevitable and is an essential part of a higher order. Normally when we look at order and disorder, we look at order, which things are going as they should, they're going well, we call that that's harmonious.

Disorder is lack of harmony, something comes in, or could even be worse, could be chaos. So we usually look at order as desirable, it's harmony and things going well. Disorder is undesirable, lack of harmony, things going wrong, and that's true on this one level, that's true.

But there is always other levels, you can look at it from a higher perspective, a higher level, the existence of order and disorder, or order and chaos, are a necessary part for the evolution of life. A few examples, I sometimes walk in the forest, and when you walk in the forest, there's the typical smell that you have of this vegetation, but part of what you smell in the forest is actually the soil, especially when it's been raining, you can smell the soil. Now what is the soil?

The soil is mostly decaying matter. The soil is trees that have fallen or other plants that have died, and these plants are returning into the molecular structure of the plants and so on. It's no longer ordered, the atoms are separating, they are dissolving into disorder.

It's no longer structured, it's not orderly, the decaying matter is a manifestation of disorder or chaos. It's death, and yet the death is necessary for the new trees to thrive and to grow. They grow out of the chaos of decaying matter, grows the new order of new plant life and new trees.

You cannot separate them. Every day, when you eat, whatever you eat, you create disorder or chaos to that which you eat. You bite into an apple, the apple has a very orderly molecular structure.

When you bite into an apple and you start chewing it, you destroy the order that created the apple, the molecule that makes it into an apple. You create chaos or disorder, so that's what you do every time you eat. Then the apple goes into the digestive system and things happen to this.

It's now become disorderly, but then your body absorbs the nutrients and this becomes part of the, again, the orderly structure of your body. So the food is destroyed, chaos is created, so that life can be sustained and continue. Interesting way of looking at it.

Many people have found that they experience a deepening and a deeper sense of self or beingness, a deeper peace or some kind of renewal in their lives after, immediately after and as a result of having endured a period of disorder or chaos. That is, I don't know if you're familiar with the spiritual term which comes from Christianity, medieval Christianity, dark night of the soul, dark night of the soul. Christian spiritual teachers and mystics in the Middle Ages, I think they created this expression.

What it means is, before you awaken spiritually, it's before quite a few of those teachers awakened spiritually, they experienced extreme forms of despondency and depression, where everything suddenly became meaningless. So they experienced in their mental chaos, so to speak, often even a mental breakdown. And out of that, and in this mental breakdown, the old self kind of died, experienced a death.

So there was the eruption of disorder, of destruction, the destruction. Then out of that, a deeper realization arose. And so that is, the dark night of the soul is basically the experience of inner chaos or inner disorder.

When things don't make sense anymore, that's a form of disorder on the level of mind. And other people, they experienced some kind of breakdown in their lives. It could have been sometimes two or three things happening, bad things happening at the same time.

At the same time, their marriage collapsed, they lost their job and their income, and then somebody very close to them died at the same time. The eruption of, to use our terminology, the eruption of disorder suddenly came in multiple forms. And when something that you had identified with, that had become part of your life, suddenly dissolves, is taken away, that's what you could call disorder.

I sometimes compare that to a tapestry. And when you have a tapestry, that's your life, the various elements that make up your life, let's say in this analogy, it's like a tapestry. These are the people that you know, your family, your work, your home, all the tapestry of your life.

And suddenly, something is torn out of this tapestry of your life violently. It could have been an accident, could be, as I said, complete financial breakdown, or whatever it may be, end of marriage. And suddenly, it leaves a gaping hole in the tapestry of your life.

And it's yes, basically, yes, certainly is disorder. And yet, often people report that they experience spiritual awakening when holes appeared in the tapestry of their lives. So the tapestry of their lives represents whatever it is that these people identified with and called it my life.

And suddenly, what you called my life, a big chunk of what you called your life is not there anymore. And that can be very painful. But the strange thing is, it's precisely there that many humans experienced a transcendence to remain for a moment with this analogy, the hole that was torn into the tapestry of their lives, this hole pointed to something beyond the forms of life, there was a space behind that hole is an empty space.

And so they suddenly experienced an empty space within where something had been before, let's say, your spouse died, or even worse, your child died, or your mother died father. And suddenly, this weather before there was this presence, it was part of your life, there is an empty space. I mean, when somebody dies, you can look next day, there's a chair, they sat in this every day, they would sit in this chair.

And now the chairs empty, very strange, this emptiness left behind. And at first, it's very painful. But it can be that when you come to a place of acceptance, the emptiness brings about an inner emptiness in you, but not in a negative sense, an emptiness in the sense of spaciousness, where something you become aware of, just the content is gone, this particular content of your consciousness is gone.

And what remains when you remove the content of your consciousness is the consciousness itself without the content. One could also say to use another analogy, the ripple on the surface of the ocean, this particular ripple has dissolved. It's not there anymore.

But what's left is the ocean, the ripple had a particular form. But the ocean has no form. And that's what's left is the formless consciousness.

And that is the realization of the transcendent dimension within you. And that often comes with breakdown, loss, death. In other words, the experience of some form of disorder or chaos.

In other words, again, something that would normally be labeled as bad, or very bad. And that's very strange. So here we have that something that normally would be called good.

And then we have something that's normally called bad. But that which was called good, actually kept you in a relatively confined and limited place. Whereas that which is conventionally called bad, created an opening in you.

This loss created an opening in you. Strange fact is that the good, and usually perhaps when you say, my life is going well, you're in a relative comfort zone in your life, things are going well. And when something so called bad erupts, it then destroys the comfort zone.

But the strange fact is that it almost never happens that people awaken spiritually, while they're in their comfort zone, or that they deepen, become more deeper as human beings, which would be a partial awakening. It almost never happens. So the place where people truly, where the evolutionary shift happens, or the evolutionary step forward, the evolutionary leap, is usually the experience of disorder in a person's life.

But not only in a person's life, we'll see in a minute. And so your life then moves between order and disorder. You have both, and they're both necessary.

And you don't have to look for disorder, because you want to awaken spiritually, and then say, okay, I need to make myself suffer, and I need to give up everything and make myself suffer. Many people have done that in the past, because they could see how it operates. They could see that when somebody suffers, there is a possibility of transcendence and awakening.

Not a guarantee. They may be stuck in their suffering until they die, or they may die off their suffering. There's no guarantee that when disorder erupts, or when you suffer, that this will bring about an awakening, or at least a deepening.

There's always the possibility. It is an opportunity, but often it is not. It is missed.

And then the person becomes even more deeply entrenched in their egoic sense of self. It becomes very rigid. You can see it with some people who have had a bad life, and what's left of them towards the end of their lives is a personality whose main component is a deep sense of bitterness, grievances, and resentments.

Instead of giving them an opening into transcendence, it has made the ego more rigid. That's not uncommon. So you get older people, sometimes even younger people, who already have an important part of their personality is their grievances, their bitterness, and their resentment.

And that colors everything they see and perceive and every relationship. And that's very sad. Nobody has told them, because it's not common knowledge yet, that experiencing suffering can be a great opportunity, and is actually inevitable in everybody's life.

They didn't know. Nobody at school teaches these things, which should be one of the most important subjects at school. There's no guarantee then that it will happen.

It's just an opportunity for it to happen. Sometimes suffering is already a disorder, is already experienced early in a person's life. Some children are born into a very chaotic environment.

There could be violence where they live in their family, between their parents. One parent or both parents could be alcoholics, could be drug addicts. Some children are born into very disordered and chaotic environments, and other children experience great loss at an early age.

Some children experience the loss of one or both of their parents at a very young age, like six, seven, through accidents and so on. That's a huge challenge early in a person's life. Nobody can predict what effect this will have on the child.

Without guidance, it could easily mean that, especially in a child that grows up in a very dysfunctional household with alcoholism, violence, and drug addiction, the chance that this child will, through experiencing this type of chaos or adversity, that this child will grow into a very conscious adult, the chances are relatively small, especially if the child gets no guidance from anybody at all. All that happens there is the perpetuation of the dysfunction, and then the child would then have a relationship and perhaps create a similar environment again. And then the next generation, until perhaps sometimes it happens after a generation of several dysfunctional family backgrounds, finally one human can break this vicious circle and suddenly step out and awaken spiritually and become an enormous power for good in this world.

But this person came out of sometimes generations of suffering and dysfunction. There are children who experience early loss in their lives, through loss of a parent, and some of them become mature at a very early age. That can happen, too.

I've seen that a few times, where children who've already been through that great loss already have access to wisdom. Even at the age of 11 or 12, they say wise things. So it can go either way.

So the important thing is to realize it is inevitable that you will experience both opposites in your life. Usually, it is advisable that you strive for order in your life. It's advisable that you think positively, if you can, that you acknowledge the goodness of life in every moment, that you live in a state of gratitude, because the more you live in a state of acknowledging the good that is here now, the more good will manifest in your life.

It does not mean, however, even if you live like that every day, you will still experience certain forms of disorder erupting into your life, but probably much less so than a person who is very unconscious and whose daily life is fairly negative, with continuous complaining, with harboring grievances, with bouts of anger, with always accusing other people of this or that, always criticizing everything and everybody. There, already, you have a lack of harmony, even in their daily lives.

And often, these people experience a succession of disasters and drama and so on. The periods then for creating something new, there's a new order that you create. When you create something new, you create whatever it may be, a new structure, a new business, and you write a book, you make music, you create some artistic, whatever it may be, you create something new in this world.

That means you bring about a new structure that is an ordered structure into this world. That's all order, and that's good. So the creative periods in your life is when you manifest a new order, an orderly structure, and this is wonderful.

But even if you do, at some point, you will still experience, from time to time, the eruption of disorder in whatever form. Perhaps what you created will still, of course, what you created is still subject to the law of impermanence of all things, so nothing lasts for too long. So whatever you create may not last.

If you get too attached to what you create and you said, I did that, if there's ego in it, then you suffer a lot when things begin to dissolve or leave you. No matter how consciously you live, a certain amount of disorder will occasionally appear. And, of course, we're all moving towards old age and finally death.

Of course, death is the ultimate disorder or chaos for the human being because it's the same as the forest where the trees have fallen and the soil is basically decaying matter. So when you die, that which held the atoms and molecules of the body together in an orderly way, very highly intelligent structure, suddenly is totally disordered. It begins to dissolve.

So on a physical level, we are all moving towards, obviously, disorder. And even when you get old, you begin to get old, you experience the body doesn't function as well anymore. Just athlete, you reach a certain age and suddenly you can't do this anymore, you can't do that anymore.

If you were too identified with the order in your life, if you derived your sense of identity from the order in your life, then you suffer. So you appreciate, you can appreciate the order in your life, the order is going well. You have certain abilities that other people may not have.

That's wonderful. You have achieved perhaps certain things that other people have not achieved, but things that have contributed to enriching people's lives or making people more conscious, all that's wonderful. But if there was a sense of I in whatever you'd created, which means you derived your sense of identity from that which you created, and it's not going to last, all the abilities that you have that others don't have, it's not going to last.

So anything you identify with creates suffering because it will leave you or it'll dissolve or not satisfy you. It's subject to the law of impermanence. In other words, it will go back to disorder.

Everything in this world is subject to impermanence. Everything in this world, including your body, and yet there's something within you that is not subject to impermanence. We'll come to that in a little while.

I just want to mention one more thing to see how order and disorder operates on all levels. We talked about the forest, we talked about when you eat, you create disorder so that a new order can then manifest. On a huge global scale, the planet itself periodically experiences the eruption of extreme disorder or chaos.

This has been found through geology and virtually all scientists agree with those findings. And what they found is in the evolutionary life of our planet, the planet has already experienced five extinctions. Five times in the life of this planet, life became almost extinct.

It was always the borderline of extinction of all life. I believe, if I remember correctly, in the second extinction, which I don't know when it was, 400 million years ago over there, almost 90 percent of all life forms disappeared. The last one they say was 60 million years ago and I believe that was the one the dinosaurs and many other species disappeared fairly quickly, probably created by a meteor impact.

Now that's a great example for disorder. Before you had an orderly planet, harmonious life, suddenly a huge thing comes from outer space and rams into this planet and totally changes everything. The climate, everything immediately changed.

Temperature would have probably fallen very, very quickly because there's not much sunlight coming through anymore. That was about 60 million years ago. Now the interesting fact is, yes, it took the planet each time several million years to recover, so to speak, but every time it did more than recover.

Every time the life forms that came became more complex. There was greater complexity of life forms. And then the complex life forms were destroyed again like 100 million years later and again to destruction and then rebirth.

So the planet has experienced destruction on a vast scale, rebirth and destruction already five times. Some people say we are moving into a sixth extinction. That's a very interesting subject and very relevant.

But here I'm just giving it as an example for this law of opposites, order and disorder, operates on all levels. So it's the same law when you bite into an apple. It's suggested as the law that brings about massive extinctions on the planet.

Humans are surprised because they don't know these things. When suddenly disorder happens, as it's happening now, for example, with a pandemic, life seemed so safe and secure and suddenly it doesn't seem that safe and secure anymore. It's a great shock to many people.

They didn't realize that the life that surrounds us is not that secure. Everybody is one heartbeat away from death. Everybody who listens to this will be dead in a few years, but by a few I mean could be anything from one or two to 80 or 90 years.

Not that much. They are amazed that when a pandemic happens, then you become a little bit aware of your mortality. And that can be a great, at first perhaps painful, but then a deepening realization.

Mortality, the awareness of mortality, is happening to many people now. And they are fearful, as if nobody had told them that death could happen at any moment. Now you might think, well, if you're young, you're in your 20s or 30s, you think, I don't need to think about death.

It's a long way away. Or as I heard somebody say not a while ago, a young 20-year-old said, she said, oh, I'm not worried about death. By the time I get old, they will have found a cure for it.

It's such a long way in the future. We should not dwell on death in a morbid fashion, but to be aware that death can happen easily and not necessarily when you grow old. If you're lucky, you grow old and then you die.

Some people would say if you're unlucky, you grow very old and then you die, experience some years of disability. But many young people die. We are not aware.

There are certain things that we take for granted. For example, every year, approximately 1,250,000 people die in traffic accidents on the planet. 1,250,000.

Many are young. Out of these, at least two or three times as many experience serious disability through traffic accidents. They survive, but serious injury.

There's despair, suicide. 800,000 to 1,000,000 people commit suicide every year. On average, every 40 seconds somebody commits suicide on the planet.

And people, of course, die continuously. In this very moment, several people are dying right now and now and now and now, continuously. Others are being born.

Amazing. Now, death, suffering and death. Interesting, when the Buddha was a young man, he grew up in a very wealthy environment, very protected because his parents, his father especially, protected him from all adversity.

Only surrounded by beautiful things, good food, pleasant experiences. That was how the Buddha grew up. Then when he was already, I don't know how old, 20 or something, for the first time he left the sheltered environment of the palace grounds.

Maybe his parents were kind of probably kings of a small kingdom. And he went to the village and a town and there he saw an old person because you had always been surrounded by lovely young people because his father wanted him to not experience unhappiness. It had been predicted that the Buddha would either become a great spiritual master or he would become very successful in business or as a ruler of a kingdom.

His father wanted him to be successful as a ruler. He said, he must not become spiritual so we're not going to show him anything that might give, would put bad ideas into his head. But he did leave his parents, his palace on an excursion when he was maybe 20 or 21.

And he saw a 90 year old man is there close to death and he was so shocked. What is this? He said, he's old.

Old? What's that? He said, well it happens to everybody sooner or later.

What? This is terrible. And then he walked a bit further and he saw a sick person.

I don't know, probably coronavirus. And the sick person was there. Oh, so painful.

What's that? This person is sick. Sick?

He said, yes, everybody eventually gets sick. Everybody experiences it. What?

When he saw a dead body, he said, what's that? He said, this is a dead body. What?

Yes, everybody dies. He couldn't believe it. If this is our destiny, then everything I've experienced so far is delusion.

If he had experienced it from an early age, he would have gotten used to it. But because his father waited for so long to release him into the world, it was such a shock to him to experience sickness, old age, and death that he said, I need to find something, whether there's anything beyond that. Because if there's nothing beyond it, everything is meaningless.

And that was the beginning of his spiritual search. He left. And then what he did then is what he had never experienced before.

He inflicted adversity on himself because he became an ascetic monk who lived on virtually no food. They eat locusts and leaves. And for several years, he practiced extreme deprivations of all sense pleasures.

And he became very, very thin and almost wasted away. So he knew he needed to experience something beyond. And after that, he said, No, this is not the way either.

Then he started eating and drinking again. And then he became enlightened. So some people say he realized that adversity or extreme deprivation or suffering doesn't get you there.

But that's not really true. He had to go through extreme suffering and deprivation, which he inflicted on himself. And then he went, he stopped it.

And if he hadn't gone through that and realized you don't really need that, but he did.

You don't really need it, but you do need it. There's a there's a paradox here.

People have recognized how it works that through disorder and suffering, you awakened. In many traditions, they have tried to recreate adversity in a spiritual setting. They've tried to recreate the experience of deprivation, of even sensory deprivation, of deprivation of food, of in many, many traditions, in order to bring about a spiritual awakening through extreme forms of adversity.

I don't think that's necessary. And in very few cases has it actually worked. Although I can see the idea behind it seems to make sense.

But you don't need it. Life is enough. Normal life is enough.

Normal life will give you exactly what you need for your spiritual awakening. Normal life will give you good experiences. And normal life will also give you the experience of disorder or chaos.

The important thing is to come to realize that to believe that there is something fundamentally wrong when you experience disorder or chaos, that's a delusion that prevents you from fully, one could almost say, taking advantage of this opportunity that loss or disorder brings when you believe this should not be happening to me. Why to me? Well, it happens to everybody sooner or later.

So if you complain about it, if you have a strong inner resistance to it, then you cannot accept what's happening. You are in opposition to the flow of life. You have an antagonistic relationship with the present moment, because what is happening in the present moment, you condemn as dreadful.

You have a narrative around it. So you cannot use this opportunity of deepening and awakening. So harmony, disharmony on this conventional level, order is harmony, disorder is disharmony or chaos.

But on a higher level, there is a higher hidden harmony, which includes disorder and chaos. Because these two, life moves between these two opposites and evolves between these two opposites. So there is a higher order that includes all the bad things that on our level where we look very bad.

Hidden harmony that is transcendent. And that's helpful to know, but not just as a mental belief that doesn't help very much. If you said, well, Eckhart said there's a hidden harmony, so it must be true.

Well, no, it's not true unless you at least have a glimpse of what that means. Harmony that's beyond the so-called good and bad, that is beyond good and bad. And you can see what it means, perhaps in your own life, if you've already been through a certain amount of suffering and seen that it has taken you already this far.

So it has had a purpose. It's brought you here. Of course, it could have killed you.

What then? Now, that's an interesting question. The usual argument or very the most common argument against the existence of God is a fact of suffering.

And so usually when you argue with an atheist or two atheists talking to each other and agreeing with everything they say, the person who denies the existence of God, whatever that is, but they talk about it without really knowing what it is. But let's put that aside. When you use the word God, it doesn't mean you know what you're talking about.

You're just using a sound. So the usual argument is for the non-existence of God is the fact of human suffering and violence and disorder. And they say, look, if God is omnipotent, as God is supposed to be omnipotent, because if he's not omnipotent, he's not God.

If God is omnipotent, would he allow this suffering? Would he allow a child to die of disease? Would he allow millions to die in a pandemic?

Would he allow genocide in concentration camps and labor camps? The dreadful things that have happened to humans, mostly actually done by humans to other humans. Would he allow these things?

If I were God, I wouldn't allow. I would have created a much better world, a just and fair world, and not this. So therefore, I would be morally superior to this God that you talk about.

This is the argument. Therefore, there is no God, because if I'm morally superior, then what kind of God is that? And so that's the traditional argument against it.

Non-existence of God is the seemingly meaningless suffering in this world on a huge, vast scale. But it could be that the starting point for the discussion was already a mistake. And the starting point for this discussion was the belief that there is a controlling entity somewhere that could control things, that has created all these imperfect things, could improve them, and could control them, but is refusing to do so.

So you start with this idea that there's an omnipotent entity who is not doing what he should be doing. And therefore, either he doesn't exist, or he's not worthy of being called God, and maybe he's just a demon. There was actually a belief in the very early Christianity.

There were the Gnostics, a Christian sect, and some of them believed that the God of the Old Testament and the God that created this world was an inferior deity, that not God at all, because if it were God would not have created this extremely imperfect world. So here we have the starting point for this discussion was already the erroneous assumption that there is an omnipotent being somewhere that could control things, but doesn't do it, or takes pleasure in torturing people. So we have to remove the erroneous foundation for this discussion, say this is not what God is at all.

God is not an entity somewhere that's controlling. So what meaning does God have then, the word God? Very hard to talk about.

The moment you talk about it, you can almost say you've already distorted it.

Eckhart Tolle The Power of Unconditioned Consciousness [5b8287d8-6550-4dff-a2e2-3b52a0aa2f3c]

The power of unconditioned consciousness. In this podcast, Eckhart talks about the importance of connecting with what he calls unconditioned consciousness. He says it's the source of all creativity and true intelligence.

Eckhart explains when we're in this place, mental noise stops and thinking recedes. And what remains is aware stillness. He says, this is the beginning of awakening.

He explains we may sustain this state for a while and then lose it again. It's part of the process. He encourages everyone to keep a foot in both worlds, the everyday and the transcendent.

He believes if we do this, greater intelligence will flow through us. Eckhart says, this leap forward in consciousness is the next step for humanity. He believes without more spiritual development, we will not survive.

Who are you without the mental noise? You haven't fallen asleep. No, well, one or two might have, but you're actually very alert.

In this moment, there is an alertness, but also stillness. In other words, there's an absence of mental noise, but there's an alertness, but not, there's no stress behind it. There's no willpower behind it.

There's a power there, but it's not produced by the person. It's there because the person has stepped back. And so that power is the unconditioned consciousness.

It's the source of all creativity or anything new, everything. True intelligence is there. It's pure intelligence.

And that is the awakening. And at first you may find this, occasionally you can be there and then you lose it again. And there's nothing wrong with that.

And then you realize that you lost yourself. The person is making your life difficult. And increasingly you use situations to be present instead of being reactive to the situation, especially when you have to wait for something, why not use those precious moments for being present?

You wait, you're waiting at the airport. You're waiting in the traffic jam. You're waiting for somebody to arrive.

You're waiting for somebody, a human being to answer the phone while you're trying to get through to the bank or somewhere like that. And you're waiting and they say, your call is important to us. And a human being will speak to you shortly.

It will only be another 55 minutes. Wonderful. Thank you.

And then you say, ah, I hope nobody answers. And then a time may come when, and this is the mastery of life that you're moving towards, when the person and the deeper I, the person that I call the surface I and the deep I don't exist as separate. So one day you're, and then for a moment you're, but the two can come together.

And so then you're able to function in this world as a person, but always with an additional dimension that operates now through that person. In other words, the way in which you deal with difficulties and situations and people changes, it's no longer an egoic way of dealing with things, but dealing with things consciously, this greater intelligence can now operate and use your flow into your mind. And then their mind comes up with the right solution suddenly, or spontaneously, you take the right action.

Whereas before you would have been reactive out of the egoic conditioning, which usually is wrong. It just makes things worse. So then the two, I sometimes put it like this.

You can have one foot in this dimension where you are a person, and you have the other foot in the transcendent dimension. And then you don't lose yourself anymore, ultimately in your mind. And that means you don't lose yourself in the world anymore, because ultimately the so-called world and your mind are one and the same thing.

So you don't lose yourself anymore. You operate within this limited realm, but you're no longer looking for yourself or for some kind of ultimate completion or fulfillment in this limited realm of the horizontal dimension. Which means you can now pursue a goal still, because the surface eye still operates here.

You pursue a goal, but you do not make the mistake of overemphasizing what this goal can do for you once you reach it. Yes, you might be very dedicated to what you're doing, but there is not an excessive projection into where you're feeling you need to get to. I need to get there.

I need to achieve the success that will make me feel complete and fulfilled. And then I will have made it. Made what?

The ego. That goes, you pursue a goal, but your attention is in the doing rather than where you want to get to. You know where you want to get to, but your main attention is in the quality of the doing now.

Whatever action you take now, you're able to be present with it rather than always devaluing everything you do now in the service of this greater goal in the future that will never ultimately satisfy you anyway. And that is a very dysfunctional way to live. Whenever stress arises, something has happened.

You don't want to be where you are, and ultimately you don't want to be doing what you're doing now. Stress means there is a projection to some future point where you want to be. Rather than here, you want to be there.

So the quality of the doing diminishes. The consciousness doesn't flow into the doing. The doing is a means to an end.

It goes like, I want to be there, and here I'm doing. Instead of, yes, peripherally, you know where you want to get to, but that's not where your main focus is. Your main focus is the doing itself.

So the doing is no longer in the service of the future. It is self-fulfilling. And then it becomes actually much more empowered.

In other words, you enjoy the doing, no matter what it is. There is an enjoyment of the energy that flows into the doing. And that's conscious action, as I call it.

Conscious action. It's not reduced just to a means to an end. Yes, it is also a means to an end, but it is not only a means to an end.

It is fundamentally an end in itself, the doing itself. The ancient scripture, the Bhagavad Gita, which, if you haven't read it, you should. Nobody knows how old it is, maybe 2,000 years or more.

Again, one of the main lessons in the Bhagavad Gita is it is possible to perform an action without losing yourself in some desired goal, which in the Bhagavad Gita is called the fruit of the action. It says, don't give excessive attention to the fruit of the action. Just be conscious of the action itself.

And this is the spiritual practice. It's called karma yoga. The yoga in the sense of, yoga here means spiritual practice, not necessarily body movement, but that's fine too.

Karma yoga, karma means action. Karma, action, and reaction, karmas. So karma yoga is the action as spiritual practice.

And that's a very, very powerful teaching that's been around a long, long time. Any activity that you perform as a person, by performing it in this way, becomes actually empowered. And then you have a foot in both worlds.

You have the unconditioned consciousness acting through you, giving your attention, your fullest attention to the doing in the moment, in this moment, whatever you do in this moment. And if it's not just doing, it might be something else. You're not always doing, you're always walking around this world, perceiving things and talking and perceiving and so on.

You may be familiar, I'm sure you are, with the term that's mentioned a lot these days as in new age teachings and others, gratefulness or gratitude. And again, that is related to this. What does it mean, gratitude?

Well, people say, well, you say thank you for, okay. It sounds a little weird. Somebody asked me, who am I thanking?

If I don't think of a God that has just given me something, so why do I say thank you? I don't understand, who am I thanking? Gratitude is really appreciation.

It's an alternative term you could use. What is appreciation? Again, it's related to be present with a sense perceptions, for example.

You can have appreciation for anything by giving it attention. And to give attention, your mind needs to be free of the conditioned naming and labeling, so awareness again, presence. You give attention to this flower, for example.

You give it attention. This is visual in this case. And you appreciate its beauty, but without mentally saying, do you mean, yes, the thought may come into your mind, it's beautiful, but you don't stay stuck in that thought.

Then the thought disappears and you continue to be aware of that flower. And you appreciate its, it's just, if one had to use words, incredible presence and aliveness. And then a kind of thank you arises that is not necessarily verbal.

It's a deep appreciation, but you can even do it with even so-called inanimate objects. There's a glass of water here and I can see the reflections of the light in the water. It's really beautiful.

And for a moment, the mind stops and simply perceives the incredible beauty of this without even calling it beauty. Wow. And then you feel this, everything is a gift.

There's an aliveness all around you. Some people make a mistake with the gratitude practice, which is a way of being in the present moment. The mistake is they associate gratitude with a story in their mind.

And the story would go like this. I really should be grateful what I have because look at all these people who have less than me. Okay.

Well, this may be true, but it's not the path to true gratitude because if you can only be appreciative and have gratitude by comparing yourself to others who are worse off than you, that is not true gratitude. You're dependent on others to be worse off than you to feel a bit more grateful or should be more grateful. Don't look for gratitude on the level of narratives in your mind, but the immediate thing, sense perception, hearing birdsong, clouds, sky, whatever, even how light gets reflected off the surface.

Just this moment of pure appreciation of the aliveness of things. And another factor that comes in and is important whenever you are aware of these things, whether you are performing an action or you're simply contemplating something and feel this gratitude or acknowledgement of the being of whatever it is, there's a very subtle thing here. Again, let's make it experiential.

Right here now, we take in the totality of this room and the lights and a man on the chair talking. And perhaps you're aware that you're breathing while you're contemplating all this. And now we come to the, perhaps the most important point of realization.

As you're aware of all this and appreciate it, are you also aware of yourself at the same time, but not the person? As you are aware of all this and you're inside, you're still, are you aware of that still, let's say what words to be used, are you aware of that still presence that is aware of all this? Are you aware of yourself as that awareness?

And that's a very subtle thing, but it's very important. So you have here the outer world of the senses, which ultimately is only the surface reality, but beautiful too. But you're also aware of yourself as consciousness, as the stillness, which is the unconditioned consciousness.

Now, when I put it like that, in words, a little error arises, which is created by language, because I'm asking, are you aware of yourself? That seems to imply that there's a duality there, but it arises because we're using language. When you say, I am aware of myself, that looks like a duality.

There's I, and there's that which I am aware of, but that's not how it is. It only appears like that when you begin to talk about it. But when you don't talk about it, there's just the awareness itself, because you are not separate from the awareness.

So it's not really true to say, I am aware of the awareness in me. No, the awareness in you is aware of itself. That's perhaps a better way of putting it.

And that is so, that's the secret of not losing yourself in the world and in your mind. While you're operating in this world, can you be aware of yourself as, now I'm using another term now, are you aware of yourself as the space for whatever it is that arises in your awareness, the forms that arise, your physical body, even your thoughts and trance perceptions, all these things arise in the awareness that you are. The awareness is the space for it.

So to be aware of that space is ultimately to be aware of yourself at the deepest level, where that far transcends who or what you are as a person. And that space of awareness is actually the true meaning of the present moment. That is the power of the present moment, the power itself, of consciousness itself, of life itself.

And that power is the power of now. Then you are aware of yourself as that, and there's the world. This is the, in some spiritual traditions, called the I am, the beingness of you, the essence of you.

That is the I am that, in the Old Testament, God replies when, I can't remember who, Abraham or Moses asks, meets God, so to speak. It's a story, I mean, you can't meet God like that, but there's a story there, there's a deep truth in it. God, what's your name, he asked God.

And God said, my name is I am, the I am that I am. And he's very surprised. Oh, I am, it's the name of God, wow.

That's very strange. I'm sure that's what he said, it's not in the Bible, but that is so weird. And perhaps he realized something, when the essence, I am, it's not just your I am, it is the I am of the universe.

It is the being itself, the beingness of the universe itself. You can realize that within as your essence, and that connects you to the one, the God. If you have to be very careful with words like that, because they've been misused a lot and misunderstood.

But the way I see it, or perceive it, or sense it, is that the consciousness that is the hidden essence behind all the phenomenal universe that we see, with our perceive, with our senses, behind it, there is a vast intelligence operating that is not part of this dimension, but somehow flows into this dimension and gradually expresses itself more fully in this dimension. And it flows into this dimension from the transcendent one that we call God, but we cannot, of course, understand at all. God does not exist in space or time, but is transcendent to all that.

But just as the sun emanates light and creates life here, by the energy that it emanates continuously, and that could be used as an analogy, in the same way, this is my perception, and perhaps it makes, perhaps you can sense the truth of it too, maybe not, maybe yes. The emanation of God into this dimension is like the emanation of light that comes from the sun. And this emanation is consciousness.

And this consciousness is behind every form that arises here. It's an intelligence that operates. You could also call it the soul of the world.

The ancients had a term for it, that in Latin it's called anima mundi, the soul of the world, that everything ultimately is a manifestation of that deeper transcendent aliveness. And so what you sense in yourself, as yourself, as the consciousness, is the light of God in you and as you. It is the light of God in you.

That's how I sense it somehow. And so just as the light of the sun is not separate from the sun, it's somehow, it's an extension of the sun, one could say. In the same way, the consciousness that flows is the essence of what you are, is an extension of God, is an emanation of the one source of all life.

And that is you. That is the essence. But that is the transcendent self, which the Buddhists call no-self.

That is the essence. So in essence, you are the light of God in this world, one could say, the light of consciousness. You are the light of, you are the light of the world as consciousness.

And that's exactly what Jesus said to his disciples. You are the light of the world. And he also said it of himself.

I am the light of the world. So what could that possibly mean? If not, I am the consciousness in which all this appears.

I am the consciousness of the universe. And this is not an ego thing, that realization can only come when the ego has subsided. And there's nobody who is not the consciousness of the universe.

They may not have realized it. That's the only difference. But everyone is the consciousness of the universe.

But the important, the destiny is, your destiny is to realize that. That's an enormous thing, this realization. And perhaps it's only a beginning of something even deeper for humans.

But I know that the next step now for us is that is an enormous leap forward in evolution of human consciousness. When humans can realize, a sufficiently large number of humans can realize their connectedness with the one. This is a traditional term.

We use the spiritual dimension of life. That's what it is. That's a traditional term.

And without that, a human life is frustrating and full of disappointment and suffering. Because if you only live on the horizontal dimension, inevitably, this is always, it's frustrating and it's disappointing. And circumstances and people let you down.

And it's Dukkha, Buddha said, Dukkha meaning suffering. If you only live there, then that's that. And then not only that, then you create this world of suffering where humans create so much suffering for themselves and others, far more suffering than natural disasters.

Look how many countless millions were killed last century alone. There's a deep dysfunction. Without the, if you lose connectedness to the spiritual dimension, then you cannot really survive for very, civilization will very soon collapse.

Without that, traditionally religions have provided perhaps some limited access to that dimension. Although unfortunately, to a large extent, religions became misused by the human ego in their search for power. So almost all religions, this has happened to almost all religions, been misused by the human ego.

But there's always been, always some opening left here and there, a little opening where some humans were still able to use, through their religious tradition, they were still able to use that as an access to the transcendent. So there's little openings here and there remained. Now for many humans, now religion has become completely meaningless.

They don't, and that should, even that slight opening has disappeared. But now we have something else. We have now the arising of this, the arising of this is not a new religion, of course, it's just pure spirituality.

And we're no longer, perhaps we no longer need the mythological aspect, or if it works for you, that's beautiful. But perhaps we don't need the mythology anymore. In other words, needing to believe in certain stories in order to be saved.

I never could understand that in Christianity, you say, if you believe in Jesus, then you will be saved. I could never understand that. And then I looked at it and said, this cannot be right, it's just belief, because you believe in a story that they tell you, and then you say, I'm saved.

And you could see there were countless people who believed in this story and did very bad things. So that can't be it. Perhaps what it really means is if you identify, if you identify with Jesus, you can, and what would that mean?

If you identify with Jesus, then you identify with this human on the cross. There was an ancient belief that the spirit of the universe was trapped in materiality and in bodies. This is not completely true, but there's some truth to it.

So Jesus is nailed to the cross, which is a torture instrument. Then Jesus dies by facing the suffering of this world. It's the archetype of human suffering, is the man on the cross, the archetype of human suffering.

And Buddha talks about suffering as the one thing that pervades human existence unless there's an awakening. And again, in Christianity, you have the archetype of human suffering. Not to some people that say, oh, I don't like that.

Okay, but it's the archetype of human suffering. And then that leads to death and rebirth, which is transcendence. So there is a deep truth embedded in that.

And another strange thing about it is the torture instrument, which is a cross, is at the same time a symbol for transcendence and the divine, which is the vertical and the horizontal dimension of life. And that explains the function of human suffering in this world. The path is to go through the suffering that is inevitable for human beings.

And then through the suffering, you die to the egoic sense of self, and then you emerge as the transcendent being. And it's all really contained in that, the necessity, unfortunately, for suffering, and then the liberation from suffering. If you are here listening to this, you're already voluntarily embarked on the path of awakening.

You don't need the suffering anymore, necessarily. It's a deep suffering, because you're already on the path of transcendence. But suffering will still challenge you, because challenges remain.

But all that then happens is the suffering will bring about a deepening, of your deepening, and will quickly erode what's left of your ego. And then the ego has subsided. You still have a form identity, yes, but you're not identified with your form identity.

You are the essence identity, the deep I. And that's the, you have died on the cross, and then there's a resurrection. Then the cross, the very thing that seems the worst thing, actually, is the opening into the transcendent.

So there's, the story of the cross is there's a deep, when I looked into it deeply, closely, I confirmed there is a truth embedded in there. So if you identify with Jesus, I can see how that could lead to that liberation. But this is one path.

I'm just mentioning it, I attempted to understand the deeper meaning of it. Whether or not you have a spiritual tradition, whether or not you still feel you're part of a religion, you can always, you can deepen it and use that, or you can step out of it and into pure spirituality. But it is not necessary to, I believe, to abandon any religion.

The deep, look for the deep truth that is hidden in every religion, and go there, and that can also be your path. I talked about awakening a lot. One of my favorite sayings by Jesus, which is often overlooked, there are parables about awakening in the New Testament.

Jesus said to his disciples, and what I say to you, I say to all, stay awake. And they don't, in the churches, I don't think they know what the deeper meaning of it is. Maybe a few here and there, because the way they read with it, when they read things in the church, I think, do they really understand it?

Because they would say, and what I say to you, I say to all, stay awake. Okay. Stay awake.

But there was actual, there was power behind those words. There is still a power behind those words. Awake, again, the term, everywhere you find awake is the term that comes up in Buddhism.

Buddha means the one who is awake. That's what the word means. Jesus talks about awake, stay awake, awaken.

It's so simple. A more transcendent way of looking at this gathering is there are, yes, there are persons here sitting and listening, but really what's happening here, this is an event that is part of the awakening of humanity into a higher consciousness, deeper consciousness. The next evolutionary step is that awakening of human consciousness.

And we embody that here. And when you, in your daily life, realize that the main purpose of your life, in addition to the personal purposes, that vary from person to person, whatever purpose you have on a personal level, of course, whatever that is, but bring that together with the purpose of living consciously and being awake in the doing of what it is that you are doing in the various ways that we have described, to karma yoga and so on, to make any action into a meditation, give it your fullest attention. And again, return to the now, always back to the now, there's no problem in the now.

Challenges sometimes arise in the now, but the now is the access point into the transcendent. That is the secret of human existence here for us. And the rest is for each of you to live it until time erodes, dissolves your physical vehicle, because eventually it will.

And it will no longer matter because who you are is transcendent to that and not subject to mortality. Jesus, as you may know, talks about eternal life. He says, find eternal life, realize eternal life.

And that is a positive thing, a way of putting it in positive. The Buddha said, realize the deathless. So in Buddhism too, there is a dimension that is called the deathless.

Amara, amara, deathless. But in Buddhism, Buddhism puts everything in negative terms. Deathless, instead of saying eternal life, it says no death.

The reason why Buddhism puts everything in negative terms, the Buddha didn't want humans to create an idol out of mental concepts. So if you have a negative mental concept, it's much more difficult to create a mental idol than if you have a positive mental concept. Eternal life is something you can believe in, but deathless is kind of, what's that?

No death, but there's nothing there. And so this is just different approaches, but they all point to that. There's this wonderful ancient saying, die before you die and then realize that there is no death.

And the dying before you die is what you are doing and have been doing here and now during these two hours. Dying before you die, die to the fictitious self ultimately and realize that which is beyond death. That's the essence of all spirituality.

And with this, I thank you.

I'm Oprah Winfrey, and you've been listening to Eckhart Tolle, Essential Teachings, the podcast. You can follow these essential teachings on Spotify or wherever you listen to podcasts. If you haven't yet, go to Spotify and follow this podcast.

Join us next week for more enlightened teachings from Eckhart Tolle. Thank you for listening.

Eckhart Tolle The Purpose of Your Life Is Becoming Conscious [24439852-0b69-4549-a4da-1f5f2351195a]

The purpose of your life is becoming conscious. In this podcast, Eckhart talks about outgrowing unconsciousness. He says only awareness can free us of our resentments, judgments, and negative thinking.

Those deeply ingrained patterns that keep us stuck. He says as our awareness grows, we realize we have choices in how we respond to life situations and we are no longer at the mercy of our conditioning. When we finally recognize these patterns for what they are, we transcend them.

We don't have to be prisoner to a dysfunctional past. Eckhart says as we move toward greater consciousness, we are in deeper alignment, not only with ourselves, but also with the purpose of the universe.

It's a good thing the chair is still there. That's called mindful sitting down. I'm sorry that some of you have to let go of your seats.

And perhaps others have to let go of their resentment. Hmm. There's always something to let go of.

Sometimes thoughts, abstract thoughts, emotional thoughts, are harder to let go of than material things. Although ultimately, your attachment to material things is also really an attachment to thought form, because the only way in which you experience really a material thing is in the realm of the invisible, in the realm of the mind. Because you might think that there's a car there.

Let's say it's a material thing. Let's say it is a car that is favored by the ego. I can't think of a name.

Rolls Royce, Maserati, Lamborghini, Testarossa, Testarossa, something. But when you experience the car or anything, before you experience it, it becomes, well, on a physical level, there's a visual perception. And that's then, it's translated into impulses, nerve impulses that travel to the brain.

But these things, we don't really know whether they exist totally on the physical level, that we just don't figure out how or what it is. Then the brain somehow reassembles something. And then in the realm of the unseen, because nobody as yet, by cutting open somebody's brain, can find their Lamborghini, the image of the Lamborghini that the ego had identified with, because you experience it there, but where is it?

So you don't actually experience the material car, you experience a representation in the realm of the unseen of what you call my car. And philosophers have spoken about that and have even questioned and asked, is there actually, well, they didn't mention car, but is there actually a car out there? Is there a car out there?

Because you don't know what is the thing in itself. Who knows? Perhaps it's all happening in the realm of imagination, the entire life experience, but let's not go into speculation too much.

But yes, you experience everything as mental formations. So ultimately, even letting go of a material possession, is letting go of a thought, a thought form that represents this material thing. So it's always letting go of forms, thought forms.

And an important thought form, the importance of saying, I don't know. And that is an openness. And a very important thought form to let go of is the thought form that says, I know.

And usually, I know implies a certain mental position. And you identify with a mental position. That's how it is.

And the moment you do that, you're not really learning anymore, because you already everything is already fixed in your mind. When you know who somebody is, you've already come to a conclusion about another person. Because perhaps, yes, perhaps with some justification, because you have experienced repeated patterns of behavior in that person that may have taken you to that conclusion about that person.

Nevertheless, it is a kind of prison that you have formulated for that other person in your mind, because you've come, this is how he or she, this is how he is, this is how, and you have perhaps certain labels that are part of this mental conclusion of who this person is. And that means, when you have identified with a thought form of that kind, you're never really meeting that person anymore. You're only meeting that person through the screen of your conclusions, the screen of your judgments.

And whatever the person does, you will continue to focus on those things that the person says or does that confirm to you that your conclusion about that person is correct. And you would ignore any other behavior or words from that person that do not conform to that conclusion that you have already formulated in your mind about that person. But it also means that ultimately you're not only putting that person in a mental prison, you're also putting yourself in a mental prison in relationship to that person.

So the judgment always goes two ways. And there was somebody 2000 years ago, who also reminded us to let go of judgment, don't judge, otherwise you will be judged. You let go of judgment, then you free yourself too.

I think he said that it's not literally in the Bible. So this conclusion also about yourself, that is a big one for many people. Some people become to a mental conclusion about themselves or their life.

And so you build up a mental image consisting of conceptualization that tells you you're telling yourself who you are or what your life is. So you come to a conclusion about who you are, that's another prison. In other words, you inhabit a conceptual reality, meaning consists of thought forms, without knowing it.

And the thought forms provide you with your sense of self. And that is, of course, ego, that's how it operates. And then it's hard to break out once you have certain conclusions about yourself or what you call my life.

Could be very negative, it could be positive, a mixture of negative and positive. Some people have a predominantly negative view of themselves, low self-esteem, bad body image, and all kinds of things that I mentioned earlier, don't feel good enough, not knowledgeable enough, not good looking enough, whatever it is, not intelligent enough. Or you can have the other, somebody who feels they are actually superior in most aspects to most people.

Now, this could be a total delusion. Some people live with a almost totally delusional self-image. They're bordering on crazy.

So there are people walking around that have a highly inflated image of who they are that does not correspond to reality whatsoever. And perhaps we have all met people like that. So they inhabit a universe that has lost really connection with the rest of reality.

But they seem to be happy in this world of delusion. Those are the more extreme cases, but there's a certain percentage of the population that manifests that kind of delusion. I don't know what the percentage is.

The extreme form, maybe it's 2%, maybe it's 1%, but even if it's 1% of people, it's a lot of people. But others have a mixture of, they may be deluded in their negative views too. They may be completely fooling themselves, they have holding negative, that they're not good enough here, not good enough there.

That may also be a delusion. In many cases, it is. In many cases, you can have people who are actually very good looking, and they think they're ugly.

And you can have people who have a great body, and they think they are overweight. And then they starve themselves even more, because there's a clash between the mental image and reality. So all kinds of strange things happen to humans in the absence of the dimension of awareness, presence, awareness.

Because it's only awareness that can free you from the entanglement in all kinds of thought forms, and be trapped entirely in those thought forms. And no matter what it is, even if you're a relatively well-adjusted person, so say your self-image corresponds fairly well with what society thinks you are, and your function in society, and so on, even there you have identification with thought forms. So it's only awareness that frees you from this trap of being completely caught up in the formations of your mind.

Basically, it is another dimension of consciousness that arises. The moment you become aware of your mind, and you're no longer totally identified with whatever it is that your mind is saying, the moment that arises in you, then freedom comes in, the possibility of freedom comes in. A person who is completely unaware is totally at the mercy of their conditioned mind.

This person is then totally conditioned by their mind, the mind is conditioned by their past, whatever happened in their past, it totally is conditioned by that. And so an unaware person basically has no choice. He or she acts out, whatever action this person performs, whatever he does or she does or says, or thinks, manifests just that level of unconsciousness.

So a very unconscious person is basically forced to act out their unconsciousness, and in that way they create an enormous amount of suffering for themselves and others. Now the question arises, well, are you saying that a person who creates a lot of suffering for others, perhaps even inflicts violence on other humans or other life forms, are you saying then that this person is not, we should not hold this person responsible for what they do? Well, because that seems to be the implication.

If I'm saying that they have no choice because they're totally at the mercy of their conditioning, am I not saying then that we cannot hold them responsible for what they do? That's not quite it. So that would be jumping to a conclusion that is not quite correct.

Even though they do not have a choice, and they are compelled to act the way they act, they will, this is how the universe is arranged, they will suffer the consequences of their unconsciousness. Unconscious humans suffer the consequences of their unconsciousness, and that is, we could call that, if we want to use an eastern term, karmic retribution, whatever we want to call it. Unconscious humans can awaken if they only suffer enough.

And usually the suffering is, in many many cases, self-inflicted through their unconsciousness, they didn't have a choice, but that's how the universe, this is one way in which the universe becomes more conscious. So by suffering the consequences of your unconsciousness, there's potentially, you can awaken. And there's a certain number of people in presence who are awakening in that way.

This is why it's very important to get more and more books and other stuff into presence, because a presence is an ideal place for surrender, for acceptance, for these very unpleasant places. If you can surrender there, then you have to surrender very deeply.

And if you surrender very deeply, you experience a deep and perhaps lasting transformation of consciousness.

So we get regularly correspondence from people who have experienced a shift in consciousness in presence, and they have experienced enormous suffering, so you only begin to have a choice when some awareness arises. And so they are no longer totally at the mercy of your conditioning, mental conditioning. And that could just, sometimes it just starts with being able to observe their conditioned behavior.

Perhaps it's not stopping yet, you can't stop it, but there is a witnessing presence in the background that is observing, for example, that you are going through an anger tantrum. And before there was nobody else, there was only you were the anger. The anger was you, and you were it.

The emotion and the thoughts that accompany, go with the emotion, got complete hold of you, and so that is complete identification. It's a inhabiting and hypnotic state, and you couldn't get out of it. There was no you beyond the mental emotion, and there was no you beyond the emotional pattern.

And then it is possible that even though you may still be going through that dysfunctional pattern, in the background there is a knowing that this is, there's a, there's an aware presence that has, it's looking on. And you can feel there's some witness in the background, and that is the beginning of an awakening. And then the witness grows, the witnessing ability grows, or rather it begins to manifest more fully.

And then you may reach a point where you encounter a similar situation that would usually trigger the reaction, the completely unconscious reaction. You may then reach a point that where awareness has grown to such an extent that you are able to actually have a choice whether you still want to manifest that kind of behavior or not. And then you can let go of it.

That's an enormous thing. When you recognize your patterns in this way and transcend them, go beyond them, in that moment you are fulfilling the very purpose of your life, because the purpose of your life is becoming conscious. But this is aligned with the purpose of the universe.

It wants, it is moving towards more consciousness, fuller consciousness. Becoming conscious in your daily life is the purpose of your life. The primary purpose of your life is to allow this awareness to come through you, and thereby transform the conditioned or the conditioned pattern.

Some may remain the relatively harmless patterns, there are certain idiosyncrasies, characteristics in people that even as more and more awareness comes in, they still manifest certain behaviors that are not not perhaps particularly harmful towards others, hopefully not towards yourself, although there are accounts of people who became completely awakened and yet didn't let go of certain patterns, like smoking.

It has the one or two famous cases who they continued to smoke and they didn't care anymore. They just, it was a pattern so deeply ingrained in the body, but it didn't interfere with the arising of awareness. That's relatively rare.

No matter how hard I try, I cannot get drunk anymore. That's not totally, I don't try to get drunk. I do enjoy a glass of wine or two, rarely more, and that's fine.

I recommend though, just as the awareness is arising in you, that even relatively small amounts of alcohol could interfere with the arising presence, until the presence is deeply established and you're already embodying presence, in which case you wouldn't even want to indulge in that kind of thing. When I experienced some years ago this smoking, this adjoint, it's called adjoint, I said, oh well, that's interesting, but my normal state of consciousness is so much better. And so I'm peaceful already.

I don't need to dull my senses to feel peaceful. I'm not totally against it. If you occasionally enjoy it, it's fine.

After all, it's only a plant. Anything that you do in excess, of course, is no longer a good thing. Even a good thing is no longer a good thing if you take it too far.

I read about a woman a year ago somewhere who, she learned that drinking water cleanses the body and detoxifies the body, and this thought got hold of her in her mind, and there wasn't any awareness behind it, and this thought became obsessive in her mind, and she drank so much, she thought, if drinking water is good, then drinking more water must be better, and drinking even more water must be even better. So eventually she killed herself through drinking water.

And again, this can happen easily when you get into the grip of one particular thought form that gets hold of you, and then this is not all that uncommon, that this happens on a personal level. It can happen that thoughts, they are little energy formations. They are like little entities with a certain lifespan.

They arise, and then they subside, and they perhaps, they say, don't subside completely, maybe then they go back into some corner, and so on, and other, and you can have strings of thoughts arising in your mind. Now it sometimes happens that just as a viral infection can take over your body, so the virus multiplies quickly, and then you are infected by this virus that is taking over, and then the virus is being fought by antibodies, whatever, the body has enormous intelligence that's in every cell. In the same way that this happens on a physical level with a virus, a thought can infiltrate your mind and have basically the same function as a virus on the physical level.

So some thoughts are mental viruses that take over almost the entire mind. And this, for example, is the case with people who develop obsessive ideas. The internet doesn't particularly help with that either, because there could be a person who is watching something on YouTube, and so he's taking in things, taking into your mind, and suddenly there's something, something there, and suddenly you take in this mental formation which becomes a virus in your mind that says, wow, now I know how the world works.

This is, they are all doing it. There are many kinds of conspiracy theories are viral infections, mental viral infections. I'm not saying that some may not be actually true, that's another matter.

Because the world is a crazy place. Some may, let's put that aside for a moment. This thought creates other related thoughts, and then whatever they look at, they look at through the screen of that particular thought formation, and they can immediately interpret everything.

Even people who are ideologically possessed by a religion, which means not people who are spiritual in any way, because you can be religious and spiritual, but you can also be religious and only ideological. So the religion becomes only a thought form, and some people are possessed by their religion as a certain thought form, and through which they can look in any situation and immediately interpret it according to this very limited thought form. They know immediately the answer, and mostly the answer of course implies, if you don't believe exactly the same as I believe, you will go to hell.

I know that for sure. And in many cases, these people are already inhabiting a mental hell without knowing it. So be careful.

It's very unlikely that anybody here, and maybe one or two exceptions, would get infected by a mental virus in that way, but you have to be any kind of obsessive thoughts that don't go away. On a relatively insignificant level, it can happen even a simple thing like obsessively thinking one particular thought, or a tune, you can't get rid of a tune that's in your head. It is also a temporary mental virus that you can't let go of it.

Shut up. Other relatively minor forms of this dysfunction are, for example, obsessive kinds of behavior, like you have to go to your light switch or the electricity switch to make sure that you've switched it off. You switch it off when you're about to leave the house, get your key.

Did I really switch it off? Obsessive behavior, again, that's viral infection through persistent thought forms. And again, it happens in the absence of awareness.

So you're at the mercy of thought. Dreadful thing. This is all, this is the downside.

This is the price we have to pay for the amazing thing that is the ability to engage in conceptual thinking. It's an incredible step forward in the evolution of consciousness on this planet, and yet we can now see, yes, there is a heavy price to pay, and everything has its evolutionary lifespan. So the way I see it, we've come to the end of the identification with thought.

It's gone on for thousands of years. Steve Taylor, in his first book, it's called The Fall, which is a history of the human ego. So it goes back thousands of years.

And more and more have we lost touch with that connectedness with who we are beyond this form. So am I saying then that there was a time when humans were enlightened? No, I'm not.

I'm not saying that. But there was a time before we got taken over by this great thing that is thinking, before we began to derive almost our entire sense of identity from the movement of thought. There was a time before that where we lived in a state of much more, in a state of oneness with nature, with ourselves, that there was, we were not anxious beings, anxious about tomorrow, or regretful about yesterday, because there was no tomorrow and yesterday.

Why was there no tomorrow and yesterday? Because tomorrow and yesterday are thought forms. Now, in some minds, you might think, well, if tomorrow and yesterday had an absolute reality, you could go there, you can experience, let's say tomorrow.

Tomorrow is a thought form, because if it were a reality, you would be able to reach or some great explorer at some point would have reached a place called tomorrow and said, I have arrived at tomorrow, it actually exists. But it doesn't, because the moment you arrive in tomorrow, it's today and it's now. So although we need the thought forms of past and future in order to operate in this dimension, of course, that's fine, there's nothing wrong with it.

But ultimately, they have no reality except as thoughts. So for the animal doesn't have that yet. It doesn't think about tomorrow.

It doesn't think about, yes, there is a memory there. But it doesn't operate like the human memory. Many, many ancient cultures have a myth of the Golden Age.

Paradise in the Old Testament is just one manifestation, one version of that myth. They have it in India, they have it in many, many cultures that had no contact with each other. There's a myth as if it were a distant memory, a very distant memory of a time when life flowed with ease and humans were happy.

They sometimes called the Golden Age, the myth of the Golden Age. And I believe there's some reality, it's not just fantasy. There's some reality and there's a distant memory there of what human life was like before the humans began to be dominated by thought.

They were perhaps free of thought, but it was a lower stage of development. They were closer to the animal at that point. And just as your dog is, the dog is usually more joyful than the owner of the dog, because the dog does not think about yesterday and tomorrow and is present.

So the original time of humans as they began to evolve out of other levels of consciousness, so it's not that they were enlightened, but they were relatively free of psychological suffering, or perhaps completely free of psychological suffering, because they had not yet formulated, created the psychological me entity. The Narcissus thing, which is the myth of Narcissus, the man who saw his reflection in a pool of water and then developed an image of who he is, and had a relationship with the image, that had not happened yet. And so that's because it hasn't had not happened yet.

Humans were relatively free of all this turmoil and mentally created, mental emotional suffering. There was some, undoubtedly, there was physical, there may have been some physical suffering. And this is similar to humans, unevolved humans exist even to this day, whose mind is so undeveloped, that they haven't really created an ego yet.

Their mind is not developed enough to have become an egoic identity. And nowadays, because we are, we have more empathy these days, or we can become politically correct, whatever it is, that we say they are mentally challenged, some of them. But there are many kinds of mental challenges.

There's a particular kind of mental challenge that I'm talking about here. And that is a person who doesn't do much thinking because the mind isn't developed enough. So the person goes through life kind of, and some of them are very happy.

In the past, they were called the fool. And every village had a fool, or two or three. And fool would go just smiling and happy.

How are you? I'm great. I'm feeling great.

No problem. No, no problem. Of course, he had no problem because in order to have a problem, you need to start thinking.

So, if you're not thinking, where's your problem? A challenge? Yes, maybe a wild animal is running towards you.

It's a challenge, but it's not a problem. A problem needs time, and a problem needs thought to survive in you. What problem are you having right now?

Right now, what's your problem? What's your problem? Okay, let's see.

Well, it's not here. Yeah, but I have a pain in my knee. No, it's a pain in the knee.

It's not a problem. Yeah, but tonight, I have to make this phone call. No, no, no, no.

What is your problem now? It's very hard to find a problem now. If you're just present in the now.

Yeah, but you have to start thinking and revive all that to know all the challenges that you are going to have tomorrow and next week, and what's going to happen to me next year. Oh my God. What?

The heaviness of all that, the heaviness of that, of myself. You experience yourself as a burden. You carry yourself.

I often see when I look at people not here, and I mean that. I'm not joking. Not so much here, with one or two exceptions perhaps, but I see, I often see people that are carrying the burden of themselves, and it's a heavy burden of their heavy personality with all its conditioning, and they're not happy.

Maybe for very brief instances, after a big meal, maybe they say, ah, or you have a few drinks. Again, every human goes towards that in the brief intermediate state between wakefulness and sleep. As you go towards sleep, you regress to some extent to the pre-conceptual level of consciousness, and if you stay conscious for a moment, you can actually sense that as you are so tired that you can't think anymore about your problems.

Just can't. No matter how hard you try, when you're becoming really tired, I don't remember my problems. I'm just too tired.

And if you keep some alertness in the background, some presence that observes the tiredness, you also observe that you're, it feels as you move towards sleep, it actually feels delicious. Sleep, when you move towards it, has a sweetness, a deliciousness, an enormous pull to it, an enormous pull. It says, come here.

Come. Come. And so you're going, you're going, and so you're going towards the unmanifested.

You're going, it's, you return every night. You die, basically, into dreamless sleep. You, you go into the unmanifested.

It pulls you. It needs, you go, it's like the heartbeat. You go, you go out, the heart goes.

It's like the in-breath and the out-breath. And your consciousness goes out into the manifested, and then something calls you from the unmanifested. Come here.

Enough of that. Now, if you didn't sleep every night, as you know, you would go insane. You can't, you have to go back there.

You have to go back, and it's the same movement. There's the outward movement, and there's a return movement, in day and night, out and return. And most likely, because the microcosm and the macrocosm are just the reflections of each other, and most likely, the entire universe operates in this way.

Source breathes out. The universe comes into existence, which is the vast time spans of billions of years, and life increases in its complexity and grows and grows. More and more manifestation, complexity, consciousness flowing into form, manifesting through form, dissolving forms, creating better forms, and continuously going out the entire universe.

And then, one, we can reasonably assume, because there's as above, so below, that then the universe experiences also return into complete oneness. So, but let's go back to sleep. So, for a short period of, for short moments, you kind of regress to the pre-thinking state of humanity, as you, in the intermediate stage between wakefulness and sleep.

And so, the fool, the traditional fool in mythology, also, because he has no ego, although he's not intelligent, but because he has no ego, he's more deeply connected with source than humans who have gone out further. And so, in many myths, the fool has an important function. The fool often performs tasks that more developed humans cannot perform.

And that, even in contemporary literature, we have the same with the hobbit, and so on, the hobbit, who is a relatively unintelligent, very cute being, but relatively unintelligent, very simple, a simpleton, but only he can do certain things that the more evolved, the more clever, intelligent, they can't do it. So, the great, the important task is entrusted to the fool, sometimes. And you may want to re-watch movies, like old movies, like Forrest Gump, or the even older movie, Being There with Peter Sellers.

They are about people who exist below the egoic consciousness, and the most miraculous things happen to them. So, life, they're kind of supported by life. So, there's the Golden Age, and now we've come to the end of an evolutionary cycle, and that's the end of the conceptualization cycle, where identity equals mental concept, because it's becoming more and more dysfunctional now, in the same way that the life of a caterpillar is becoming dysfunctional, when just as it's about to become a butterfly, there comes a point in the life of a caterpillar that, when it becomes more and more difficult to continue as a caterpillar, I can't crawl anymore, something's happening to me, I'm unhappy.

What am I doing here? Well, you're meant to be a butterfly, and it's going to happen very soon. What?

Huh? There, of course, the caterpillar doesn't have a choice. Now, with a more evolved level of consciousness that humans have, once a certain amount of consciousness has come in, you need to cooperate with the movement of awakening.

Now, in order to be able to do that, of course, you need to already have the minimum of awareness needs to be there, so that you even know what it is I'm talking about. There are still many humans, when I say awakening or awareness, what are you talking about, awareness? Well, but sometimes these humans, you just have to, you may encounter some of these in your daily life from time to time, humans who seem to be completely unconscious.

Well, it's not that you may encounter, you will encounter every day. And sometimes, be very careful with wanting to teach spirituality to unconscious humans, unless there's a little bit of an opening, a little bit of a question, there may be the right moment, maybe there, when you can say, do you have a voice in your head that never stops talking? At night, when you're worried, isn't that a voice in your head?

Yeah, is that who you are? What do you mean? It could be the beginning of an awakening, or a simple thing like saying, can you feel the energy in your hands?

What? Yeah, close your eyes, hold your hands, and how can you know whether your hands are still there or not without moving their hands or looking at them? Oh, yeah, I can feel there's an aliveness there.

Okay, and then you, this can be the beginning, you can do it to your parents or your whoever, your children, your friend, your ex-husband or wife even, who knows? Maybe they're not as unconscious as they seem to be, who knows? And you're not, you don't tell them you need to disidentify from the conceptual mind.

Feel the energy in your hands, now that works better. Can you feel the energy in your feet also, perhaps at the same time, and maybe even the rest of your body? Are you alive or are you dead?

How do you know? So if you're alive, can you feel that you're alive, or is it just an idea in your head that you're alive? Can you feel the aliveness that pervades your body or not?

Or are you dead already? You sometimes be a little bit provocative, it might work, and so the person suddenly, so instead of talking about mind or stillness, you just direct their attention away from thinking, because you cannot feel your inner body and do a lot of thinking, or really any thinking, at the same time, you cannot. And that's an amazing fact.

This is why the body awareness can be a powerful, very simple way for people who have no interest in spirituality, no interest whatsoever, can become an opening for those people. Or even your breath, take a conscious breath, avoid the word conscious, can you feel yourself breathing? What does it feel like?

This can be done, this should be done at school, every school should have that program. There's a lot that they learn that is useless, and what really matters is not rarely taught yet, except for individual teachers so far, but it will and must become part of the curriculum as the most important subject, awareness, the most important subject. You might even find a different name for it for the school.

But I mean, there's so much, many children in this mind-dominated world, absurdly conceptualized mind-dominated world, many children at a relatively early age already exist in a state of mental confusion and turmoil. Many children have lost touch with nature, they no longer go out and interact with nature, which is the most vital thing for a growing human being. They spend hours in front of these little screens, a dreadful fate.

Many children don't play anymore outside. In some states of this country, I don't know whether here or it depends probably what area you are in, the world is so crazy. If your child plays alone in the street, they'll come and arrest the parents.

Well, in some cases I can see, yes, the world is a dangerous place, yes, but... So, then children suffer already obesity, because they don't move much anymore, and cannot relate to other humans, because it's all on texting, it's all on their games that they play. We need to counteract all this.

This is our challenge now, in this age, freeing ourselves from the complete dominance by the conceptual mind and the amplification of the conceptual mind through technology, which are these devices, because they are basically the human mind amplified even more, so it becomes even more challenging to deal with. So, we need to develop clear guidelines for bringing up children, so that they do not develop addiction to these things, because even before these things were created, these devices, the digital world, for years I've been saying one of the greatest addictions is not drugs, and so perhaps the greatest addiction is the addiction to thinking. You cannot stop thinking even when you don't need it, and in fact a large percentage of that thinking is of a negative kind that makes your and other people's lives difficult, incredibly difficult, through an excessive, an excess of dysfunctional and useless thinking about yourself, and this, and come to all kinds of weird conclusions about this and that, live inhabiting something, a conceptual reality that you call my life, that makes you unhappy, and you think the narrative that you call your life is your life, it's, so this is why I differentiate between your life situation and your life.

Your life situation exists in time, it has a past and a future, and it's whatever it is in your life that you're dealing with, that's your situation, but it's not your life. Your life is now. Your life is now.

Your life situation has past and future. Now don't let your life be consumed completely by your life situation, which is a conceptual reality. Yes, you need to deal with things in the moment when you can deal with them.

Sometimes you may need to think about them in a focused way, that's fine, but not to be completely taken over by useless thinking about these things, and again, life situation, life, your life is now. But of course I would like to add one little thing, when you say your life, you say my life, the moment you speak, you create a duality, that's how language operates. My life already implies that there's two of you, there's you who has a life.

My life, there's me and my life, there's two of us here. That's a nice, you can title your autobiography, me and my life. How we get on together, or don't get on.

So you don't have a life, you are life. What are you apart from life? Nothing.

You are life, so you don't have a life, you are life. A manifestation of the one life, a brief manifestation in this form of the one underlying life, which is consciousness. Life evolves, life is the evolving consciousness.

As I see it, life is inherent, and consciousness is inherent in everything that we see, even in a rock. We could call a rock frozen consciousness, in the same way that water, when it freezes, becomes hard and solid, but it's still water. So the mineral realm, the realm of so-called inanimate matter, we could call it frozen consciousness, that vibrates at a different frequency.

Because if you look into so-called inanimate matter, if you're a physicist, and you examine what does this consist, this seemingly dead object, if you go into it, you realize it's not dead at all. There's continuous movement of molecules in motion inside the rock, inside anything, any inanimate object is full of aliveness, it's called, they call it energy, and in between there are vast spaces, there's just 99.9%, 999% empty space, including the physical body, because that's, that is the space between the atoms and molecules, just vast spaces. So everything is alive, solid matter, frozen consciousness, and then you get life, vegetable life, you could say, consciousness becoming like liquid, like liquid water, it's different quality to it, and then you get in consciousness becoming mind, even already the animal mind, the human mind, maybe that could be compared to becoming vapor, vaporized water, we don't want to go too far with these analogies, but just that, so there's only, there's only one life manifesting in different forms, and you are that, so you're not, there's me and there's the rest of the universe, that's the misperception of the ego, here's me, I'm, I've been put in this universe, I've been put here, by who knows how and what, by whom, or I have, accidentally I have appeared here, and here's the rest of the universe, and it's all, everything that I see is other, it's not me, it's not me, not me, this is me, and then you try to extend the me, identify with clothes and possessions, no, that's, my house is me too, I've grown, you are, there's a saying by, I believe it was Alan Watts, spiritual teacher in the 70s, 60s, 70s, he said something like, you are something that the universe is doing in the same way that a wave is something that the ocean is doing, in other words, you're not a noun, you are a verb, ultimately nothing is a noun, everything is an activity of the one life, the one universe, you are something that the universe is doing, just as the wave is not separate from the ocean, the wave is something that the ocean is doing, so your consciousness is the consciousness of the universe, experiencing itself and experiencing this dimensional reality, there's no separation there, so in addition to being a person for a universe, manifesting briefly as somebody with a name, and a gender, you can change it, but it's still a gender, so manifesting briefly as this or that, and then that dissolves, and then perhaps the same ray of consciousness may persist for a few, manifest again, but ultimately if there's no separation from source, it all emanates from the one source, there's only one life, there's only one consciousness, humans are not autonomous entities, and the clock is at minus six, yes, I've gone beyond the allotted time.

I'm Oprah Winfrey, and you've been listening to Eckhart Tolle Essential Teachings, the podcast, you can follow these essential teachings on Spotify, or wherever you listen to podcasts, if you haven't yet, go to Spotify and follow this podcast, join us next week for more enlightened teachings from Eckhart Tolle, thank you for listening.

Eckhart Tolle The Secret of Manifestation [f81e2dae-2152-408a-82b5-a9662bf13c34]

The secret of manifestation. In this podcast, Eckhart answers questions about the aphorism, be careful what you wish for. He says, when we attempt to manifest certain desires in our lives, it's critical we discern whether the motivation is ego-driven or something more profound.

Eckhart encourages everyone to be who they are at the deepest level. He says, anything we achieve on the horizontal plane will also have a downside. Therefore, he encourages us to not get too attached to outcomes.

He says, as we reach a state of deeper consciousness, we learn to transcend the polarities of good or bad, and we simply align ourselves with what is.

Hi, Eckhart. Hi, I just, I want to let you know something. I've been visualizing speaking with you in person for many years now, so I've manifested.

It works. Yes, it does. So my question for you today is around the idea of, like right now in my life, I do feel very fulfilled to the point where, you know, I don't really need to manifest really anything, because I really want to be embedded in the being.

But I think part of it is also due to me feeling subconsciously scared to manifest anything, because in the past, when I have tried to manifest anything, most of it came true with a price that I had to pay. Tremendous amount of suffering and awakening to kind of get to where I need to get. So I think a part of me is also afraid to manifest.

So yeah, I just wanted to hear what your thoughts are on that and how I can reconcile that.

Yes, thank you. So really, it's two questions. One is the price to pay for when you achieve something.

And the other one is, well, it might not be a question, but a point worth mentioning, as you said, right now, you don't feel the need to manifest anything. Now, let's talk about that first. It's by no means the case that a human being should always be engaged in manifesting.

Sometimes your life unfolds quite well as it is, and you don't need every day to have some kind of new practice to create something new, unless you feel that is what you want to do. So, and some people are actually, do not manifest consciously in the way that we are talking about here. They are engaged in some kind of activity that at some point, they enjoy it.

There's an enjoyment in what they do. There may be a, that enjoyment is, of course, always comes from a deeper place. And then the activity evolves and suddenly grows into something that bears fruit and grows into something big.

This can easily happen if you find something in your life that you enjoy doing, and that means you're good at it. It may also involve, you have to, of course, be dedicated to it if you feel there's something that you enjoy, whatever it may be, playing music, writing, or even some kind of business that you have, if you enjoy doing it. Then it's very likely that it will grow into something without you necessarily needing to sit down and do manifestation practices or techniques.

And this brings us to also a very powerful point, to be yourself and to know whether what you want to manifest comes from the ego, or whether it comes from a deeper level of yourself is important, of course. So important not to live through a mental image of who you are or who you want to be, and then try to, on the basis of that mental image, try to manifest something in order to make that mental image better. So don't have any mental image of who you want.

Be yourself at the deepest level. Then power is there immediately. Be yourself.

And I believe the same case is quite a few artists and so on, and others may have used manifestation techniques. I know of some sports people who have been very successful through using manifestation techniques. It varies.

So first of all, you don't always need to be manifesting. Sometimes just enjoy what's already here and what you're doing already, and just see where it goes. And that's fine too.

And enjoy the present moment, enjoy the doing, whatever you're doing in the present moment. It's perfectly fine to do that. And there may be periods when manifestation is called for, and then there are other periods when it's no longer needed.

And then a little later, there may be another period when you practice it again, or not. The price to pay is obviously, everything has a... We're in the world of polarities.

Any good thing that you achieve will also have a downside. That's just how it is. And so it's not to get too attached or to believe that it can only be positive.

Every person you meet or start living with, sometimes you have to start living with a person to see his or her downside. Sometimes you just go out on dates, you only see one side. Just the perfect, my perfect partner, quite obviously perfect until you start living together.

And then you, oh, or any situation that you go into will have a downside. Fame, over the years, I've met quite a few famous people. And some told me that they become, after initial elation, elated at their fame, they became more unhappy than they were before because they lived through an image of they started to believe in the image that the media projected onto them.

It became more and more alienated from their true being. There's always a downside, as you may have read, many lottery winners became very unhappy. The majority of lottery winners, big wins in lotteries, after a few years became extremely unhappy and had very unpleasant life experiences.

So no matter what you achieve, it always exists in the world of polarities. The important thing is polarities are here on the horizontal plane, light and dark, and so on. Whatever the polarities, yin and yang, light and dark, high and low, here.

The important thing for us is to transcend the polarities. You are in a place where I often use the image of a triangle or pyramid. So good and bad are here.

When you are aware or present enough, then your consciousness is not tied to either the good or the bad. It's not reactive anymore. You're no longer identified with either the good.

Ah, I have achieved that me, look at me. You're not identified with the good and you're not identified with the bad. You say, oh, so dreadful, I'm totally, I'm just so devastated, devastated.

So you're identified with the bad, identified with the good. These are very unpleasant places, ultimately. Even identify with the good, it's not going to last.

Therefore, if you are present, your consciousness at the apex, like a pyramid, and here you have, here's the good and here's the bad, but you are here. Or you could invert the triangle in order, because I like the term deeper consciousness. You could say higher consciousness, it's just words.

I actually like the term deeper consciousness. I often talk about the deep eye as opposed to the surface eye. So let's invert this at the good, bad, horizontal plane.

And then you go down an inverted triangle and you are at the point here that is transcendent to good and bad. When you are aware, when you are present, you're at the point of transcendence, which means there's no need anymore to identify with the good when it happens and say it, because if you do, it amplifies your ego. You feel inflated.

Some people, you achieve things, experience actually ego inflation, I call it. And then you get real. They become very unpleasant people.

They don't even know it. So you can get ego inflation. Or you identify with the negative, then you get ego.

You can either experience ego deflation, but not in a good sense. But many people, even when they identify with a negative experience and negative ego inflation, because the mental image of yourself as a victim of circumstances or a victim of other people or a victim of society or a victim of God, that mental image gets very strong. So you identify with a bad, something bad has happened to you.

You identify with that. That can also strengthen your ego enormously. So in either case, you're alienated from yourself through identification.

So when something good happens, to appreciate it is lovely. To say, oh, thank you, wonderful, thank you. But that's all.

It does not become part of your true identity because the identity you have found that already, even before the good thing happened. That identity is inseparable from connectedness with the present moment, with the presence of you here and now. So you found that already.

So appreciation, yes. Or even a possession. Let's say something is given to you or something beautiful and you buy it.

You can appreciate something, a beautiful possession without neediness or needing to accumulate vast numbers of possessions. No, but an occasional beautiful object or something that you appreciate it. Does it add anything to your identity when you appreciate?

Not necessarily. You can be transcendent to that, appreciate it. Oh, lovely.

Knowing that at some point it will probably leave you or at some point you may enjoy giving it to somebody else. It's easy to let go also when you don't identify with something good. You can easily let go of something that's good and give it to somebody else, which is always a wonderful thing to do.

And when you lose it or somebody steals it, you are not devastated and you tear out your hair. Oh my God, it's gone. I've lost this dreadful, awful.

And then a friend of yours comes to you and says, isn't this time for spiritual practice that you've been talking about for so long? And say, oh, leave me alone with that spiritual practice. Can't you see I've lost this thing that's so valuable?

Don't bother me in spiritual practice. No, this is not the moment. That actually happened to a friend of mine.

So that's transcendent. Transcend polarities. Don't identify with good or bad.

Then you have a point of freedom or let's invert it. Here you are at the deeper eye, deeper eye. Then that's, I assume that was my answer to your question.

[Speaker 3] (13:30 - 13:36)

Yes, yes. Wow. You gave me so much clarity as to what I need to do now.

So thank you.

[Speaker 1] (13:37 - 13:38)

Thank you. Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (13:39 - 14:10)

Hi Eckhart, thank you so much for everything that you do and for taking the time to answer our questions. My question is sort of related to the previous question. Actually, I was wondering if instead of focusing on manifesting what I think is my life purpose, if I live a standard life and approach every action in accordance with karma yoga that I've heard you talk about, will my life purpose reveal itself to me?

[Speaker 1] (14:12 - 29:25)

Good, that's also a good question. Karma yoga, maybe not everybody will understand the term. It comes from the Bhagavad Gita.

Wonderful scripture, ancient Hindu scripture, one of the great spiritual books of the world, very deep. There are many translations of the Bhagavad Gita and some leave the term karma yoga untranslated. Now, karma, the Sanskrit term literally actually means action.

It's a law of action and reaction. Yoga is a spiritual practice. So karma yoga is a spiritual practice in action, in activities.

I have about six or seven different translations of the Bhagavad Gita. In one of them, karma yoga is translated as consecrated action. Consecrated action.

It's action that you do, not looking, as again, this is a quote from the actual Bhagavad Gita, not looking to the fruit of the action. The fruit of the action means the outcome, not to focus on the desired outcome, but to give your fullest attention to whatever it is that you are doing in this moment, to give it your fullest attention. So consecrate means one could say, you consecrate it to God or the higher power of the universe, you surrender, surrendered action, consecrated action.

And that is a wonderful way to live. Every moment is self-fulfilling. It implies that you are not treating this moment or whatever you are doing at this moment as a means to an end, but as an end in itself.

It's radically different from the way most people act. For most people, almost continuously, the present moment is reduced to a stepping stone to some future moment that is believed to be much more important than this one. That's an unconscious mind pattern in most people who have not awakened.

So there's a continuous devaluing of the present moment to a means to an end, and people do it unconsciously. They don't know that that's what they're doing, but that reduces the quality of your life. It reduces the power that otherwise could flow through you into this world.

It reduces also your ability to really create from the deepest level. If you feel fulfilled in your practice of karma yoga, which is honoring fully the present moment and whatever action you're taking in the present moment, knowing, yes, knowing that every action may have a certain purpose, a certain aim, and of course, inevitably the aim of the action is in the so-called future, even the littlest thing, like going to the kitchen, get a glass of water out of the fridge, pouring. Of course, you're pouring the water. Of course, you know why you're grasping the bottle, and you know why you are, because you want to have a glass of water.

Of course, you know what the aim is, but it does not mean that you cannot be fully aware and honor the action that's happening at this moment. So it's a very different way of doing things. And on the periphery of your mind, you know what the aim is.

You know where you're going. You're on a journey. You're, let's say, walking from A to B.

Obviously, you're walking from A to B because you want to arrive at point B. You know that, but you're not focused on arriving at point B. You're focused on the step you're taking at this moment.

That's karma yoga. You're honoring each step, but ultimately, it's only one step. There's only ever the step you're taking at this moment.

You're honoring this step, and you give your fullest attention to this step. Peripherally, of course, you know point B. You're going to point B, but your fullest attention is not there.

Your fullest attention is on this step. So it's fulfilling in itself, and great power comes with that. If you can live like that, it is quite possible that something deeper will emerge from that, like what you call your life purpose.

But I lived like that for quite many years, and basically, I still live like that now, but there was a moment many years ago when I had a feeling that my work was not unfolding sufficiently or almost too slowly. I was practicing karma yoga, just living in the present, but there was a sense of, okay, this, I knew there's a spiritual teaching coming through. There's a spiritual power coming through.

I also knew that I was only reaching a handful of people. I was seeing people in private spiritual sessions. Occasionally, I would do a workshop for 10 people or so on average.

Once I did a workshop in England. I was living in England. Only one person turned up.

I did it anyway. So I had this feeling that I needed to do something to enable this power to come through more fully so that, yes, I was surrendered, and then I found myself in a village church in England. I've told the story before.

In Somerset, in a little church, old, 800-year-old, this wonderful little church that every English village has, an empty church, and I sat there, and suddenly I felt inspired to say, to tell something to the consciousness, although not separate from consciousness, but it was manifesting something. I want acceleration, please, I said. Acceleration of the work was implied.

I want acceleration, acceleration. I meditated on acceleration in that empty church. And then this thought of acceleration stayed with me for a while, and then it disappeared.

And a few weeks later, a change happened, and I suddenly felt a deep impulse that I had to move to the West Coast of North America, and I didn't know why, but it was all connected with the power of now and so on. I didn't connect these things at first, the impulse to move. It came because I had made a demand, I had a request.

Otherwise, I was completely surrendered to the present moment, but I felt, so if it comes to you, to connect it with your question, if it comes to you, then you may feel inclined or not to contribute some direction to where life is going. It doesn't mean you're separating yourself because you are not separate from the totality. So if you feel totally fulfilled in your karma yoga, that's perfectly fine.

It is possible that something deeper will emerge that you might call your life purpose. It is also possible that your life purpose is to continue to practice karma yoga no matter when and where. That in itself is a wonderful contribution to human consciousness, because I call that a frequency holder.

Some humans are not interested in creating very much out there. They're not interested in, they don't feel any urge from within to manifest anything in particular, except what's already there in their lives. These are human beings.

I've met quite a few of them. Some live close to nature. Some work as gardeners.

Some are artists. They might do things with their hands, pottery, sculpture, other things. And they're fine with that.

Their function is to be present in what they do completely. And that is their life purpose. That is another life purpose, is to be a frequency holder, which is to embody presence in whatever you do, even if on the surface it looks like something small.

It's not small. Anything into which presence flows is not a small thing. Your so-called consciousness, which is not yours, let's just call it that, your consciousness is connected to the totality of human consciousness.

And human consciousness is one aspect of universal consciousness. So you cannot not affect other humans, even if you lived in solitude as a hermit, your state of consciousness would still affect the totality of human consciousness with which you're always connected. So there have been throughout history, humans who embodied this state of what I call frequency holder.

That means that what they do is they hold the frequency of presence. This has been a tradition, and unfortunately in the Western world, this has been almost lost because it's not regarded as anything that is part of the already existing social structures that we have in the Western world. If you go back a few hundred years, you had monasteries on convents and the frequency holders, people who felt they didn't want to go out into this world and achieve things, they would go into a monastery.

And some of them probably were present, not all of them. There were others who are very much ego dominated, that's always, but that's another story. But there were social structures like monasteries that gave people a place who felt they just wanted to be devoted to God or just to prayer and God.

And then very few monasteries actually survive in the West these days, convents, they're all closing down. So there's not an established place for frequency holders in the Western world anymore. In India, there's been an uninterrupted tradition going back thousands of years for people to recognize, society recognizes there and always has those humans who feel called upon to withdraw from the world and just embody consciousness or presence.

And they still exist in India and they're not regarded as crazy. Whereas in the West, they would probably regard it as crazy or something very wrong with them and they don't have a place here. So don't underestimate the importance of frequency holders.

And if you are a frequency holder, that's fine. Even there, you have a challenge. The challenge is to remain conscious and presence.

If your life becomes too regulated, if you've got too much into a daily routine, let's say you're a gardener and you care for your flowers and plants every day and you're present in everything you do, it's just wonderful. The challenge is to remain presence after a few years of not being challenged by anything. Without knowing it, your level of consciousness could go down because nothing has challenged you.

But usually even frequency holders will sooner or later get challenged by events. If you practice, coming back again to your question, if you practice karma yoga, consecrated action, and you feel that it's fulfilling, then either this will continue or something will emerge out of that, which is also not uncommon, that something will emerge, something that suddenly you know what you have to do or create in this world. If you feel some kind of, something is still, something wants to emerge, but it's not emerging fully, you might give it some help with a few affirmations that you might have, that your purpose is unfolding beautifully and easily.

You have the purpose in this world and you can continue to be a frequency holder, to continue to practice karma yoga. And at the same time, you could have very gentle affirmations that your life purpose is unfolding and flowering. And so, you have to find your own affirmations.

This is not incompatible with karma yoga. So, would you like to comment on what I said? Does it make sense?

[Speaker 2] (29:26 - 29:58)

Yes, absolutely. Thank you so much. I guess I was sort of on the path of working towards what I taught, maybe my life purpose, but I came across a lot of obstacles.

I know you've talked about obstacles, but there were several obstacles over several years. So, I was just wondering, I wanted a sign, I wanted to kind of let it go and see if it comes back to me rather than kind of pushing, like going out and pushing for it again.

[Speaker 1] (29:59 - 38:12)

Could you give one example of such an obstacle? Oh, it's mostly other people. Oh yes, I'm sure many people are familiar with those obstacles.

That's one of the greatest challenges for most humans is other humans. One of the great sources of sometimes joy, but very often also suffering is other humans. Problems, if you ask, what problems do you have?

Many people, the first thing that comes to their mind is some other human or several of them. So, our challenges, good point, I'm glad I asked. Our challenges often come in the form of human beings, other humans.

And that is also very helpful. Sometimes the people that irritate you most are those that are most helpful to you in the evolution of your consciousness. It doesn't mean that you need to actually stay with every obnoxious person that you meet and you say, no, I can't remove myself from him or her.

Well, sometimes you can remove yourself from an obnoxious person and it's the right thing to do. At other times, especially if it's family members with whom you have this karmic link, that's good practice because family members, it's not so easy to say, oh, I don't want to see you again, go away. Well, some people do that.

But depending on your culture, the culture you come from, in some cultures, family is still sacrosanct. Family is very important. In the West, I know people who often they haven't seen their siblings in years because they can't stand them.

But it's more difficult if it's family members than very helpful, very useful for spiritual practice to stay conscious, stay present when you come together with family members, especially if they criticize you, as they may do or whatever it is that they tell you. Even parents, if you are grown up but then you still have to meet your parents and your parents may not agree with your life, may not constantly still want to interfere. Maybe your mother or father will still want to control you because they can't give up their role of mother and father.

All these things that you can deal with as part of your spiritual practice. And this is why Ram Dass said, as you may know, Ram Dass, the spiritual teacher said, if you think you're so enlightened, go and spend a week with your parents. Very good advice because that will give you feedback as to your state of consciousness.

How do you deal with your parents? For two weeks, you're stuck there. Now, of course, some people have very conscious parents, a few, I haven't met many, but actually it is more common these days.

I have met a few younger parents who are endeavoring to bring up their children consciously and to endeavoring to live together as consciously as possible. I've met quite a few because of the people I come into touch, into contact with. It's still a minority, of course.

But if I go back to when I was a child, I can't think of any conscious parents at that time. The people, parents who were consciously endeavoring to live consciously, that was unheard of when I grew up many years ago. People didn't even know what it meant to be conscious.

So be thankful to other humans for being difficult. If they are absolutely unbearable or they become violent or whatever, then of course you have to remove yourself. But if it's inevitable, then you be with them, practice or you transcend all reactivity and can be loving, being in a state of loving kindness, although they are not.

One last thing, often people tell me that, they complain that my mother, my father, they don't understand me at all. They don't understand anything. Whenever I go, they don't understand me.

And they suffer a lot because their mother or their father don't understand what they're, the complete separation. They're trying to explain what their value, what they consider important spiritual values or whatever. Parents just don't understand, they just criticize.

I often hear those stories. And of course my advice is, if anybody doesn't understand you, give up the assumption or the belief that you need them to understand you. And that it would actually make any difference to your life if they did understand you.

It's a thought in your mind that says, I need them to understand me. No, you don't. You can be, you don't need them to be fully, to understand you, to be fully yourself.

You don't need them to recognize who you are because you know who you are. So you're not dependent on anybody's understanding. It's an enormous liberation when you can give up the need to be understood by other people.

That need was actually always just created by the egoic mind. Imagine imaginary scenario, you're with your parents or your mother or whatever. And your mother traditionally always criticized you and said, I don't know what you're doing with your life or whatever.

And suddenly imagine your mother says, oh no, I really appreciate what you do. I can understand it now. Does it really make a difference?

A moment ago, let's say she said, well, all you're doing is wrong. Your whole life is wrong. And then let's say, then she changes her mind and then says, oh, now I understand you.

Makes no difference one or the other ultimately to who you are. And that's an enormous liberation of not needing to be understood. And that's only one aspect of course, of other people and the many challenges that can arise with other people.

Not surprisingly, I've quoted him before. What is such a lovely quote. I think I even wrote it in a book.

The philosopher example, Sartre, a French philosopher said, hell is other people. And that's the English translation. I think in the original French, he just, it reads as, hell is the others.

Les autres, hell is the others. So it was the others, hell. And of course to the ego, it is very often.

Heaven and hell, because to the ego, the other is sometimes regarded as heaven too for a while. And then you get married and live together and suddenly it's hell. Not always, but often.

Heaven and hell, the others. Let's have a moment of stillness. Thank you, thank you.

[Speaker 4] (38:14 - 38:33)

I'm Oprah Winfrey, and you've been listening to Eckhart Tolle, essential teachings, the podcast. You can follow these essential teachings on Spotify or wherever you listen to podcasts. If you haven't yet, go to Spotify and follow this podcast.

Eckhart Tolle The Shift : From Thinking to Awareness [9fbddd3f-209c-4fdc-bce6-8916d8ea4b1e]

[Speaker 2] (0:00 - 0:29)

The shift from thinking to awareness. In this podcast, Eckhart asks a live audience, what are you certain of? After some discussion, they conclude very little.

He references philosophers throughout history who've said life is a dream and our individual lives fleeting. Eckhart explains there's a deeper consciousness beyond the dream and beyond the person. He says we will experience transcendence when we make the shift from thinking to awareness.

Thank you and welcome, everybody, wherever you are. Oprah, I don't know if she still asks that question she used to or still asks the question, what do I know for sure? She's been asking people that question for some years.

And usually, of course, people answer with their belief or conviction or some realization, whatever it may be. Ultimately, though, if you go deeper or higher, there's very little that you can be sure of, almost nothing. For example, is this world real?

Well, I'm not sure. Nobody can be sure. Philosophers have been thinking about this for centuries, millennia, since ancient Greeks even.

What is the reality of this world? Is it just a dream? An ancient theme of philosophers and writers, is this world a dream?

Ancient, the old Spanish writer, Calderon de la Barca said, La vida es sueño, it's one of his famous plays, life is a dream. And many have said that it is a kind of dream because everything that appears here now in your experience dissolves very quickly like a dream. So if you can't be sure even of the reality of this world, then what is left to be sure of?

Well, of course there is something left, and that is yourself, you. Or when you say I, you can be sure that you are. So talking in the first person, I can be sure that I am.

You cannot doubt it. You cannot doubt the beingness of you. Whatever arises in the beingness of you can be doubted.

It could be like a smoke or vapor, unreal, dissolves quickly. But even if it is a dream, there must be a consciousness in which the dream happens. There must be a light of consciousness in which the dream is known.

Otherwise it wouldn't be there. So even if the whole world is illusion, there must be a consciousness in which this illusion appears and disappears continuously. And that is the being, and that is you as the perceiving and experiencing consciousness, presence.

You are, whether you are a person, that's already something that you can doubt. That could be part of the dream, of course. Being a person is perhaps a fleeting dream that consciousness is having, and it dreams to be Eckhart for a while, or whoever, name it, whatever your name is.

It has this dream, and then it disappears. It could be, I'm not saying it is, but it could be. It kind of is.

And so you can doubt that you exist as a person, that your existence as a person has any absolute reality. But you cannot doubt that that which underlies the person, the being of you, the presence, the conscious presence, you cannot doubt that that is there. Everything else can be doubted except I am.

And this is known directly. Here and now, it is known directly, becoming conscious of the fact that you are conscious, or not so much of the fact, because it sounds a little abstract. A fact is something abstract.

Becoming conscious that you are conscious, to know that you, right now, that you are conscious. You don't know what it is that is conscious. It doesn't really have a name.

The name comes later. And it doesn't have a form, really. The form comes later.

Prior to all this, there is a presence. When you look at something like here, then this is what appears in the visual terms in the presence. And sometimes when something disappears from your perceptual realm, some vision that you, something that you see, you close your eyes for a moment, and then your vision disappears.

Sometimes in the moment that something disappears from your sense perceptions, or you hear a sound and suddenly the sound stops. In that moment, when suddenly something disappears, it is possible a bit more easily to catch yourself as the underlying consciousness, which no longer has an object in it, because the object that appeared in consciousness has dissolved. You close your eyes for a moment and your entire visual perception is gone.

But then you can, in that moment, you can become aware that there is an underlying presence. Then when you open your eyes again, then you can easily lose touch with this underlying presence, because you are captivated, seduced, hypnotized by that which appears. So you lose awareness of the primordial reality of the being that is prior to all appearance.

So it's very easy then to, this is the world. The world draws yourself, draws you out of yourself. And then the consciousness identifies with all kinds of disguises.

It's disguised in numerous disguises. You yourself, the person that you are, are a disguise that consciousness assumes temporarily. So the world impinges upon you and makes demands and says, look at this, look at this, give attention to this.

And of course, continuously you're drawn here and there. And even when you're alone in your room, nothing happening externally, things are still happening in your mind. Thoughts come and say, think about this.

This is so important. We must follow up this thought. And then you lose yourself in all kinds of trains of thought.

And then again, seduced by the gravitational pull of thought and sometimes thought combined with heavy emotion, a huge, very powerful combination. So you're in the grip of an emotional, mental, emotional, gravitational pull. And you don't even know it because you're so identified with it.

So you don't know that you are anymore. You are completely identified with the appearances, temporary appearances. So when something disappears, there's a moment when it's a little bit easier to catch yourself as the presence, to become aware of yourself as the consciousness, as the presence.

Another example I could give, music is very interesting, sound and music. Sakuhachi is a Japanese bamboo flute. A very simple instrument is just a bamboo with holes in it.

But when it's played by a master, it's amazing. It's usually improvisation. Somebody is completely present.

And so he's playing this bamboo flute and there are gaps in between the sounds. Sometimes the sound arises, a sound subsides. And then if you learn to become aware of the gaps between the sounds of this flute, this is just one example, certain types of piano music can do the same, et cetera, et cetera.

But if you become aware of the gaps between the sounds in that gap, when the auditory perception disappears, it is easier to be aware of yourself as the underlying conscious presence in which suddenly the sound is dissolved and what is left, just the presence. So there are certain things that can help you in this world. And one of those things is the disappearance of things.

And on a larger scale, because we've just been talking about the temporary disappearance of little things, sounds and images and so on. On a larger scale, the disappearance is the experience of some kind of loss in your life. So when something disappears, it's not just a sound that subsides.

It's not just an image that was there a minute ago and the visual image disappears. Now, there are other kinds of disappearances that are much, much bigger. And that is the disappearance of something significant that had been significant in your life.

For example, some big loss in your life of something that was extremely important to you as a person, as a human being. It could be the loss of your home or possessions. It could be the loss of your job.

Suddenly you don't have a job anymore. And then if you don't have a job anymore and your identity was to a large extent bound up with your function as this particular person, then not only the job disappears, but also your self-image begins to crumble because who are you without that function in societal function? And this is sometimes people experience that when they reach retirement age and suddenly they've been looking forward to it for a long time, but suddenly their entire function disappears, which they had given them their identity.

And who are they now? So they lose all that suddenly. Loss can also come somebody close to you dies or some big disruption in your life through some kind of accident, loss of abilities, physical abilities in the body and so on, big loss.

There too, this is usually regarded as extremely painful and extremely undesirable. But here too, there is something that potentially can open up when something that was important to you, very important, is suddenly removed. It disappears.

At first usually leads to some kind of suffering, sometimes intense suffering. And then it's possible for humans to surrender into that loss, no longer resist it because they can see the futility of resisting something that has already happened. It already is.

And they reach a point of deep acceptance. And then again, the disappearance of something, it could be even a person close to you, extremely painful at first, for a while perhaps. And then you may come to a point of acceptance and then this disappearance leaves behind an openness, an open space.

And that is the redeeming feature of all loss, the possibility that it can bring about a realization in you of that which is beyond form because all loss is the loss of some form. And if a form dissolves in your life, so we started with just a sound, even a sound is a formation, a sensory formation. But then we went on to something bigger.

So the loss of form opens up the possibility of recognizing or awakening to the formless transcendent dimension in yourself, which is also the transcendent dimension of the universe because you are a microcosm of the entire universe. So loss is something that you can't do without it on the spiritual path. And of course, everybody gets it sooner or later or from time to time, periodically, everybody gets it, but not everybody is able to recognize this as an opportunity.

Most people are not yet because nobody teaches that at school. And even in old people's homes and senior residences, they don't teach that, nobody seems to know about it.

When death approaches or you can see it approaching or even you become aware that you are mortal because many people don't realize that they are mortal except as an abstract fact in their minds, but it's not a living realization that they are going to die fairly soon because even a few decades is fairly soon.

So when you become aware of mortality, again, the possibility of loss, a big loss, the whole, your whole body is gone, that again, the approach of mortality can be a wonderful opportunity for awakening to the formless, the formless dimension. And this is the I am, this is what we started with, the realization of yourself as presence, has no form. Presence is, has no location, it's not actually in you.

It just seems to be. All the great teachings is about the transcendent dimension, discovering it as the formless, the kingdom of heaven, Jesus' kingdom of heaven. As you know, in my translation, it's translated as, I translate it as the dimension, kingdom, the dimension of spaciousness, like the sky, vast spaciousness.

It's a dimension of consciousness, like discovering that emptiness, the Buddha's emptiness, sunyata, same thing, spaciousness, emptiness, formlessness. And the discovery of that in yourself, so to speak, is what we call awakening, that's one term you can use, that is the awakening, that is in Buddhist terms, the end of suffering, and that's the psychological suffering he talks about, the suffering that is always there when you only know yourself as a person, a form identity. You have no other identity than this form identity, and that is suffering, complete lack of realization of the transcendent dimension within yourself and thereby the universe.

And this lack is a life of suffering when you only know yourself as this limited conditioned person, and you don't know yourself as the underlying consciousness or awareness, the formless. So the Buddha says, Dukkha, everything is suffering, no matter where you go and what you do and what you achieve and what you have, very quickly you will find Dukkha, it's hiding behind every experience, suffering, as long as you only know yourself as a person, which the Buddha calls the self, the delusion of the self. And when that delusion is removed, your identity is derived from the underlying presence or consciousness.

Then the person still has its ups and downs, and you have a little bit of emotion when things go well, and when things don't go well, you say, oh, well, that's sad that it didn't go well, but it doesn't go very deep anymore, the suffering. On the surface, you'd still have a few highs and lows, but nothing devastates you anymore. It's not when some big loss happens, it's no longer devastating, ah, real suffering.

So Buddha points to the possibility of recognizing the unreality of the self, which is the person. Same thing with Jesus. Deny thyself.

Recognize, in other words, that it is ultimately not real. That's the liberation. In Christian

Jesus Christ, it's called salvation.

What are you saved from in that salvation? You are saved from yourself. The troublemaker, the problem maker, the heaviness of the me, saved from yourself.

So it's all very simple. It's not complicated at all. The mind may try to make it complicated.

I haven't quite figured it out yet, how to transcend the self. I need to read a few more books about this. I've been thinking about this for a long, long time.

Can't quite get it. Of course you can't, because you're thinking about it. The realization comes when, and this is the most important disappearance, because we've been talking about disappearances.

The most important disappearance is the disappearance of thought as the primordial forms that arise, thought forms. But it is not a falling below thought where you become unconscious. It's rising above thought.

You become more present and more alert. And you discover in yourself the ability to be free of thought for moments that gradually become longer, although the moment itself has no time. You can be free of thought and be fully conscious, fully here, but no naming, no conceptualizing, no mental noise making, the ability to be free of thought.

This is the ultimate disappearance. It all comes down to the cessation of streams of thinking that for most people never stop, except in dreamless sleep. Fortunately, they still have that.

Of course, without dreamless sleep, humans would go insane, but in their daily life, there's not a moment of freedom. So the great disappearance is the disappearance of having to think all the time. Having to think, can't stop it.

Now, the thing is you can't exert willpower and stop yourself from thinking. That doesn't work, but you can be so present that thoughts don't arise. The example I gave in the power of now, it's just come back to me.

I gave the example of a cat. If you've ever observed a cat watching a mouse hole, the cat is watching a mouse hole because the mouse may come out any second now. So the cat is so alert watching this mouse hole, nothing else is there, just that alertness.

And so I use that example and then I say to them, let's, you can do it here. If you were that cat and you see you're so alert and say, let's see what the next thought is that's going to come into my head because the next thought is a mouse. What's the next thought that's going to come into my head?

And you're so alert for the next thought that the next thought doesn't come because you're too alert for another thought to come until it does come at some point. But even just a few seconds of that is an interesting experience or realization. And it's such freedom to be able to just walk around this world and perceive things without interference of thought, except when you need it and it's there.

And even sometimes when you don't need it, it's still, yes, all kinds of thoughts go through your head, but they no longer have that grip on you. They no longer cause you untold suffering because the greatest part of suffering, if not all, is caused by your thoughts about things plus emotions, but thoughts about situations, not the situation, it's your thought about the situation causes the suffering. That was already discovered by the ancient little known, unfortunately, Greek philosopher Epictetus who said literally that, that what causes you suffering is your thought.

In other words, the unobserved mind, the unobserved mind, which means thought activity, but no awareness. Every thought draws you in completely, dreadful fate. And then you have to identify with one thought and you have to exclude others.

You cannot hold two thoughts because without awareness, you identify with one. Let's give one contemporary example. In America at the present time, a certain segment of the population says the whole history of the United States is just horrible.

We've done such horrible things. True. The other side says it's been the most remarkable and unbelieving thing that never happened before that people have shown many places have come together and created such a vigorous dynamic civilization that did so many things, brought so much creativity and so much good into this world.

My mother thought so because after the war, she met Americans who were coming into Germany and they were all wonderful. They were the best, the most wonderful soldiers. My mother, they were the Americans that were coming in.

They were giving out food. Everybody were kind and wonderful. You have that also.

You have, on the one hand, it's a dreadful place and the other one, it's a wonderful place. Both are true. And you have to, only if you're aware, you can hold two seemingly conflicting things together and see the truth is somewhere in between.

You don't have to identify yourself completely with one or the other and then derive some egoic satisfaction from that. And again, I gave the example of soldiers and Americans in Germany, and then you've got the destruction of Iraq and totally pointless, completely absurd. You have polarities everywhere in this world.

Without awareness, you're lost in thought and you're lost in mental positions. And then the mental positions become more and more pronounced and then they become collective mental positions and then people start fighting. So before we go on to the questions, if I had to summarize the entire teaching and everything, maybe all spiritual teachings, it's discover in yourself the ability to be free of thinking for moments, certain moments and gradually longer moments, and being aware.

A shift from always thinking to awareness, shift from thinking to awareness. That's the whole essence of it. Polarities are everywhere, good and bad, light and dark, polarities.

The polarities cannot be transcended. Here, you've got yin and yang, good and bad, whatever it is, any polarity here. Now, how do you transcend?

You're either here or you're either there. The line becomes a triangle. The apex of the triangle is awareness.

Then you have transcended the polarities and you can allow them to be, but you're not tied to one or the other. Let's have the first question.

[Speaker 3] (28:49 - 29:12)

Thank you for all the teachings. You know, now I go in little bit deep into this knowledge and what I am wondering is the consciousness, does it live in your body or it just come and go? Like just you said, presence is not in you, it seems that way.

So I was just wondering.

[Speaker 1] (29:13 - 41:00)

Thank you, thank you. I understand the question. Now, ultimately, although this may not be immediately understandable to everyone, ultimately, what we perceive as inside and outside is not actually the reality.

Ultimately, it would be more true to say, and this is an interesting way of looking at reality, to say that there is nothing outside of you. I suggest this as a kind of experiment. How does that change the way in which you perceive the world and people?

I'm not asking you to answer the question, it's just a question that you can ask yourself and find out how does it change the way in which you have your experiences if everything that you experience is actually inside of you? Or there's no inside and outside, it's only consciousness. But temporarily, let's say, as it does, for example, in the course in miracles, it says there is nothing outside of you because everything that you experience as a world appears in consciousness and you are consciousness.

Is this consciousness confined to this body and this brain? It seems to be, but it is not. Many people believe that consciousness is a by-product of brain activity, that brain activity produces consciousness.

And our civilization mainstream believes that mainstream belief is that the material world is all that it is real. And people don't really know what to say about consciousness.

Even many scientists do not have an answer.

They do not know what consciousness is, but they do believe that whatever it is, it's produced by the human brain. But the greatest scientists actually did not believe that from Albert Einstein to other scientists like Max Planck and Heisenberg and many others, actually, they saw how enigmatic and mysterious reality actually is when you go into the atomic and subatomic realm. And they assumed, they said this literally, that Einstein, that there is an intelligence behind the world of appearances.

There is an overriding vast intelligence behind, this intelligence is the organizing principle behind the arising of form. And Einstein said, this intelligence is so, of such vast superiority to anything that humans could think of or do, that all human thinking and human doing is only a pale reflection of this vast intelligence that analyze everything. And Max Planck said, the physicist said something similar.

There is an intelligence behind existence, he said, that is a matrix of all existence, which means that it is the source of all existence. So the organizing principle behind the arising of all life forms. So it is not confined to the brain.

It is, in fact, the way I see it, consciousness has manufactured this physical brain in order to use it as an avenue of expression into this dimension. It's like a focal point of consciousness. It focalizes consciousness.

And every living being is a focal point of, billions of focal points of consciousness into this dimension. So when you make a huge tragedy in our contemporary world, which has come about through certain discoveries, which were probably, you could say, misinterpreted. For example, the discovery of the evolutionary theory of Darwin.

Darwin was right when he discovered that life forms evolve. That is, there's a huge evolutionary process on this planet which started off with lifeless rocks. And then gradually, life forms began over millions and millions of years.

Life forms began to evolve. And the misperception is, which is still, everybody has seeped into everyone's consciousness almost in this contemporary world, that this process of evolution was entirely random, a blind process of trial and error where the strongest eventually survives. But it's all, according to this theory, it's all trial and error.

There is no intelligence behind it, according to this theory of evolution. And this is a tragic mistake because it has removed from human beings the possibility, from many human beings, the possibility of experiencing this universe as a living entity and everything in this universe as having a life spirit within it. Everything, ancient people still had their perception, although they might not have perceived it quite correctly, but the universe was still alive when ancient people in, no matter where, in Europe, in Asia, in Africa, wherever, when they went out into nature, nature had a soul.

Everything in nature was perceived as conscious beings. And that is closer to the truth, although not entirely true in the way in which they perceived it. It's closer to the truth in which modern humans experience the world as ultimately devoid of soul, devoid of intelligence.

It's lifeless matter, ultimately. They cannot feel the aliveness of the universe anymore. This is why humans have lost touch with nature because they have lost the ability to empathically connect with nature and sense the inherent aliveness in a flower or a tree.

They could not sense that behind the sensory perception of this tree or the sensory perception of this flower, that is not the ultimate reality. Behind it, there is a living spirit, which is consciousness, which has assumed the form of this entity, a temporary form. But they cannot sense this anymore, that behind the word of appearances, there is a living intelligence.

Ultimately, it's one living being that incarnates through countless forms. And when you can no longer perceive the universe as being essentially alive and vastly intelligent, then you inhabit a dead world that has become dead and you become dead inside because you can no longer feel that in yourself either. You cannot feel that there's more to everything that you perceive than meets the eye.

It's an English expression, English language expression. There's more to it than meets the eye, which refers to sensory perception. It's not just the eye, it's other sensory perceptions too.

So there's more to everything that you perceive than meets the eye. There's more to you than meets the eye when you look in a mirror, or than that meets the eye when you think about yourself, that's the inner eye of the me. So there's infinitely more in a way one could say, all you perceive with sensory perception is a surface layer, surface level of reality.

And behind that, there is, as Max Planck, the physicist said, a intelligent and conscious spirit. And he said, then that is the matrix of all matter. Even matter arises out of that.

So it's not my consciousness. It does not originate in me. There's only one vast consciousness.

There isn't my consciousness and your consciousness. There's one consciousness. You are, I am a temporary disguise of this one light, the light of consciousness.

And therefore one could say there's nothing, there's nothing outside of you, because whatever you perceive in this so-called reality is perceived in the light of consciousness. Everything is happening in the light of consciousness. And you are that, you are that.

So essentially, and that's another interesting way of looking at it, essentially you are invisible. You are not, the essence of who you are is completely invisible. No scientist could find you if the scientist cuts open your body.

The scientist is not going to find you. The scientist, by cutting open your brain, is not even going to find a single memory. Whereas you have countless memories.

You remember your mother. You remember your father. And a scientist can cut open with the most powerful microscopes.

You cannot find your mother or your father in your brain. And you yourself, if you can sense that, you begin to lose your fear of death. If you can sense that your essential reality is invisible, and you can sense that as the invisible presence that you are, that is the beginning of becoming free of the fear of death.

Because that does not die, it's not subject to birth and death. It's wrong to say life and death. Usually people say there's the opposite, it's life and death.

That's not right. The opposite of death is birth. There's birth and death.

There's not life and death, because life does not have an opposite. There's birth and death, but there's not life and death. Life is eternal.

And you are an essential part of that eternal life. You are that. I am that, as the ancient Indian knew.

I am that.

[Speaker 3] (41:02 - 41:04)

Thank you. Feel more alive.

[Speaker 2] (41:05 - 41:27)

Thank you. I'm Oprah Winfrey, and you've been listening to Eckhart Tolle, Essential Teachings, the podcast. You can follow these essential teachings on Spotify or wherever you listen to podcasts.

If you haven't yet, go to Spotify and follow this podcast. Join us next week for more enlightened teachings from Eckhart Tolle. Thank you for listening.

Eckhart Tolle The Soul of The World [38b5cbd0-ddc4-41b8-b55e-75675a2494da]

The soul of the world. In this podcast, Eckhart talks about the soul of the world, which in Latin translates to anima mundi. He says when we awaken to the transcendent dimension within ourselves, we are then able to discover the soul of the world as our own soul.

Eckhart says that's the essence of all spirituality and is the primary reason we are here. Eckhart then answers questions on a variety of subjects. A woman asks, what is the functional purpose of becoming more aware?

Eckhart explains there are many benefits to awakening. The most obvious is that our lives get easier and more enjoyable. Another audience member asks about the states of consciousness generated during dancing, drumming, and meditation.

She's deeply aware of the inner world, but not the outer. She wants to know if that is the same transcendent dimension Eckhart discusses so frequently. He says we must keep a foot in both worlds because the art of living requires this balance.

So this soul of the world anima mundi, there's another word for it that is in Greek philosophy, ancient Greek philosophy, logos, logos, l-o-g-o-s, logos. Logos is, again, refers to the underlying intelligence in the universe. It is unfortunately translated in various places, including the New Testament, as the Word.

You may, if you, I don't know how many people these days read the Bible, or if you, right, at the beginning of the Gospel of John, it says, in the beginning was the Word, and the Word was God, and the Word was, I actually have the Bible here, I might read it to you, and the Word was God, and the beginning was the Word. So people, nobody really knows what that is, the Word of God, okay. It all started with a word.

It's a little strange. Where did that word come from? I mean, what is a word?

It's a thought that you utter, so why not say thought? That might be a little bit closer to the truth. So the logos is, in ancient Greek philosophy, points to the same underlying reality or intelligence.

It's not, it doesn't mean logic or anything like that. These are relatively superficial things. I'm going to read to you my translation of, well it's not in here, I'm just changing it as I read it, which is the beginning of the Gospel of John.

If you read it rightly, it's quite powerful and deep. I haven't done this very often before, reading from the Bible. I mean, I read it at home, so quite, I've been reading it for 65 years, but, so here it says, in the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

So what happens here is, he refers back, he takes this term logos, which is translated as a word from ancient Greek philosophy. So the author, John, obviously was familiar with ancient Greek philosophy, so he used that term that was already known to philosophers. And then it was translated into various languages, first into Latin, it was translated as verbum, which means word, and then into other languages, word.

Then, after this short chapter that tells you how the logos operates, I'm going to read it to you in a minute, then the next step is the logos, the underlying intelligence that gives rise to everything, is then personalized and equated with Jesus Christ. Christianity then comes out, was originally Greek philosophy, he established a connection, and so then Jesus is then regarded as the personification of the logos, the consciousness of the universe. Now I'm going to read to you, substituting word with consciousness, and see what it, whether it makes sense, better sense than the word.

In the beginning was consciousness, and consciousness was with God, and consciousness was God. It was in the beginning with God, all things were made through it, and without it was not anything made that was made. In it was life, and the life was the light of man.

So the consciousness underlies all creation, everything that ever came into existence arose out of divine consciousness, that is the creative principle, that is the emanation of God is the creating consciousness. That's quite simple. And then I looked around in the Bible for a few more years, and then after a few years I came across this passage.

I don't read it all the time, that's why it took so many years to find. There is a term called wisdom in the various places in the Old Testament that is used in a deeper sense than what we conventionally understand as wisdom. And wisdom in that sense is the same function, the same thing as the consciousness or the logos.

Wisdom as something not in something in human beings that leads to wise actions, wisdom as something as a force that exists in the universe. And so, just to end this peculiar discourse of mine, wisdom here in the book of Proverbs, wisdom is speaking, wisdom itself speaks as the consciousness. God possessed me at the beginning of his work, the first of his acts of old.

Ages ago, so it's personalized wisdom, ages ago I was set up at the first, before the beginning of the earth, and here it says earth, but it refers to the entire universe. I was set up at the beginning of the earth, when there were no depths, I was brought forth. When there were no springs abounding with water, before the mountains had been shaped, before the hills, I was brought forth.

Before he had made the earth with its fields, or the first of the dust of the world, when he established the heavens, I was there. When he drew a circle on the face of the deep, when he made firm the skies above, when he established the fountains of the deep, when he assigned to the sea its limits, so that the waters might not transgress his command, he marked out the foundations of the earth. Then I was beside him like a master workman.

I was daily his delight, rejoicing before him always, rejoicing in his inhabited world, and delighting in the children of man. Like a master workman, so that is the creative principle that emanates from God and brings about creation, that here it's called wisdom, but again comes back, it is again according to this also, it's quite like that, it is your task to find that, to access that, to realize that within yourself. It all comes to the same thing, there's so many pointers that sound different, all pointing to the same.

So it is your task, our task, the human task, to discover, awaken to that dimension within themselves. Then you discover the soul of the world as your own soul. And that's the essence of all spirituality, and that's the essence of why we're here.

And it all comes back down to the cessation of thinking without falling asleep. To achieve mastery in any endeavor, you have to have some access to that state, if only briefly, because there are many, there are masters in various fields. If they are masters, there is an element there, they're not just good in terms of technique, or whatever it may be, there is a creative element to what they do, something almost miraculous.

And every creative human, truly creative, not just pretending to be creative but thinking up some weird thing, things that you find in art galleries these days, not that kind of creative, but something true, I mean there are some wonderful creative artists, but they don't, most of them, they don't sell for 30 million dollars a piece, no, but only the absurd ones do, but that's another story. Anybody who is creative in any field has access, if only briefly, to that state of connectedness with the deeper dimension where they can go from. And sometimes it doesn't come until you've practiced something for very long, and then at some point an additional element comes in, and that is that deep sense of connectedness, and then it acts through you.

This is the intelligence that is beyond the human mind. In other words, universal intelligence, you connect with it, the one intelligence, it takes over and it does something that then was regarded as, wow, how could a human being achieve that? Great creations, works of music, of art, and even the deep insights in science came out of moments of revelations.

After a lot of thinking, thinking stopped, there are many accounts of people arriving at deep insights, sudden realizations, when not through thinking, although thinking was preliminary, then they came to a point of, ah, and then suddenly it came. So every creative human has some access to that, but we need to go further than that so that we are not confined to one particular activity where we have access to that. And even then, of course, that would be very few humans actually, relatively speaking, have that, but we need, it doesn't really matter whether we, what or whether we create a particular thing, more important is in daily life that we are connected with that dimension within ourselves.

So humans who have created these wonderful, great masterpieces of art and music and they all had, many of them reported they almost received, many great composers, for example, reported that when they were composing, they almost received, it arrived almost ready-made, and then there it was, almost like taking dictation, many reported that. And often you need, before that happens, you need to be engaged in something for a long period of time. So I could not, for example, I could not say, okay, I'm so present, so I'm so creative, I'm going to sit at the piano now, and something miraculous will happen.

Or anything that I haven't practiced. In order for that to come in, it does need preparation. And, in fact, there was this writer who figured out by observing many creative people, was it Malcolm Gladwell, I think it was the writer, he figured out approximately, I think he said 10,000 hours of practice, or something like that, 10,000 hours of practice, and then there's a possibility that this deeper dimension could, I don't know if he puts it like that, I don't think so, but the deeper dimension can be accessed. So he figured out, for example, that the Beatles, not the insects, the music group, they, before they became famous and starting their great, because they're incredible creations, it's relatively simple compared to classical music, but they have something, every song of the Beatles has an essence, comes from a deep place, and he figured out that they actually, before they started becoming creative, they played thousands of hours in traveling, they were in little beer cellars in Hamburg and everywhere, they played and played and played and played, and at some point, something happened, they connected. It doesn't happen to everybody, but to some, but that is the connectedness with a certain power that indwells.

But that is not the main thing. The main thing is when you connect with that, whether or not you create something specific is secondary. Perhaps you will, if you give it some time.

As I said, you cannot sit at a piano and become creative. Nowadays, they say, they give children a little, some colors, this is very different from the past, they say just splash around some colors and be creative. Okay, well, yeah, maybe.

It's finding a middle way between the way that was treated in the past, very regimented way of learning the craft, very copying the old masters and learning and adopting and spending many hours, instead of saying, okay, just be creative. No, you learn, you spend many hours, and then perhaps finally you find your own way after you've mastered all that. Or you get stuck in imitation, and so on.

It seems to me that the middle way is the way between the extremes of adherence to a discipline that was already there, so that you learn from the oldest, from your elders, other masters, and to have the courage to create something new, and to let go of the old, so that something new can come. Either extreme would not be helpful. You get too bound up with a tradition, or you want to be so creative before you've mastered anything.

Well, some modern music is like that. I could probably, if I sat at a piano and just started, I could probably create some modern music that might be revolutionary. Wow.

And then all you have to do is find some incredibly intelligent words to explain it. So the creativity then is truly dependent on that, but it's secondary. When you access that, you will change the world to some extent.

When you access that dimension within yourself, even if you do not specifically create something, because every human who comes into contact with you, you will affect, whether they know it or not, you will affect every human you come into contact with, even just buying a coffee in the coffee shop. If every time you interact with another human, that dimension is present, that makes a whole, a huge difference to the world, because there's a kind of transmission happens, one could almost say. It's minute, but it's there.

And any human contact then becomes an opportunity for you not only to do whatever this human contact is, whatever the purpose for this human contact is. So that's the external purpose. But then there's a deeper purpose of human, the recognition of the other in their being.

Can only about two seconds, three seconds, maybe. It makes an enormous difference. And then each time you interact, that dimension is present.

And that becomes the main reason for interacting with other humans. So every practical situation that leads you to that particular interaction, buying or selling something or asking for information, or as a teacher, teaching or whatever it may be, hopefully you're good at what you're doing. If you're a hairdresser, it's important that you have learned your craft and you do a good job.

But when you discover that there is something more important, even than that, let's just take one example, your hairdressing craft is important, because people will feel better when they do a good job, and they probably will be unhappy when you don't. So that is of relative importance, but was of absolute importance, the connection on the being level with the other human while you are talking to them, doing something. And again, never tell anybody this secret and say, do you know that I'm connecting with you at a deeper level?

Not a good idea. It just happens. And even if they don't notice it, that's fine.

Perhaps something within them does notice it. Also, you become more popular in whatever you do if you recognize the other in their essence. In addition to having the interaction on a personal level, you recognize the other in their essence.

Then you will become very popular because humans love to be recognized. They can sense it. They love it.

Please recognize me. They all want it, but it happens very rarely. They want to be recognized.

There's something within them, most of them, unless their ego is incredibly dense, can happen too. Something within them responds, and all they know is that they like you. They don't know why they like you.

Of course, it's not the person really that they like. It's something deeper than the person. They get self-reflection back from them.

And so, for example, if you're a salesperson, let's say you're selling a car, cars, second-hand car salesman, they don't have a good reputation, but let's say you're a good one. How do you interact with the other? Are you excessively focused on the outcome?

That means you get upset if they don't buy the car. You get upset. There are many people like that.

If the deal doesn't happen, they don't like you anymore because you were only a means to an end to them. You were not even there as a human being. You're just a means to an end.

And if the end is not fulfilled, they don't like you anymore. But a good one, if you're present, you love this person regardless of whether they buy that car or not. And if they don't, that's fine.

You just spend an hour talking about it. And then they say, well, no, I don't think I'll get it. Okay, that doesn't make any difference.

You're fine. That's fine. You're perfectly fine.

If you change your mind, let me know. And most likely, the person will change their mind. And the next day they call you and says, because they like you so much.

They say, okay, I'll buy it. But that is not why you do it. You don't do it to achieve something through it.

That's just a secondary thing that happens. That is not the purpose. I could do a workshop, how to become a good salesperson.

And of course, the answer is self-realization. Oh, okay. Enough reading from the Bible today for the day, but that's fine.

More people have submitted questions from streaming audience. Let's start with a difficult question. Eckhart, you said we cannot deny the world.

The world has a function and a purpose. You also said the world will challenge us to become more aware. What is the function or purpose of becoming more aware?

Oh, how does that emoji go? I like these emojis. I like the ego emojis, the one with sunglasses.

So what is the purpose of becoming so? The purpose of the world is to awaken you, bring about awareness. But what's the purpose of it?

Well, we start at the simplest level. It makes your life more pleasant and much easier. I thought it was going to be a profound answer.

Oh, yeah, well, let's add by making your life more pleasant and easier, it makes other people's lives, people around you also more pleasant and much easier. Let's add another one. It sounds a little bit like a cliché, but it's true.

It makes the world a better place. One could go on and talk about the ultimate purpose of the universe and the ultimate destiny of human beings in a transcendent dimension. But perhaps we don't need to go there right now.

It's quite good enough for the time being. There's more to it, of course, awareness. Sometimes my answers are too long, so it's good to keep it a little shorter.

There have been times when the answer took an hour to one question. It's a funny story. I was interviewed just before Covid, and recently again, but just before Covid, this very popular man on YouTube, Russell Brand, and he's a great talker.

He's great at using language and talking. And I'm told, well, he noticed it too. He said, I asked you a question, and the answer took 40 minutes.

But he's a lovely, lovely guy. This is by Sue. So Sue asks, when you talk about going deep, really deep, but not so that you are asleep, I'm wondering where trance states fall into that continuum.

Dancing, drumming, deep meditation states can put one in a deep state where one is highly aware of the inner state, but not of the outer reality until returning from the trance state to waking consciousness. Is this state touching the deep state that I'm talking about? So is that like the trance state when you become unaware of the world?

There may be different kinds of trance states, so perhaps one cannot generalize, but it is true that one can sometimes go so deep into presence or pure awareness that the outer world falls away, and all is left that would be in deep meditation. And all that's left is then this, we cannot be described, it's a, just what's left is presence. That's all, just intense presence.

There's a deep sense of aliveness in it, also joy. And that is why in Indian spirituality, that state is described as sat-cit-ananda, three words, you string them together as one, which means, sat means being, cit, c-h-i-t is consciousness, ananda is joy or bliss. So that state when you are one with the one, so to speak, is being, consciousness, bliss, sat-cit-ananda, it is the deep realization of being itself, which is consciousness, and that is inherently joyful realization.

That can happen if you can sit anywhere, close your eyes, go deep, go within, let go of all thinking, remain alert and present, and then what remains is just pure consciousness. Is that a trance state? I don't know, if you want to describe it like that, you could.

Often I, in nature, when I, when I first experienced it many, many years ago, I would sit on a bench, let's say it was in London, or, by talking about it, I'm going into it, so I said, I don't want to disappear, but it's happening. It's so nice, I don't want to come out of it. And then after a while I came out, opened my eyes, and was again conscious of whatever was here, there, and I had the impression that all the sense-perceived world was a diluted version of what I just realized within, in its pure form.

So there was a pure form of being, and then all the world is a diluted version of the same thing. And I even had this weird thing that came to me, I said, this is not a good analogy by people who are vegans, or who are lactose intolerant, but I'll say it anyway. This is the cream, and this is the skimmed milk.

So is that a trance state? Perhaps it could be described as trance. I don't know what people who are engaged in dancing, for example, Sufi dancing, whirling dervishes with their long skirts, it looks wonderful, and I'm sure it stops their minds.

You can't go whirling around for an hour and still be thinking, so it certainly stops your mind. Or drumming can also, drumming, if you keep drumming, that will also stop your mind if you just go. And who knows where you go, I haven't done, I haven't tried that.

So, but it does sound like, yes, depends how one uses language, you could describe it as trance, but then the main thing is then not to be confined to the realization of presence by going so deeply within that the world disappears. The art of living requires you to have one foot in both worlds. You have one foot in the being dimension, but you have the other foot in this dimension here.

So you can have, you are balanced, you don't lose yourself out here, and also you don't disappear in there, at least not yet. You don't disappear there into being, and you don't lose yourself in the doing dimension. And so then you can be, one could say, you can then be present within and without.

And that is the art, is to be present within within and present without. And so when, as you're present within and without, when you are engaged in the outer world, first step, simple perception of the outer world, like a passive observer, then it's still relatively easy to feel the awareness behind the perception or, or one could say to sense the essence of yourself as a consciousness that is perceiving this world, it's a good practice. And then you are in a relatively passive state, you're just contemplating, that's easier than when you start doing things, then that is a bit more of a challenge to maintain the, the balance between being and doing, because the more you're engaged in doing, the more the gravitational pull of doing will try to pull you out of your connectedness with the being dimension, and so you can lose yourself in, for example, doing through speaking. And you can easily see how people, the moment they start talking, something else takes them over, which is the conditioned mind, the moment they start formulating sentences, and especially if they talk about something that you feel is important, some matter that's really important, this is so important, and then you can see that they're being taken over completely by their mind, and then they're like, you know, they're not there anymore, it's just the egoic mind talking, and amplified by some emotion, usually not a pleasant emotion. So easy to lose yourself when you start interacting with other humans.

So the easiest is, and it's a good practice, contemplating the world around you. The next step is while you are moving, walking, presence through movement, walking, doing this, then simple actions, stay present while performing simple everyday actions. That's good, you can do that.

And then the next step is simple human interactions, buying something in a store, going to the cashier, asking somebody for information, oh, that's not too bad. And then you go on to more difficult things, when things are being discussed at work, or you're having a discussion with a friend about politics, okay, then it's getting more difficult now, but you've been practicing already before, so it should be a little easier. And then you're trying to call, you're trying to call the airline because your suitcase hasn't arrived, and you cannot speak to a human, so that's a good practice, you're waiting, can you still get connected there without, okay, yes.

And then the most difficult is meeting your family members at Thanksgiving Day. Not for everybody, but for quite a few, because there you have the old patterns, the past that people carry, that they project onto you, old responses, and so on. People with whom you share a lot of past is often more of a challenge to stay present with people with whom you share a lot of past, rather than a stranger that you meet in the street, that's relatively easy, because the person with whom you share a lot of past, this person will project the image they have built up in their minds of you, unless they're really present, they're probably not, but they will project the image they've built up in their minds of who you are, or the image built up over 20, 30 years or more, and so they're not, in many cases, they're not really seeing you anymore, they relate to you through the mental image they have of you. And until recently, perhaps, you had a mental image through which you saw them, and perhaps remnants, even though you are present, remnants of this mental image and the patterns associated with it is still active, so you have the past trying to reassert itself when you interact and trying to obscure the present, when you interact with people with whom you share a lot of past, the old wants to take over, and that's a good challenge, a wonderful challenge, when you meet difficult family members, perhaps everybody has some, so Thanksgiving is a good one, Christmas is another, or some people with their parents, or parents with their grown-up children, my mother doesn't understand me, they say, well, if she did understand you, would that make any difference to you? I need my mother to understand what I'm all about, well, do you? That reminds me of Byron Katie, is that thought true?

Do I need my mother to understand me? She said, maybe not. I became very happy when I let go of the need for my mother to understand me, then it was fine, I could allow her to be in a state of not understanding me, we could still be loving, I just had to listen to her constant words about, you should sort out your life.

And you had so much, you threw it all away. Why didn't you complete your PhD? It was stupid, and you inherit it from your dad, I know that.

But the end of the story is a happy one, because my mother was still alive, when I, in the eyes of the world, became successful. And suddenly, oh. So I'm very glad my mother died, knowing that her son had succeeded in the world.

Thank you, with that, I will leave you.

Eckhart Tolle The Spaces Between Thoughts [59c1bedb-d31d-4aee-a141-2b86b547048c]

Spaces between thoughts. In this podcast, Eckhart leads a live meditation on pausing our thoughts without suppressing them. Eckhart says it's more important to be aware of one's self as presence than to get lost in the mind.

With practice, gradually the spaces between thoughts increase and more spaciousness grows within. Our lives become more peaceful and we move closer to a feeling of liberation.

Welcome. Let's see if you can let go of thinking without suppressing thinking, but simply treat any thought that may arise as just a thought while we're here during our live meditation. Treat any thought that arises as just a thought and no more than a thought.

In other words, don't become too interested in any thought that may arise. Become uninterested in thought while we're here. Or in other words, don't go along with every thought.

Don't get drawn into every thought that arises. Don't follow it where it wants to take you and then you go, and then internally you're off. The thought comes in and you follow it.

It has a pulling power and then it pulls your attention into it, which is conscious attention. It goes into thought and off you go. You might still be sitting here.

You will still be sitting here, probably, but internally you go off into following some kind of thought. You lose presence. You're not aware of yourself as the presence anymore.

You're only aware of the thought and you go off. And if you don't follow every thought, but just if it does arise, there it is, you remain aware as the observing presence, which is more important than the thought. The awareness, the presence, which is who you are in your essence, is more important than the thought.

It is more important to be aware of that awareness, to be aware of yourself as the awareness, as the presence, than to get involved in thought. And then you may find that sometimes, or increasingly, the space, spaces, I prefer the singular, the space between thoughts gets longer. There's more space.

There's more spaciousness then within you. More spaces between thoughts. And of course, we are practicing that here, but it should not be confined to a time period when you do your meditation.

But throughout your life, you can become aware of spaces between thoughts. And you can become aware of those moments, which may be getting longer when you're not thinking. Your ability to perceive clearly without interpretation, attaching labels, labeling things and people, this ability grows.

And then you can find that in your daily life, you're partly engaged in thinking and partly just dwelling in the awareness. And ultimately, they don't have to be separate states. Even while you're thinking, there can still be an awareness in the background.

And there's a noticeable difference in the way in which you deal with things, talk to people, between those two states of being totally drawn into thought and being able to, in daily interactions, being able to use the mind, which you need to speak and so on. You use the mind, but you're not totally 100% identified with it. So when you are engaged in a conversation or a discussion, you put forward your point of view or whatever it is, but you're not totally drawn into the thought.

You express what you have to express clearly and strongly if necessary. And yet you still know yourself as the awareness behind the thought. So there's no self-identification with thought.

You don't get upset, disturbed by your thoughts or somebody else's thoughts. You no longer get aggressive or defensive when somebody questions the validity of your thought, thoughts. You no longer identify with mental positions, but you can still have mental positions.

You don't necessarily say, I have no opinions anymore about anything. I'm so advanced spiritually that I have no opinion about anything anymore. That is not necessary because you exist both as the form, the human form, physical and mental form, and more fundamentally, you exist as the formless consciousness presence.

So you don't need to totally deny your form. It has been tried in some spiritual traditions. The Buddha tried it for several years, the story goes, and it's probably true.

He virtually tried to annihilate himself by eating almost nothing, spending long, long periods in silence, having no interactions on a personal level, no longer being there as a person. And then after a few years, he realized that's not the true path to enlightenment. Then he started eating again, function more normally.

And out of that realization came his famous teaching of the middle way. Buddhism is sometimes described as the middle way, which is more than just the middle way between asceticism and sensory intelligence. The middle way is also, and more fundamentally, the middle between form and formlessness.

So you're halfway honoring your form, but not deriving your identity from your form. Form includes thinking, thought forms. It's the body and it's the mind, the thinking mind.

Not deriving your identity from your body, from your whatever mind activity in the form of thought is happening in you. Realizing who you are beyond form and honoring the form as long as it's there, knowing full well that it has a limited lifespan. The physical form has a limited lifespan.

And if you survive on some other level as a soul presence, a form of consciousness after the body goes, it's still form. The realization who you are beyond form is available here and now. Don't have to wait until you die because then you still exist on a level of thought form formation.

Death does not bring you to the realization necessarily of the formless. Although you might get glimpses of it, but then you run away. Being in touch with the formless dimension, the stillness, presence, the thoughtless awareness, being it also changes who you are on the level of form.

It has an effect. It affects that also. It affects the way in which you engage in activities.

It affects the way in which you interact with other people. It affects the energy field that emanates from you because if you are completely identified with the form, physical and mental form of a personality, then your life is not going to be all that fulfilling, pleasant, peaceful, happy, never happy for very long, easily upset, easily disturbed, easily anxious and depressed, never fully here, always looking to the next moment to be better than this moment, looking for salvation in the future, which never comes because when it comes, it's the present moment. All those are the characteristics of a person who is completely identified with form.

I forgot to mention also there's a need for enemies that's part of that unconscious, ultimately unconscious state of being identified with form. You need enemies in some form in order to keep up and strengthen your form identity so that other people, you can unconsciously seek conflict. You don't know.

You're not going to say, I'm seeking conflict. You say, no, no. But when you observe yourself or somebody else, you can more easily see it in somebody else, how they often seek conflict, how they complain a lot about other people, what they did or failed to do or should have done.

It complains about situations so you can make a situation into an enemy also because it's all bad. And by doing that, you strengthen your form identity, ego, and you don't know that that's what you're doing. That it becomes your reality.

Nations do it. Politicians do it. You can look at it on the collective level.

Politicians of one country demonizing politicians of another country, or even demonizing an entire country. It's well known that often dictators and, but also other politicians, they need to have the external enemy and they need their people to believe in it in order to remain in power. So again, that's identification with form.

Form is not only the individualized form. There's also identification with a collective form and the collective ego. And the collective ego has similar characteristics to the personal ego.

And it does the same kind of thing, except with more disastrous consequences. So just as with the individual, the middle way applies, and that's wisdom to live in that way, to honor the form that you are, might be even improve it. For the individual, that means acquiring new skills, learning new things, exploring, looking after your body, nutrition, exercise, having a shower in the morning.

It's honoring the form without being identified with it because you're identified with the essence. You are the essence. In the same way, a country or collective does not need to completely deny its form identity.

It's a middle way again between honoring the form, your own culture. You can honor your own culture without making others into enemies. And of course you can appreciate other cultures in the same way you appreciate other people and their achievements, what they can do.

And they know the middle way. Essentially, we are here. Our meditation is of course to deepen the awareness, to deepen our realization of who I am.

And I speak for the one I, to deepen the awareness of who I am beyond form. So that when you say I, when you use the word I, it has two meanings. It can either refer to the person or it can refer to the essence of who you are, the timeless being, the unconditioned consciousness, the transcendent I.

To bring it to very practical, the great practice, as I've mentioned before, is to look around wherever you are and perceive whatever is there without labeling it mentally. That requires an alertness behind your sense perception. An alertness that could be compared to the state of listening to a faint sound that's somewhere and you would go.

In order to perceive a very distant sound, I gave an example in the New Earth. I won't tell it now. Some of you may remember it.

When the master asks the disciple to listen to a distant sound of a mountain stream, and at first the disciple can't hear it. And then he becomes more alert and finally says, yes, I can hear it. The master told him to do that in answer to his question, in answer to the disciple's question, what really is Zen?

And the master said, listen to the sound of that mountain stream. What mountain stream? I'm thinking about Zen.

And by asking him to do that, he forced him, so to speak, or the question forced him to step out of thought into a higher alertness. At first, he didn't hear the mountain stream because he was thinking. Most of his attention was absorbed by thought.

And then when he couldn't hear it, and then the master said, listen more carefully. And then he had to step out of thought. He had to become more alert.

And there it was. He had risen above thought. There's no tension in that.

You don't go, it's just like turning up the light on a dimmer switch. And of course, then the disciple realized, well, that's the essence of Zen. The master just explained it without any word.

And so in the same way, because in that state, there's no ego anymore. There's no unconscious thinking. Use that in the same way.

You can look around the room, or whether you're inside or outside, and there may be a moment when you don't, you're not engaged in any kind of doing. You can just look around, or look and listen, take in the sense perceptions, and realize how wonderful it is to perceive things without attaching labels. How alive, how unusually alive things are, including inanimate objects, but even more so plants, flowers, the sky.

How unusually alive these things are when you're not perceiving them through the screen of conceptualization. And there's a deep knowing behind the awareness. It's very different from how the mind knows things through thinking.

So there are two modalities of knowing. One is through thinking, conceptual knowing, there's a place for that, you need it. But there's another way of knowing things.

You can look at a plant, you can know it conceptually, and you can know it through awareness, in which case sensing becomes something that you cannot necessarily explain in words. You can sense its aliveness. You see, or you know, its beauty beyond a superficial sense of beauty.

Beauty as the essence shining through, something that's beyond the sense perception is shining through, so to speak. Sometimes people who take certain drugs get glimpses of it because the drug switches off the conceptual mind, but then you always fall back to your usual state. So those things can be an opening for people who are very much mind identified, but then you have to do away with the crutches and just become aware.

So another way of putting it, sometimes you are a person and then you shift more to the awareness and you become the awareness. You can look at any scene, a room, or whatever it is, as a person, in which case you have a certain mental commentary about what you see, mental associations, you like or you dislike something, that would look nice in my place, or oh, my aunt gave me that. Oh, that's a lovely plant.

Oh, does it have enough? Do I need to give it water now? All those things are fine.

You are there perceiving as a person and then when there's no thinking, just an awareness behind the sense perception, you're not really a person anymore. There's no past. There's a shift from being a person to being the awareness and that liberates you from being trapped in the person.

You can still honor the personal sense of self without being obsessed with it, identified completely with it. We'll have some questions.

So I understand that our primary purpose is to dwell in the unmanifested more frequently than in the manifested. I guess my question is, if we successfully do that, how does that impact the events that occur on the manifested level?

[Speaker 1] (19:34 - 34:21)

Oh, thank you. To rephrase the question just a little bit, in what way does the connectedness with that dimension change the way in which I live my life, which I act in this life, and in which I interact with other people? Because it really always comes down to you.

You are humanity. So if you look at how does it affect me? How does it affect one person?

And if you already have had some openings into that dimension, you might already have had some glimpses, certain changes in which manifested in your interactions with others. I don't know, I may ask you in a minute if you have already experienced some changes in your life through becoming more conscious in that way of that depth dimension in yourself. You're no longer dominated by the ego, which means the reactivity on which the ego thrives begins to subside, which means when things happen, people do this or that around you, you no longer react in the old way, which comes from your conditioning, which means other people's state of consciousness can no longer control your state of consciousness.

When you're unconscious, you're dependent on what happens around you for your state of consciousness. When somebody is unconscious around you, is angry, you become angry. That's a reaction.

If you feel offended by something somebody said, or somebody did not respect you enough, the ego is very anxious about being respected. And so you feel somebody ignored you or disrespected you. There's enormous reactivity in the ego.

Some very unconscious egos might attack you physically if you don't respect them.

These are people like who will say to you, hey, I'm talking to you. That's an ego.

And you know, the next step is going to hit you. That's an, no, I'm talking to you means you're not giving me, I want your attention. I need your attention.

You better give me your attention because otherwise something's going to happen. These are very unconscious egos, but slightly less unconscious versions of the same ego exists in every ego. That's the reactivity that subsides.

So you're no longer at the mercy of another state of consciousness. So an angry person does not make you angry or whatever behavior somebody manifests does not cause a reaction in you. And it improves your ability to respond.

However, the difference between reaction and response is, as you probably know, reaction comes from the conditioned self, which is the ego. It reacts according to its conditioning. Response is the ability to be present in a situation and then to take appropriate action by facing the situation.

Remember, I use the word looking at the situation and then action comes, responding to the situation, not out of the old conditioning. So that's one way. Something else happens around you.

You lose something, you miss the train, you miss the bus, something goes wrong. Your inner state is no longer at the mercy of external conditions. So you might still have a slight fluctuation.

Let's say a pleasant event makes you happy. And when something very unpleasant happens, you feel that you feel, oh, it doesn't touch the deepest level of your being. It doesn't touch the essence of who you are.

So your inner state becomes no longer subject to the changing world of external conditions. You're not at the mercy of what happens or doesn't happen. In the egoic state, you have expectations.

You go into every day, into every situation, you'll meet somebody, or you have a business situation. The mind has expectations. And the expectations are very important to the egoic mind.

It wants things to be in this or that way. And usually there's a clash between the reality of what is and the expectations of your mind of how things should be, how people should behave. And then you have the reality of they do behave.

That clash between the expectations in your mind, which in the egoic state you are identified with, and the reality of what is, is very painful. And people experience every day the painful gap between what they experience as their reality and what their mind says how things should be. People shouldn't be like that, but they are.

And so that disappears so you can approach things in that openness, your interaction with every human being. And this is perhaps the most important thing. When you no longer come from the egoic, mind-made self, you will experience, and many of you know that, not perhaps as a permanent experience, but you have experienced it from time to time at least, that you can have a general sense of goodwill or benevolence that flows to everybody that you meet, that the ego does never have.

When the ego meets another human being, it either wants something from that human being, wants to use him for its own purposes, the ego's purposes, or the ego feels it needs to establish superiority. The moment it meets somebody, they say, am I inferior or superior to this other human being? The ego immediately judges itself.

If your ego feels inferior, you feel not up to meeting that person. You want to be superior, but you feel inferior, either because this person is more knowledgeable than you, or more famous than you, or is better looking than you, or is physically stronger than you, and you feel kind of, the ego feels diminished. But it wants to be superior, so it might try something else in some other area, it might be superior.

Even little children do that. When the ego begins to develop, the little child says, let's say one child's dad has a Mercedes car, and this child's dad has only an old VW, and this child brags about my dad's car, look, so this is the ego trying to diminish the other person in order to feel bigger. This happens already to children, but the little child, if the ego is clever enough, in the little child, the one whose dad only has the old VW, the ego thinks, okay, and then suddenly he says something like, well, my uncle knows somebody who has a Ferrari that's four times as expensive as your dad's car, and twice as fast, and I've seen it, I've touched it.

Okay, what, oh dear. And this is the egoic games, they're very obvious in the case of children, they're a little bit more sophisticated in the case of adults, but basically the same, so this, the search for superiority, the fear of inferiority when you meet somebody, wanting to use the other person, or feeling the other, threatened by the other person for some reason, because he or she might diminish you in some way, then you become antagonistic, but in whatever case, there's always some kind of business that you have with the other, there's never a true connection with the other, you might be play acting, you might be playing a role that I truly care for you, of course you have to say it, because it's not there, there's a reality, or in some cases, there's a complete lack of interest in the other, you completely ignore him, he doesn't exist for you, because he or she doesn't fit into your plans, the egoic plans of how this person cannot do anything for me, so I'm totally not interested in talking to you, you can't do anything for me, you can often judge a person's state of consciousness by how he or she treats people who can do nothing for them, and you can see the ego plays roles according to who they are interacting with, I mentioned it in A New Earth, let's say, if you can observe it in yourself, that's a good thing, you don't beat yourself up, if you find yourself behaving differently when you speak to the CEO of this corporation, or you meet the Pope, or you meet whoever, you meet the richest man in the world, Bill Gates, and you meet him, how do you talk to him, and how you talk to the janitor in your building, is there any difference, or how do you talk to a man in the street, if there are differences in the way you talk, then you're playing roles, the ego is playing roles according to who it's interacting with, when the ego does not operate anymore, you operate from the depth dimension, everybody is treated exactly the same, and you no longer look at human beings as to whether they can do something for you, or how you can use them, or, and most importantly, you no longer compare yourself as either being superior or inferior to anybody else, and that's incredible liberation, I remember when I was in my 20s, I was so uneasy, my ego was so uneasy, a lot of the time I felt inferior, and I had to compensate with all kinds of things, quoting obscure books that others didn't know, I didn't have a lot of physical strength, so that couldn't, my ego couldn't identify with physical strength, for example, or good looks, I didn't have either, so that didn't work, but I could be, I could be more knowledgeable than somebody else, so if there was this big guy coming in, and I felt small, that I could at least show him that I am so much more intelligent and knowledgeable than he was, so that occasionally that worked, but nevertheless, I was in a continuous state of unease, that was my normal state, continuously feel threatened in one sense of identity, that's all egoic, that all changes, so your relationship with another human being is totally different, there is a true meeting, and since the larger section of your life is to do with how you relate to human beings, that makes up a largest percentage of your life, is how you relate to others, a fundamental transformation comes into that, in that sense that you are now able to truly meet another human being, and have a true interaction, whether you have a long lasting relationship, or just a brief interaction, doesn't matter, there's no longer the search for superiority or inferiority, you no longer feel superior to anybody, the ego doesn't like that, and you no longer feel inferior to anybody, when you come from your essence, so all personal relationships, or any kind of relationships with others, become much more harmonious, and then whatever you wanted, you want to achieve in life, is no longer dictated by the ego, the ego's neediness, but whatever you want to achieve in life, comes to you from a deeper level of your being, so you still have goals, but they are not egoically motivated goals, they are realizations of what it is that wants to be created through you, and the way in which you then approach these goals, and work towards these goals, is, as we mentioned before, in a state of enjoyment of the doing of it, which the ego doesn't, can't do, it can get excited about something for a little while, but as I mentioned earlier, the moment an obstacle comes in, it gets upset, and negative, and aggressive, or withdraws completely, so all your relationships flow harmoniously, there is a feeling of goodwill towards other human beings, no matter what their position is, no matter how they fit into your life, or whether they fit into your life at all, or useful to you, you don't even have these terms anymore in your head, are they useful to me, and so, when you love humans like that, in the deeper sense, humans will do much more for you, but that's not why it happens, it's just a byproduct of being free of ego, humans will come to you, be as helpful as they can, because they can sense the benevolence that's coming from you, which is genuine, it's not an act, there's a genuine sense of connectedness, and you immediately connect with the other, so can you see now, how that transforms your life, when that dimension is present, my question to you, have you already had, if only small experiences of that, glimpses, glimpses, but it fades, right, when you know, you get back out in the world, and things start to happen, and you interact with people, and you know, it's easy, and it's just like, you know, a lot of the things that you say, I know them, right, in my spirit, I know that they're true, right, but it's almost like, when you get out in the world, to some extent, you forget, it feels like you forget.

Yes, and of course, you forget, because you live, when you enter the world again, whatever it is, business, any business, you enter that energy field, which in most cases, is still ego dominated, so you forget, you get drawn back into the way in which everybody else interacts, so it requires great alertness, it's a big challenge, but we need the challenges, so to go back, some people might think, if I could live withdrawn in a little cabin, out in nature, this is a lovely, great fantasy, isn't it, and some people might achieve that, I could live in a cabin, where people leave me alone, I could only interact with people that I like, or nobody at all, and just interact with animals, they are much less problematic than humans, I'll just live with my dog, and the cat, and my flowers, and the fruit trees in the backyard, and I have just a regular, every month, I have an income that comes from somewhere, and then I could really get into the spiritual work, and make progress, and that is not necessarily true, and I would actually suggest it is untrue, now, you might make progress for a while, the first month will be great, the first six months will be great, but if there were truly an absence of challenges, except very minor ones, maybe an occasional mosquito, or something like that, in the absence of challenges, your level of alertness would decrease, most probably, unless you are one of the exceptions, there's always exceptions, so you would be like a flower or plant that grows in a greenhouse, protected in a nursery, protected from the elements, and of course, it grows faster, it can grow, but it doesn't have that inner strength, because the tree, even I hear from gardeners, that some gardeners, even when a shoot comes out, which is sprouting out of the soil, in some cases, they put more soil on top of it, and by struggling to get to the second layer of soil, the plant gets stronger, and so, it's only when you are forced through challenges, to really be present, you need the challenge, and your challenge is to go back into the world, and be surrounded by the egoic state, energy field, where you work, and bring in this new energy, and then, it may well, it's spread, it tends to affect others in some small ways, at first, and then, sometimes, bigger ways, because state of consciousness spreads, an unconscious human being spreads unconsciousness, you can go to a committee meeting, or any kind of meeting, if there's one deeply unconscious person, pulls everybody else down into unconscious reactivity, and one conscious person can also make a huge difference, for example, in a group environment, so that's your challenge, knowing that there's a huge gravitational pull of the old consciousness still there, the egoic consciousness, it's been around for a long time.

[Speaker 2] (38:21 - 38:29)

It seems like part of the challenge is that operating in that way in the world, or in some personal relationships, can be perceived as a weakness.

Yes, that's true, but that wouldn't be a misinterpretation of somebody's ego, because you're actually connected to a power that's far greater than ego, when you come from non-ego, but sometimes, to the ego, that looks like weakness. I remember some movies, going back a long time, there was a series about a Kung Fu master, or something like that, and he was very meek and mild, he always went about like that, and everybody took him to be very weak, and he had a little flute, a little instrument, and he would play it, and in every episode, he would meet these big guys, and often he would meet evil big guys, and they all said, who is this weakling, and then he always resolved difficult situations, often involving violence, on the part of these unconscious people, and in the decisive moment, he would suddenly go into his Kung Fu mode, and he would go, and then immediately, he went back to peace, and he would play his flute. A similar device was used in the old, there was this TV thing about, he was a detective, maybe in San Francisco, he was always wearing this old raincoat, Columbo, and so he looked like he was kind of almost stupid, because he did not project himself, he did not project any ego, he just went about like this, and everybody thought he was weak and stupid, and the satisfying thing in every episode was, that these criminals all looked down on him, they were so superior to this stupid guy, and in the end, of course, he caught them, so he did not project an ego, so that is interesting.

Thank you.

Eckhart Tolle The Stillness Within [1f0accc6-c20e-48e6-a651-3708dc7b54d2]

[Speaker 2] (0:00 - 0:35)

The stillness within. In this podcast, Eckhart takes us through two live meditations about the stillness within. He says finding the transcendent dimension is the only thing that will satisfy us.

It's not something we can achieve. It's something we discover in the here and now. When we say I am aware of stillness, it means I am aware of the I am, which is the essence of all identity.

Eckhart believes it's stillness that will save the world.

I just want to remind you that we are not here to do anything. We are here to, one could say, experience something rather than do something. And what we are here to experience, and even that's not quite right, I'll come to that in a minute.

What we're here to experience is very subtle, but very powerful. Whatever name we give that reduces it. It's not that.

It's very vast. For the time being, let's just call it stillness. Now when I said we're here to experience something, that's not absolutely right, but whenever we use language, we are bound to falsify that which goes far beyond concepts.

It's not so much that we're here to experience something as to find that which underlies all experience, a dimension that is deeper than any experience, becoming aware of that within yourself. So some of you may have written down or have in your mind goals you want to achieve in life, and that's good. It's unlikely that achieving stillness will figure prominently as one of your goals or even number one, and yet it's the most important thing in your life.

But it's a good thing that it's not on your list of goals to be achieved, because if you make it into a goal to be achieved, it implies that you need the future to achieve stillness, which is of course true for all other goals, but not for that which we call stillness. Temporarily we just call it, for the time being, stillness. If you make it into a goal to be achieved, you place it into the future and you'll never find it, because it's inseparable from the present moment, the now, the now that usually people are not aware of as an actual presence.

And here we have another pointer we could use instead of stillness, and that is presence. And as the word implies, presence is inseparable from the present, the now. Now, for most people, yet the now is not a living realization.

They're only aware of what happens in the now, and even that's not quite right. They're not really aware of it. They are reactive towards it, and they are identified with it.

They are identified with their thoughts that arise. They are reactive to what happens outside. So I'm here just talking a little bit, giving you pointers with every sentence.

Every word is really a pointer towards that. And I trust that as we sit here together, giving up the idea that we are here to do something, as we sit here together, a realization arises within you that is the living presence within. The thinking mind stops for a moment, and there's just spacious awareness, stillness.

You haven't gone to sleep. You've become still without falling into dreamless sleep, without falling into dreams, to just something has arisen that usually you would have overlooked. And our meditation here, if we want to call it that, is to become aware of the space within, another pointer, the stillness, the space.

Becoming totally at ease with the present moment, a very rare state for most humans. Usually they're only at ease when some desire has just been fulfilled, and then they're at ease for a little while, a few minutes, perhaps. Or they're at ease because they're so tired, they're moving towards sleep.

So I'm here to lead you into that realization of inner stillness, of that dimension within. Lead you through words, which are only pointers, and through the demonstration of presence, which you can sense if you pay attention to the underlying stillness that is here as I speak. Behind the words, between the words.

Tune into that. Nothing personal in that. Nothing to do with this person.

And as you tune into that, the same dimension arises within you, which again has nothing to do with that person that you think you are. So there is a dimension that transcends the person. It's in this person, and it's in that person.

The dimension that transcends the personal and the person, and everything to do with the person. The personal history, the personal problems, the life situation, the ups and downs of the life situation. There will always be there the ups and downs of the life situation.

But the miracle is finding the transcendent dimension within you, without which life cannot be a pleasant experience, not for long. It cannot be satisfying, not for long, never for long. So without the realization of the transcendent dimension, the formless, spacious stillness, nothing will satisfy you.

It's frustrating. Life is very frustrating without that dimension, if you haven't found it. But of course the dimension is there in everyone.

It's not something that you need to achieve. You can't achieve it, let alone achieve it in the future. You can discover it here and now within.

It's lurking there underneath all the doing, underneath all the thinking. It's always there, but completely ignored by most people. If you're comfortable with theistic terms, you could say God is always present, but completely ignored by most people.

Because if God has any meaning, it is the transcendent dimension of life. It transcends, means it is beyond whatever arises in life, beyond thought, beyond physical forms, beyond form. It transcends form.

It is beyond past and future. It transcends time. It has nothing to do with time.

It is presence, eternal presence. And presence, eternal presence or eternity, is not some weird abstract philosophical concept. It can be, and it points to a living realization.

So the most precious thing to find in life is that there is stillness inside you, always. You just have to pay attention to it. But then the strange thing is that when you become aware of stillness, you realize that the awareness and the stillness are not two, but one.

So it's only when we use language, we say, I'm now, I'm aware of stillness. You put it into language. So when you're aware of stillness, there is a knowing where concepts are not needed, words are not needed, and there is no duality really.

It's only when you translate it into words, there's a duality, and you say, I'm aware of stillness. But what really happens is that awareness and stillness are a single realization. There is no subject and object in this realization.

When we talk about it, it sometimes seems that there is a subject, I am aware of stillness. I can feel the stillness inside me. When you put it into words, that's how it's, there's subject and object.

But when you look more deeply beyond words, you see that there's not me as an entity who is aware of stillness as something in me. It's only when we use language and that duality appears. When I'm aware of stillness, really the awareness and the stillness are one.

And the I am, when you say, I am aware of stillness, you could say, now in this moment, I am aware of stillness. That's through words. It's not the actual truth of it, not quite, it's not how it is, because the I am, the awareness, and the stillness are all one.

So when you say, I'm aware of stillness, it really means, I am aware of I am. I am aware of the I am, that I am. There's a hint of that in the Old Testament.

When God is asked, what's your name? God says, I am that I am. The essence of all identity is I am.

So you could say, instead of, I'm aware of stillness, you can say, I'm aware that I am. Or you could say, the I am that I am is aware of itself. So instead of saying, I'm aware of stillness, you can also say, the awareness that I am is aware of itself.

Because I am and awareness is one. And I am and awareness and stillness are one. The stillness is aware of itself.

The awareness is aware of itself. Duality collapses in that realization. Because duality applies to the world of form.

That which underlies the world of form, the transcendent, the divine, if you're comfortable with that word, transcends duality. Because duality is the beginning of multiplicity of billions of forms. But what is the source of the billions of life forms?

The one, the source out of which all life forms arise. And all life forms are an emanation arising from the one source of all life, the one life that transcends all forms of life. It's beyond all forms of life, the one.

The alpha and the omega, the beginning and the end, the timeless, eternal one. And that is not some abstract philosophical concept, although sometimes it becomes that when people only talk about it. It's a realization within yourself because the one is within you.

It is the core, the space that is the essence of who you are. The source of all life. The timeless source of all life.

So we could say then, we're here to, not to experience, but to realize the I am that I am. So let's stay with that for a moment. I am.

Can you become aware of the fact that you are? That's what it is. This is one way of realizing that stillness.

Can you become aware of the fact that you are? I am. Really, we're talking about becoming aware of the being, to be.

I am. Your presence. The presence that underlies the person at this moment.

Can you sense that? Feel that? We don't have words really that are adequate.

The spaciousness of being. The stillness of being. And then you get a sense that without needing to remember your past, you get a very strong sense of the essence of your being.

The beingness of who you are. Without remembering your past. So your past ultimately has very little or virtually nothing to do with who you actually are.

Where your sense of identity arises. The sense of presence. Of aliveness.

So I am. How do you know that you are? Well, I know it.

You can't go beyond that. It knows itself. You know yourself as the very presence.

Which is not an object in your experience. It's the eternal subject of all experience. And that eternal subject of all experience knows itself.

But not conceptually. It doesn't know anything about itself. It knows itself directly.

And that is the transcendent dimension within you. Or the divine within you. And then you realize that everything that you perceive in the world of form is an emanation of that and is also divine.

But you don't know that everything in the world of form is also divine unless you find that dimension within yourself. And only from the realization of that dimension as a continuing underlying sense of presence of stillness then you can look at the world of forms and sense the divine in each form. But you can only sense the divine in each form because you sense it in yourself.

Only through the divine in yourself can you sense the divine in each form in each other human being. Including all the human beings that have no idea of the divine within themselves that you encounter. And any human being that has no idea of the essence of who they are are to a greater or lesser degree mad.

So this is the normal humans you encounter in the world. There's an overlay of madness but in essence they are divine. So that's what you see that's what you sense when you interact with them and that's what you truly relate to in others.

You can only relate to that in others because you can sense that in yourself. So to put it in very simple terms there is a stillness in you even when you talk to people and that stillness in you senses that underneath the mad mind of the other human being nothing personal in that there is also that dimension and that's what you sense in the other. But you only sense it because in the background of who you are you can sense an alive stillness.

While you listen even while you speak there's still an awareness of the I am the stillness the presence. Now many people are worried about saving the world and the only thing that can save a world that is otherwise somewhat insane is for humans to come to that self-realization the realization of who they are in essence the realization of the divine within and that's what will save the world because whatever you do then is imbued with that realization and in the absence of that realization as a continuing knowing in the background continuing sensing of presence in the absence of that whatever you do no matter how good your intentions are will have unforeseeable consequences repercussions and will create new problems let's go back for a moment to I am aware of the stillness within those three words I am aware of the stillness are all one the I am is the awareness the awareness is the stillness the I am is the stillness the stillness becomes aware of itself God becomes aware of itself here and now through this form through this form welcome this is our live meditation one obstacle to meditation especially for people who practice formal meditation regularly they may not realize although whatever method they use whatever meditation practice they use may be good potentially helpful there tends to be however always an underlying unexpressed thought feeling perhaps that you are doing a meditation you do many things every day and one of the things you do is you are doing a meditation practice I am doing my meditation practice but what is the aim of meditation it is supposed to take you into a realization of being now we live in a culture westernized culture which is not confined to geographical so called west these days westernized culture many places of the globe we are predominantly focused many people exclusively focused on doing so it seems normal that you include when you start meditating continue that practice becomes part of the idea in your head that this is something that you have to do there is a doing idea involved doing involves time, doing has an aim I am here, I want to get there or I am doing this in order to achieve that, all doing involves time so with the idea of doing comes the idea of time that you need to get somewhere with your meditation practice for example I want to become enlightened or maybe you are not as ambitious as that I want to still my mind now meditation is a practice that is meant to give you access to a particular state of consciousness I call it presence to help you realize that apart from doing and of course doing is not just external doing, running around or on the computer doing also is thinking every thought you think you are doing something you are doing, you are thinking meditation the aim of meditation is to bring you to a realization of being so to help you access another dimension within yourself it is not thinking and it is not to do with external activities but you don't go to sleep either, so it is the realization of being to become aware of your own presence so to speak of presence or your presence these are just words right now, instead of thinking we are doing something I would suggest that an alternative access point to the state of consciousness that is presence is to let go of all doing or any idea that you have to get somewhere improve yourself there is a place for that that exists on another dimension that also operates in your life getting better at things but then there is something else where any kind of doing doesn't really help I am not saying let go of all your meditation practices, if they are used correctly they can take you into being also, but for many people there is an underlying continuously arising obstacle created by the idea that you are doing something and need to get somewhere so instead of taking you into being it just creates more doing being and doing, those two dimensions need to be present and it is not just meditation is there to help you access being but in the rest of your life which is most of your life 98% of your life if you meditate a lot 95% of your life is still something else it is not the meditation

there, there needs to be a balance between being and doing not as separate things but coming together and this is why here I am not using any technique and I just want to invite you to become aware of the fact that you are I wouldn't say that you exist of course you exist but exist the word itself comes from Latin ex means out exist means to stand out now that is your body exists your psychological self with its conditioning and thought processes and emotions exist, it is there it manifests whatever is manifested not necessarily just through the senses because the more important part of you you can't see the invisible self the psychological self exists, stands out is manifested so it is not so much becoming aware of the fact that you exist but becoming aware of the underlying being that gives rise to your existence something deeper becoming aware of yourself right now as I speak of the essence of who you are not as a physical body not as a psychological entity with a past a personality conditioned by the past but is there anything deeper than your personality that is conditioned by the past, consists of all thought processes and emotions and opinions and viewpoints likes and dislikes and so on is there something else something deeper something without which all those other things could not manifest yes, you can't define it you can't understand it there is nothing to understand there if you examine your historical self, your psychological self then you may need understanding you might need to go to a psychotherapist to figure out things that you had not been aware of, your psychological self but here in that immediate realization of being I am there is no doubt about that that there is a consciousness here prior to whatever arises in that consciousness there is a presence a consciousness even when I don't think in exact it's only really when there is a moment of not thinking that I become aware of that consciousness that I am I become aware of awareness which is not how it is it's just language awareness which is who you are consciousness which is who you are becomes aware of itself there is no duality anymore can you feel yourself, your consciousness your beingness the I am without adding anything to the I am which would be your name your age, your gender your position in society, your knowledge your memories these are all things you add to I am I am is the essence if you can sense that in your daily life, in the background then you are always connected with being you are rooted in that deeper dimension then all the comings and goings in your external life and all your doings may still be important are still important, whether you gain something, you lose something whether you are healthy or ill rich or poor but then there is always something deeper and from that deeper dimension of beingness where you can sense your essential reality as that and not the psychological personality that means you have found that which is of primary importance then you deal with all the things that are of relative or secondary importance, which is everything else in your life, so you are both who you are in this world the person the historical entity the physical, psychological entity, yes you are that but more fundamentally you are the consciousness without which the person would not even be would there even be a world without a consciousness perceiving the world molecules, atoms and empty space make up this body, this room everything, wherever you are molecules, atoms and mostly empty space it is not a world at that level, it is not a room and then consciousness comes and suddenly there is a world but molecules and atoms themselves may also be just primordial manifestations of consciousness and ultimately humans will realize, first of all through spirituality your own spiritual realization at some point, perhaps even through science we are not there yet that all is consciousness that the entire universe is an expression of the one consciousness vibrating so to speak at different frequencies from so called inanimate matter to plant life to animal life to human life and other dimensions of existence in the same way water that can be solid as ice seems to have nothing to do with water it is very hard then water exists as a liquid water can also exist as a vapor the same thing at least at different frequencies one could say in consciousness, this is just an analogy for consciousness you are essentially consciousness and then there is a temporary appearance of you as a person and that is fine that is part of miracle of manifested existence where consciousness breaks up into countless streams coming all continuously from the one source to realize yourself as consciousness you need to become aware of the space between thoughts when I stop speaking for brief moments are you able to stay so present that you do not add any thought to this moment you add nothing to it there is just a sensation yes there is still if your eyes are open you can still see the screen and can see me or the image of me and hear the words or if your eyes are closed you can still hear the words but what else is there something deeper, more vital than whatever appears in your sense perceptions something without which there would be no sense perception oh yes, just a stillness at last a seemingly nothingness I like that English word nothingness the word nothing consists of no thing an apparent no thingness when you are not thinking and if you were in a place where it is totally quiet nobody is speaking and your eyes are closed you can become even more aware of the no thingness it is just a presence an underlying presence it has nothing to do with who you are on the level of the person an alive stillness and as you become familiar with that, it is not even confined to the so called inside of you you may notice that it seems to be both within and without, so the difference between within and without disappears mystics would call that the presence of God that they can suddenly sense and what is God well, you can't even speak about that ultimate source of all things but the best analogy for what God is and what your relationship with God is the best analogy for that is the sun which continuously gives forth life energy sunlight an outpouring the sun is just an analogy even the sun is not entire but it is the closest you can get it lasts for a billion years it is closest you can get to that which is eternal the sun is the source of the very warmth in your body if the sun disappeared everything would immediately within a few hours would die here so the consciousness emanates from the one source so to say I am God is both true and not true you are an extension of that one consciousness like you are a ray of sunlight temporarily appearing as a person and probably even this particular ray that temporarily appears as a person, the personal sense after death goes through a metamorphosis you don't stay as the same personality after death I would suggest that something of this particular ray survives beyond death it is not the personality and it survives until it completely merges the source itself is experiencing something through the manifested universe everything brings back something to the source like a bee brings back something to the bee hive I don't want to become too one could talk I would love to talk about it for another hour or two but it is not necessary here with the realization of yourself as consciousness in that space between two thoughts and perhaps might even be a longer space you meditate, you become aware of being and you stay aware you can look around the room your eyes are open, you are perceiving sights and sounds and yet you are not interpreting them as you would habitually do you are just there as the perceiver as the consciousness in which these things are perceived and if you can both be aware of what is there around you and of the deeper space of awareness itself then your life can be balanced between being and doing, between the manifested and the unmanifested between the world and God this presence that you sense is enormously liberating it frees you from the prison of believing that who you are fundamentally is the person to be trapped in a personal exclusively personal sense of self personal selfhood it's a terrible way to live and if you are connected with the depth dimension the being beingness presence then the person has its place can be honored and can experience and do things in this world learn new things have goals and ambitions why not?

but no longer looking for liberation through achieving this or that no longer looking for ultimate fulfillment through some idea that when I achieve this then I will be complete and happy no, just participate in the dance of existence the universe wants to create it wants expansion but why is it that so often it seems to put obstacles in the path of expansion things go wrong difficult situations difficult people loss confusion why do some people experience life as one damn thing after another why does all these things work why does life leave me alone why does expansion seem to be blocked so often if the universe wants expansion which it does the universe not only wants to expand externally it also expands internally so every obstacle potentially is a deepening within it goes in two directions so if somebody let's say a child grows up with a handicap or very difficult life situation it doesn't have to be a child or any human being encounters a huge obstacle either they overcome the obstacle on the external level or they transcend that obstacle on an inner level so this is a universal thing just to give one example let's say a child is weak gets bullied at school very unhappy because of that then that child could generate so much energy that he or she would take up martial arts go to a teacher just as it's shown in those movies and then eventually he or she can defeat the bully the energy that would not have been generated if the bully had not been there so it becomes stronger that's expansion in a way or the child is just too weak it doesn't generate expansion on that level it can never defeat the bully but the energy goes within develops other abilities perhaps the ability to be creative to think, to create and twenty years later the child that was the bully works in some menial job and the child that was bullied is a great creator that's expansion too or becomes a spiritual teacher so the universe wants to expand but it also wants you to experience obstacles to expansion which are part of the expansion it goes in two directions so welcome all the obstacles in your life the obstacles to whatever and collectively if you listen to the news continuously things go wrong dreadfully on the planet it happens to be the case that the news focuses on all the things that go wrong it doesn't focus on the things that don't go wrong so of course it's a distorted version of what life is like but undoubtedly things do go wrong humanity is being challenged sometimes through factors that seem to have nothing to do with things just come at you and other factors created by humanity's unconscious mind dysfunctional, egoic thinking and so it's only through experiencing the effects of that unconsciousness collectively if you look at humanity as a whole for a moment as one single expression of consciousness divided into billions of little entities, one huge array of consciousness divided into billions of smaller rays of consciousness one of them is you so humanity is evolving one consciousness expressing itself as a human being undergoing a process of evolution it's like birthing and gradually becoming more conscious seems to take a long time but every human being reaches a point where the consciousness accelerates and that's when you become you consciously embark on the spiritual path as you are doing that means you no longer your primary teacher is no longer suffering it may still come in but it's no longer your primary teacher you grow you awaken voluntarily without being pushed into it but you have been otherwise you wouldn't be you've had your suffering maybe a bit more but not like before and for many of you suffering is coming to an end it doesn't mean that you don't face problems anymore but you don't transform them into suffering the I am practice I am there's no doubt about that everything else could be an illusion and one way of looking at it is to say well it is a kind of illusion because nothing lasts for long everything here is impermanent be aware in your daily life of the gap between two thoughts so that your mind doesn't drag you along in an incessant stream of involuntary and compulsive thinking invite these gaps into your life by looking at something without interpreting it by listening to something without interpreting it by taking conscious breaths occasionally observe the air flowing into the body out of the body no thought you become aware of the underlying presence and only then do you become a true human being so humans are still undergoing evolutionary processes they are not finished they are not even fully human yet most of them you are fully human when you are conscious not only of your humanness but also of your beingness when the two come together you are a human being before you are only a human unaware of being only a personality a human being lives in two worlds the manifested and the unmanifested and that would mean when humans more and more humans begin to live like that of course the world would look very different what did we create so be not only human but be the being so you become a true human being

I'm Oprah Winfrey and you've been listening to Eckhart Tolle Essential Teachings the podcast you can follow these essential teachings on Spotify or wherever you listen to podcasts if you haven't yet go to Spotify and follow this podcast join us next week for more enlightened teachings from Eckhart Tolle thank you for listening

Eckhart Tolle The Time is Always Now [d80fea39-e896-4a34-a876-ad490176ef3d]

The time is always now. Eckhart Tolle and I have spent many hours talking about what it means to live in the now. He's taught me not to linger on past mistakes, but to learn from them and then let them go.

But in this podcast, Eckhart talks with a live audience about the importance of living in the now. And I appreciate his sense of humor about it because he jokes that he has a collection of watches that have been given to him over the years that just say, now. Another reminder to us that the time is always now.

It's working. It says the time is now. Totally accurate.

Over the years, many people have sent me now watches. I have a collection of about 10 with different dials. But some dials at every hour, it says now, now, now.

And then I have others that you have to press a button and then it says now. And then another button that gives you the time. In our kitchen, we have a clock that somebody sent.

It doesn't say now, but it shows all the numerals, the numbers in a pile at the bottom of the clock. And on the dial it says whatever. It's easy to forget that it's always now and only now.

And if you could remember that, not as a memory, but have that as a live realization, every moment, or to put it more accurately, in the moment, because there's only really one moment, although what happens in it changes. If you knew that, that's the awakened state of consciousness. You would be in alignment with whatever happens.

So the ultimate spiritual practice is to remember that it's now and only ever now. And this is now. This is your life.

And you may remember from a power of now or somewhere, I talked about usually when people refer to my life, they say my life. I call that your life situation, whatever is going on in your life, connected with the usual things that are of concern to people, which is your health, your relationships, your work, or lack of it, finances, living situation. Usually those things make up your life, my life.

But I call that your life situation as opposed to life, which is only ever now. Your life situation exists in the mind. You have to keep it alive there.

It's important, of course, you have to deal with situations as they arise in your life, but they only arise in the present moment. And when you think about your life situation, you can only think about it in the present moment. It's important to have these two, your life and your life situation, and not allow your life situation to completely obscure your life, your presence, your sense of aliveness, your spaciousness.

And that's helpful to bring attention, to learn to bring attention to your senses. The expression we could use is come to your senses, those five senses. So you become more aware of what surrounds you.

Inhabit the body. It's another one that brings you, connects you with life. It takes you out of the conceptualizing mind.

Be here now. Come to your senses. Inhabit the body.

Be here now. They're all one. And then you don't carry continuously with you, like a heavy burden, your life situation.

Of course, you address whatever challenges arrive. You deal with them as they arise in the present moment. Occasionally, you might have to do some planning or some strategy occasionally, but also that happens in the present moment.

For the rest of the time, don't allow your life situation to completely obscure, completely stifle your sense of aliveness, your presence in the moment, because then you walk around with a burden of a very heavy personality, and you don't see what's around you anymore. You can't truly relate to other humans because you have the heaviness of your problematic life situation. And whose life situation is not problematic?

It's in the nature of life situations to be problematic. Of course, you arrange your life as best you can, your life situation as best you can. Yes, you acquire new skills so you can get a better job, or in whatever way you improve or attempt to improve your life situation, find a nicer place to live.

Why not? That's all fine. But the expectation that at some point life should leave you alone and not challenge you anymore, and that there's something wrong when life challenges you, that's a delusion.

That itself, the unconscious assumption that there's something wrong when life presents so-called problems to you, better word is challenges, there's an unconscious assumption and an unconscious resentment and negative reaction the moment you are faced with a new challenge because of the underlying assumption that these things should not be happening. But no matter how carefully you arrange your life situation and no matter how much positive thinking you do, which is a nice thing, you will still be challenged by life. You will still experience the polarities of life.

You will experience, for example, that every situation, every new situation, has its new set of challenges. And you will realize even when you achieve what you want to achieve, the very thing that you believe would lead to ultimate fulfillment, when you achieve what you want to achieve, when you finally get there, you will find very quickly that even that new wonderful situation presents a new set of challenges. So you're never left alone.

Life will not leave you alone. And so it's in the nature of life to give you challenges in your life situation. So if you could remove or realize the fallacy of believing that such challenges should not occur, then that will improve or enhance your ability to deal with situations greatly.

It also will remove the otherwise continuous arising of negativity when you are faced with life situations from big to small, with challenges in your life situation. If you assume that there shouldn't be any challenges, you become negative. You say, there's something wrong.

You resent it. If you believe in God, you can have an argument with God. This is, I can't take any more God.

This is, you've gone too far this time. Or you can draw the conclusion that there is no God because your life would be easier if there were an intelligent God. He would obviously make your life easy and everybody else's life too.

So therefore, there can be no God. And the strange thing is that every being, even a plant and every animal, the insect, other animals, any life form, they all encounter challenges to their survival, to their well-being. They all are faced with that.

And that's amazing that they are not unhappy. Only humans become unhappy. Animals may suffer, but they don't have the, on top of the occasional suffering, they don't have the unhappy me, which is a conceptual entity in the head.

So the unhappiness resides on the human level and the resentment to the challenges of life. And that is something we can go beyond because that is associated with the egoic self in the head that sustains itself, enhances itself through that resentment, through that complaining, through that negativity. It gets stronger through that.

Then you can make life situations and other people into enemies. Your present moment can become an enemy. I want to get out of here.

And the more you want to get out of here, the more you are stuck in it, stuck in your mind. So the challenges of life are an essential part of the evolution of consciousness for all species. You can verify that in your own experience and in your own life.

For most of you, perhaps all of you, if you had not had your particular set of challenges in life, you wouldn't be here. I don't know where you would be, but you wouldn't be here.

The challenges of life, it's important then to see that there is no end to it.

So on that level, life won't leave you alone. But on a deeper level, once you accept that challenges will come, you don't have to become negative when they do come. You can actually, oh, there's another one.

And then it's often through intense challenges, the bigger ones, they drive you deeper. Now the interesting thing is it's not the great things that happen to you that make you more conscious. It's in many cases the so-called bad things that happen to you if you deal with them correctly and come to a place of acceptance that make you more conscious.

So there's an ancient saying that says, when the ego weeps for what it has lost, the spirit rejoices for what it has found. And so many times you may find that in your life you lose something, death, loss of security, loss of income, loss of health, loss of long-term relationship. When the ego weeps, because the ego weeps, it's terrible, but then something suddenly arises, something that had been part of your sense of self has been removed.

It leaves a hole, an empty space, such as when somebody close to you dies, you lose your livelihood, your home. It leaves an empty space which is painful from the point of view of a personality. It is potentially also able to drive you deeper into who you truly are beyond form, the unconditioned, and then you experience suddenly, how can I feel so peaceful suddenly if something bad has happened?

And yet suddenly you feel a sense of liberation. It doesn't happen to everybody who experiences loss, but potentially that is always there. So next time a challenge comes, it won't be long, then say, oh, there's another one, and then you go with it.

You look at it, is there anything I can do to change the situation? First, when you look at it, the first is always to accept the present moment as it arises. Now sometimes whatever arises in the present moment requires you to take action, and then you look at it.

Now this looking is an important part of it. To look at a situation is not necessarily visual looking. It means to give attention to a particular situation that has arisen or is arising in the present moment.

And then this thing that I call looking is you give it attention. In that moment it could only be a few seconds or a minute or two. You give it attention, and that is a very important thing.

At that point you don't think. If your thinking comes in too soon, you might come to very wrong conclusions about what action you need to take because that action will be conditioned by your mind, the old stuff. You bring in the old and try to deal with the present moment by bringing in old conditioning.

So you will act according to your conditioning. But if you can give something attention, this giving attention, you face it, you've let go of the inner resentment, and this is the most important thing, you've realized it is in the nature of life to give you challenges. Then when they come, there's no resentment.

You just see, ah, there it is, another one. Okay, even if you say there's another one, you don't say, oh no, another one. There's another one, okay.

And then you look at it, and by looking I mean to be in that state of consciousness in which there is an alertness but not yet thinking. You don't immediately, unless it's a situation that requires immediate action, which is called an emergency situation, in which case you'll do whatever you do anyway. Often emergency situations cut your mind out completely, and something else takes over and you take action.

And sometimes people do heroic things, and afterwards, when they are praised by others, they say, I don't know, I just did it. And then others, it can happen that they become paralyzed in the face of an emergency. They cannot get out of their mind, and their mind doesn't have time to deal with it.

And suddenly the whole engine in the head gets stuck. What do I do now? And then it's too late.

It's happened already, and you're dead, or whatever it is. You didn't jump out of the way soon enough. And there the train was coming towards you.

What do I do now? The train is coming. So in emergency situations, you cannot think.

If you think, you're stuck. And so many people experience, actually, that the mind gets out of the way, and something else presents suddenly. And this happens to people who engage in dangerous activities and love it, climbing up a steep wall, mountain wall, driving dangerous cars fast, motorbikes, or whatever they do.

Anything, any dangerous activity forces you into the present moment. You don't need that. And it could, of course, dangerous activity means it is dangerous.

Don't get addicted to just one activity to take you into the present moment, because then every weekend you'd have to climb up this wall. And in the meantime, of course, you're still not present. So if it's not an absolute emergency situation, but a challenge, then it's important.

So that means you have a little bit of time to deal with it. Don't immediately go into thinking about it. So give it attention, face it.

And now this giving of attention, which I sometimes call looking, it might involve looking or it might not, is this clarity of consciousness with which you look at something or an entire situation and don't immediately come to a conclusion as to what action you need to take. It's that facing it and looking that connects you to a deeper level. In other words, you become still, alert and still.

And then after a few seconds or a minute or two, it is likely that a thought comes in that tells you what the right action is. So that's not an emergency. It's just a challenge.

Or it might be that you still don't know what to do. Or it may be that you have to become still again after a while and look at it again. And then you may come to the realization that there's nothing you can do, at least for now.

There are certain situations that are problematic, and yet for now there isn't really much you can do. And then you leave it alone. And then you accept this is what is, the acceptance of what is.

So it happens very often when people are not able to really have that clarity of perception, a look into it. Often people take action when it would be better to leave it alone. Many situations, it depends, of course, on what it is.

Many situations are made far worse by taking unnecessary, superfluous, or excessive action. Balance in everything, there's a balance that you need to find. But the most important thing, challenges, accept them, even welcome them when they arise because they're a great opportunity, especially the little ones.

You might not welcome the big challenges, but they are great too. Don't resent the challenges. Get rid of the belief or transcend the belief that you should not be challenged by life, that these problems should not occur.

So, questions. It's still the now. And here too.

I'll start with just two or three questions on paper. When I'm accepting a person completely, isn't that kind of enabling them, that's a good point, if the behavior of another person causes you suffering, true suffering, not just the suffering that says, oh, he makes me mad, the way he does this every time, the way he eats makes me mad, the way the noises he makes makes me so mad, the way he walks makes me mad, the way he speaks, just why does he talk like that? Some people have those kinds of reactions and thoughts towards the person they're living with, and of course that causes you suffering. That is self-generated suffering, of course.

You cannot tell that person, I want you to eat differently, walk differently, behave differently, just do everything differently so that I can be at peace, so that you don't make me mad anymore. But then there are other cases where there's actual suffering inflicted. Your partner comes home once a week and becomes drunk and violent.

Now, there can be a misconception when we talk about accepting. Accepting is mainly an internal thing where you accept that the person is displaying this behavior that corresponds to his or her level of consciousness at this time. Whatever behavior this person displays, manifests, corresponds to his or her level of consciousness.

If he or she were more conscious, they would behave differently. So that is a good realization. So internally, there is a realization that the behavior people manifest corresponds to their level of consciousness.

Externally, it doesn't necessarily mean that you remain in the presence of that person because you have accepted that what he or she does is as it is. But it could still be that you may need to talk to the person if that helps. In rare cases, it may help.

And you say to that person, you come home once a week drunk and become violent. I don't want to live with that anymore. I know that you are unhappy and you drink because you're unhappy.

So he would say, when he's not drunk, I'm never going to do that again. And of course, that's not how it is because he truly means it in the moment of saying it because he's relatively a bit more conscious at that moment. But the moment he takes in that substance, his level of consciousness goes to the bottom again and he will do it again.

So if you speak to a person to explain that their behavior needs to change and the way you speak is based on an acceptance of this is what they do, this is what they do according to their level of consciousness, you don't make the person into an enemy. That's really the acceptance part of it. So you don't make the person into an enemy but you can clearly express what is wrong with their behavior and they need to change if that is possible or you remove yourself from that person.

Even if you might have a work situation where your boss or somebody you work with is very unconscious and I don't mean the superficial kind of suffering that is generated by your mind through excessive reactivity, but true, a person who truly is out to sabotage you in everything that you do because of his ego or her ego is so big, needs to feel superior and sabotage your work, talk behind your back to make people feel antagonistic towards you, all those things that unconscious egos do in order to enhance their own position or their own sense of self.

Again, you see that this person is the ego of that person that is acting, he or she is totally in the grip of their ego and you may try and talk to that person, this is not acceptable if you can. If it's your boss, you can't really say, well, you can say it's not acceptable and depending on how valuable your work is to him, he or she may change their behavior to keep you or may not, in which case, you remove yourself from the situation. It is not good to be in a situation where you're surrounded by unconscious people making your life miserable.

Even though removing yourself might lead to a period of... might be very challenging, it is better to go into the uncertainty or the insecurity and accept the challenge of insecurity rather than remain in a situation that does give you security but is a continuous source of suffering. So then you have the courage to step into insecurity and that in itself is a great thing to do.

The seeking of continuous security stops many people from taking the next necessary step in their lives because they have a fear of this uncertainty or insecurity in their lives. So if there's something, whether it's a relationship at home or whether it's at work and it causes you continuous deep suffering, unhappiness, change the situation if it's possible or remove yourself. If there's more, if there's deeper unconsciousness, that actually impinges upon your freedom and your ability to enjoy life, they actually cause you suffering, then without making them into enemies, first speak to them if that's possible.

And if that does not work, if their behavior doesn't change, remove yourself. Embrace insecurity if that's what it means and that in itself, remember, I'm sure you have experienced it already, or some of you may be in a situation, either at home or at work, that produces continuous unhappiness and then it may be time to step out. It does not mean you're responsible if you put up with a continuous source of unhappiness.

Yes, but I need to be responsible. You need to be responsible for your inner state. That is primary responsibility.

You're of no real help to anybody if you live in continuous unhappiness. Let's look at one or two more questions here.

I have a question about stages that we go. I read the first one, Power of Now, changed my life and then I came to a new earth. Thank you for paradise.

The stages, the truck, you get stuck, you either accept and then the next one is you enjoy. I already went to enthusiasm. I found my enthusiasm, what I thought, but then it felt like the ego.

Is there a way to know which one is which? Am I enthusiastic because this is what the universe is pushing me to do or is it just me trying to be, oh, I'm the enlightened one, I'm the spiritual one or so on?

Okay, I understand. Yes, thanks. So that goes back to in the new earth, I think I wrote that the three modalities of being, if you're not in one of the three modalities, you're in a state that is not harmonious and egoic or dysfunctional.

So the three modalities, acceptance, you either, whatever you need to do or whatever the situation is, you accept it. If you cannot enjoy it, there's some things you can't enjoy, but you can accept that this is what is. Acceptance then is that important.

Others, enjoyment comes in, enjoy the work, see if you can enjoy it rather than just accept that anything you do with resentment is a dysfunctional state causing suffering without knowing it, you're causing it to yourself in any state of resentment. You're doing it, but you resent doing it. You are somewhere, but you really don't want to be there, but you are there.

So these are states of dysfunctional states that actually cause suffering. You cause it unnecessarily to yourself without knowing it. So acceptance, enjoyment, there's a flow in what you do.

You are present in what you know, where you're going, but you're fully present in the process of moving towards there. The movement is more important than where you want to get to. And then the enthusiasm is the stage that I describe as happening during the creative process.

When you are giving birth to something new in whatever form, there can be an enormous influx of energy that I call enthusiasm, which is the ancients believed that there was a higher spirit moving through you at that time. I mean, literally, enthusiasm means in God. So enthusiasm is a state of creativity.

Now, your question is correct. It can sometimes, there can be egoic, excited egoic states masquerading as enthusiasm. And sometimes at first sight, not easy to tell the difference because you're on a high, you're on an egoic high.

But there are some signs by which you can recognize whether or not it's the ego or whether there's a deeper creative process, consciousness wanting to create something through you. One thing you can recognize the ego by is when you encounter obstacles to whatever your action is in that state of either enthusiasm or egoic excitement. When you encounter obstacles, if it's the ego, you will quickly fall into negative states the moment you encounter obstacles to what you're doing.

If it's true enthusiasm, you do not fall into negative states when obstacles arise. And obstacles will arise in any creative endeavor. It's something that doesn't mean you're supposed to stop when an obstacle arises.

You look at an obstacle and see either you can use it and transform it and incorporate it into what you do or you can bypass it. That's how true enthusiasm, but the ego gets resentful when an obstacle comes. It takes it as a personal insult.

So that's a good sign that it's egoic or not. And another sign, of course, is always, but that is more when you're getting towards the end of the achievement, when you have achieved something and it does not satisfy you soon after achieving it, then you know it was the ego too. So you always know the ego.

There's a satisfaction, but not short-lived when it's ego. So the Course in Miracles actually tells you you can always recognize an egoic goal when you achieve it by realizing that it hasn't satisfied you.

[Speaker 5] (32:05 - 32:07)

Thank you. Of course it makes sense.

Thank you. We have plenty of time. We're in the present moment.

No need to hurry. No need to hurry. It's fine.

[Speaker 2] (32:23 - 33:27)

Hello. Hello. I've been to several of your retreats and my friend encouraged me to ask the question.

Both of my parents were Holocaust survivors. My mother was liberated from Auschwitz in 1945 and my father from Bergen-Belsen. And I had a brother who died in the Warsaw Ghetto there.

And I have this identification with this collective kind of unconscious where I constantly try to think about what you're saying and how to apply the feeling of there is no problem in the present moment. It doesn't happen all the time. But when you say that I think about them and I think, how could they have done that?

How could they have said in a state of terror there's no problem right now? And I think about it often. I was a little nervous to ask the question and even to make the statement but my friend was encouraging me to do it.

Thank you.

The main part of your question is how could they at that time have said there is no problem in the situation that they were in? That's your main question. In such extreme situations of such extreme suffering, concentration camp and so on, and even nowadays there are places on the planet where people are in these situations of extreme suffering where death could come at any moment.

There have been accounts of people who were in concentration camps who have actually broken through to a very deep level of consciousness by being in that situation. And it doesn't happen in those cases by telling yourself that there is no problem in the present moment. That would be a very weak statement and it really wouldn't work.

But what does work is a situation like that can drastically burn up your ego completely so that there is complete self-annihilation before the body dies. There is complete annihilation of the egoic sense of self and all that remains is an intense presence of consciousness. You are not there as a person anymore.

I know that there are a few individuals who have gone there who have later been able to speak about it and I'm sure there are many others, a minority, yes, there are many others who never were able, they died there, they were never able to later on express what they actually went through, but I believe there is a considerable number of people who went through the deepest shift in consciousness that is possible in this possibly painful situation and actually became totally awakened as consciousness and realized that there is no death. And others, of course, went through terrible fear and died in terrible fear. But the essence of who you are is not subject to death.

When we see the dreadfulness of that situation, which is not to be denied, so we also have to see on a deeper level there is no death. And both exist, knowing that there is no death to the essence of who you are, knowing that from an inner realization does not mean that on another level the situation is not dreadful. One does not deny the other.

It has to be recognized in its dreadfulness. That's part, in the same way that I sometimes speak of how many people were actually killed by humans killing, murdering other humans in the 20th century alone. Nobody knows the exact figure, 150 million, 200 million.

Humans murdered by others. Natural catastrophes and so on are nothing compared to that, what humans do to each other. And that's a form of collective madness.

The Holocaust is one aspect of that. Another aspect of that would be what happened in Soviet communism. Millions killed.

Also in China, millions killed within their own countries, not even in the conflict between two countries. First World War, the madness of that. Second World War, the madness of that.

The bombing of cities and entire civilian populations exterminated. Complete madness. So we have to see that ultimately the dysfunctional egoic mind and what it produces, and this is dreadful.

You need to recognize the craziness of that, the madness of that. But at the same time, if we are able to go deep enough, we can realize that for a moment regard humanity of consciousness, there's human consciousness, which is a collective of humanity. And every human being is an expression of the collective human consciousness.

And the collective human consciousness is an expression of the universal consciousness. It's one strand, one ray in the universal consciousness. So you have universal consciousness, then you have the collective human consciousness on planet Earth.

The collective human consciousness is evolving gradually through continuously, through billions of manifestations. Humans, they're called human individuals. It's evolving gradually.

So another way of looking at it on a deeper level is the evolution of human consciousness is a very painful process. It goes to a nightmarish stage when the history of humanity looks like the history of a nightmare. But it is evolving.

So we ourselves are expressions of the evolution of consciousness. And knowing that, we can still recognize the madness of what happened and to some extent, it's still happening. But this is a long answer on two levels.

No, they would not have said there's no problem in the present moment, but perhaps the situation forced them into a state of consciousness that we call presence that they didn't have a name for. That is always the possibility when it happens. For you, it's important to derive your sense of self from the arising presence in you, not from the historical past, your own historical past or the historical past of your family, but to acknowledge it, what happened, but not derive your sense of identity from it.

That is important. Otherwise, you get trapped in that sense of identity.

[Speaker 2] (40:00 - 40:01)

Thank you very much.

[Speaker 1] (40:01 - 40:02)

Thank you.

So my question is, I've been studying your way of living for ten years now and kind of getting better at it, I think. But as I get better at it, I find it to be, for want of a better word, sometimes lonely. I don't engage in conversations with people that I would have because I don't want to gossip.

And I find it sometimes, especially with my family, and this sounds funny, but if I sit down to dinner with my wife and her mother, I could quite easily be silent. And so I make conversation because I feel strange. And so where is the...

I don't even know quite what the question is, but where is the line between engaging in that conversation to be normal and sit there silent and everybody thinks you're weird?

[Speaker 1] (41:12 - 45:12)

Yes. Well, the way I deal with it, I must admit, and people who have been with me and on private occasions, like we used to have, not so much now, after events, we had dinners when people would sit around one big table or several tables and some of the volunteers or the organizers and so on. And often people were very disappointed because I sat there and said very little.

They thought, oh, dinner with Eckhart is going to tell wonderful things. And he just sat there and didn't say very much. And that's fine.

I was okay with that. I do sometimes engage in superficial conversation and actually enjoy it with people, just talk about the weather. But why not sometimes just go along with...

not the gossip kind of thing, which is egoically motivated. There it's better to, as the Buddhists say, keep noble silence, which means don't speak. When that kind of conversation is there, we're talking about others and how defective they are and what they did and didn't do.

There it's better to refrain and just be there and not even think you shouldn't be talking about that. Just don't feed it at all. Just be there.

And if they don't find you interesting, that's their problem. At other times it might be actually quite enjoyable to engage in just simple superficial conversations about everyday things, but superficial... It's hard to think of superficial things.

But in the moment I usually can. This is not egoic kind of talk, but just superficial exchange of ideas or thoughts or experiences. But you're right to keep noble silence when it comes to egoically motivated conversations of whatever kind.

There's negativity in the background and people just want to feel superior to others who happen not to be there. But try out in certain situations just engage in superficial chitchat and just enjoy that also you're skimming off the surface of life. And that can be quite nice too for a little while.

And while you listen you can sense there's something else in them, their beingness. Through your own you can sense that. And you feel when you finish, you feel it's been a nice exchange.

Nothing important has been said and yet two human beings came together. You looked at him or her. You looked into his or her eyes and touched the deeper essence of the other.

Even while you were talking about superficial things, it's more easily done one on one than in a group setting. That's in a group setting that the group generates a lot of that mind stuff. So it's yes, if people find you boring, that's fine.

And you don't get invited to dinner parties anymore if that is possible. And there may be other people coming into your life with whom you can engage in other kinds of conversation. So try the chitchat.

Laughter Thank you. Applause Applause Applause Okay, one more question.

[Speaker 6] (45:12 - 45:31)

My question is about my mind. My mind is constantly fantasizing. My fantasies are like little movies with anger, desire, fear, and looking for someone's approval.

So I am very aware of that. So, what do you recommend me?

[Speaker 1] (45:32 - 51:19)

Laughter Yes, this is not uncommon to have, there are many people who, some of their mind activity, and that includes you from what you just said. It's an interesting phenomenon. They experience imaginary situations.

It's like a little, as you said, like a little movie in your mind in which something happens. It's not going to happen, it has never happened, but it's happening in their mind. So this is the mind going wild.

It just goes on and on. How do you step out of that here and now? Breathing.

Little portals, I call them sometimes, into presence. One is being aware of your breath. Now you tell me that you can't do that for just very long because the mind comes in.

I will come to that in a second. Being aware of your breath. Being aware of sense perceptions.

Being aware of your inner body. So stay with those three. The breathing.

I believe you are able to take one conscious breath. One conscious breath usually means in and out. If that's too long, try one half conscious breath, which would just be the in-breath.

Which means you observe with your inner perception, you observe how the air flows through your nose into the body. Also observe the out-breath. If you are able to observe the in-breath, now at that point you might notice your mind wants to come in with a thought and say something about it.

It might say I can't do it. It might say, am I really observing it? Or am I just fooling myself?

The mind has many strategies of fooling you into believing that you cannot be present. If you believe in the thought that arises that I'm not really present, am I? Or whatever the mind says.

Don't believe what the mind says. Just take attention back to the breath. Then you may be able to do let's do that now.

One full conscious breath lasting probably about ten seconds or whatever it is. So we can do it together. Your attention needs to be on the breath and it takes your attention into the body to some extent into your chest and then you feel the air flowing out again.

So here we go in and let's do it one more time. And one more time, even if the mind tells us you can't do it. Okay, that was three or four conscious breaths.

Now, were you able to do that? Yes. But your mind is particularly powerful so it has a very strong gravitational pull.

It can very easily demand all your attention back for itself. So you have to know that. If you can experience as now that it's actually joyful, very pleasant to be observing your breath, acknowledge that it is actually very peaceful and pleasant.

Then you will want to go there more often without and the seduction, the power of the mind to seduce you becomes less. So stepping out of the mind when you realize there's totally useless mind activity going on here, you need to realize that. But there's enough awareness in you that very often you do realize that is already a sign of awareness to realize that you're strapped in this noisy mind is a sign of awareness.

Because if you had no awareness you wouldn't even know it. You'd be so totally in it. You would be so identified with it.

You would be it. It would be all there is to you. But there is more to you.

So there is the awareness there. The moment you realize you have a choice of taking your attention out of the mind. And even if you cannot do it for very long that doesn't matter so much.

The important thing is that you can do it. And the process is there's a separation between mind activity and your consciousness separates from mind activity. Then mind activity weakens and subsides.

And there's consciousness. And then it grabs hold of consciousness again. And you're completely in it again.

And then after a while the moments when there's a freedom from mind activity the separation becomes a bit longer. And you enjoy it even more. And there's more of it.

But in the meantime for you is to engage in this process of separation. And don't believe your mind when it says things about it. It's not the truth.

Okay. The point is that it's very powerful so it's like I am so tired of hearing myself.

Yeah. That's good. That's a good point.

Oh, that's a good point to reach. To be tired of hearing yourself is a very good point to reach. Thank you.

Well, thank you. Engage in presence practice. Walking, sitting, lying, eating, wherever you are.

Be there as the presence more than as the person. So there's more of you as presence than of you as person. Thank you.

United States of Awareness. In this episode, Eckhart talks to a live audience with participants from around the world. He calls them the United States of Awareness.

He says awakening humans are experiencing a metamorphosis, like caterpillars becoming butterflies. He emphasizes the most important thing that we must tend to is our state of consciousness, letting go of our judgments and our reactivity. He urges us to make it a practice that whatever happens in our lives, accept that it's exactly what we need in that moment for our spiritual growth.

This evening, probably, I'm mainly going to talk about how to be here, about your state of consciousness here. I'm saying probably because you never know what comes out of the present moment. The most important thing here, which, by the way, is also the most important thing in your entire life, is your state of consciousness, no matter what's going on in your life, where you are, who you're with, or what you're doing.

The primary factor in whatever you're experiencing is your state of consciousness, because it is through your particular state of consciousness that you experience things. So if you are heavily identified with the conditioned thinking mind and all its preconditioned beliefs, opinions, judgments, then that's the way you perceive the world, through the veil of that. If there are turbulent or heavy emotions running through you that you're identified with, then you will experience the world around you, other people, situations, through the veil of those emotions, and you think that's how the world is, that's reality.

So as you know all that, and if you are present, then you experience people, situations, and whatever is going on in your life, places, very differently. This opportunity here is for you to practice being absolutely present and make that the main focus rather than anything else. Leave your mind as much as possible behind.

Easier said than done. Your state of consciousness not only determines your life, it even becomes 2, 3, 4, 5 times more important when most of you or all of you work with people in one way or another, and no matter in what capacity you work with people, whatever your state of consciousness is, it will transmit itself to the people that you work with. So here, as ideal as you can get for the practice of presence, but it won't be 100% ideal, there need to be little things to challenge you, and sometimes there are big things to challenge you, but little things are everywhere.

Little things to challenge you occur all the time. Make it your practice to say that whatever happens here is the perfect situation for you. So let go of the judgmental mind, the complaining entity, and see what happens if you approach each moment in that state of surrender, and then a depth will reveal itself to you that you hadn't noticed before because you were trapped in the veil of the judgmental mind.

A very wonderful thing is being here with many others from all over the world who are also awakening, or many of you are already awake most of the time, and I was asked not long ago, when you travel, somebody asked me, how is it that you go to different countries and you meet different people, different nationalities? Are there big differences in how people receive these teachings? And I was surprised when I answered because I hadn't known it before because I hadn't thought about it.

Actually, all those humans who are in the awakening process begin to resonate at a certain frequency that is the same for all of them. So you may find here, when you meet somebody from a very distant country, you find something that unites you, that transcends cultural conditioning and social conditioning, and that's a wonderful thing. So it's almost like a new species is coming out of the old, and you are part of that, and no matter where you go in the world, you will very quickly recognize those who are also in the awakening process.

That reminds me, I was going to put this on before coming on stage, but I forgot, I've had it for years, a badge somebody gave me. It says USA if you read it vertically, but if you read it horizontally, it says United States of Awareness. Now, that is a work in progress, of course.

For the awakening humans, as humans awaken all over the planet, that would eventually become the United States of Awareness. So let's focus on your state of consciousness right now. It's easy, relatively easy, to be present as you sit here.

So use every moment here, whether you're walking, sitting, standing, eating, to practice presence. First of all, nature. Nature that surrounds you here is remarkable.

There's a magic to just watching nature as you walk or sit or go to the beach. And as you watch nature, be there as, not as a person, but as a conscious presence that is perceiving all that amazing magic. So you go, you listen, all your senses are alert because that is part of presence.

And you can not only look, you listen, the sounds, the wind, birds, or the ocean. You can feel the breeze on your skin. You smell the air.

And you're practicing being in this world as a walking presence rather than as a person with a history that's still going to be there. Don't worry, you still have your history. You remember who you are or your past.

But the shift is that the formless you, the timeless you, which is consciousness itself, emerges more and more fully through the gaps in the temporal you, through the gaps between two thoughts. It emerges even through the cells of your body so that there's a lightness to who you are. This has nothing to do with your physical weight.

There's a lightness to who you are as presence emerges and you as the personality, the personality loses its opaqueness, its density. If you look at any human who has no access to the spirit dimension, has had no separation yet between who they are as consciousness and their thought processes and emotional processes, there is a density to those humans. And it doesn't mean that the spirit dimension is not present in them.

It is. But it's being obscured by the density of mental-emotional conditioning. And this density of mental-emotional conditioning is called a person.

And it has a name tag attached to it, and that's me. And all the things that make up the identity of the person consists of accumulations of certain predominant emotions and certain predominant thought patterns that go through their minds. So the combination of those predominant emotions and thought patterns make up the personality.

Whatever might be happy-looking or predominantly looking out for the next thing that's going wrong. It might be a fearful conditioning, emotional, mental. Where's the next blow that the universe is going to give me, going to come from?

Or predominantly angry, looking for another excuse to be angry again. Please make me angry. I'm waiting for something.

I'm waiting for something to react to. So you have the person. Some persons are relatively well-adjusted.

But no person is really happy for long. No person has really any depth to him or herself. Well, they do, but they don't know it.

So if you have a depth, but you don't sense your own depth, yours is a surface reality, then it's as if you didn't have it. But this is an experiential thing. And I believe that almost everyone here can verify in their own experience what it is that I'm talking about.

Because many of you will experience yourself, sometimes the personality predominates again. Sometimes in certain situations in your life, the heaviness, the opaqueness, the density of the personality returns when you become very reactive. It happens easily in family situations, which are always the most difficult training ground, but the best for staying conscious.

Relationships, close relationships, and then come work situations, and so on. You get challenged, and the personality reasserts itself completely, and you become just as unconscious as all the others who have never gone through any awakening process. And then you wake up suddenly, after a few hours, or a day, or a few minutes, if you're lucky, and say, Oh, what was that?

And then whatever words you used to describe that, you said, I lost it completely. What did you lose? I lost it.

What? I lost, well, of course you lost consciousness, awareness. You didn't know who you were anymore.

You thought you were the little person again. Because the awakening humans are like transitional entities. They are hybrids.

The awakening humans are hybrids. We all know the caterpillar and the butterfly, the most incredible metamorphosis. When the caterpillar dies, and the butterfly becomes transformed into the butterfly.

So you, the awakening humans, many of them are like a butterfly that's emerging from the caterpillar. And then as it emerges from the caterpillar, it still experiences him or herself as a caterpillar. Although he or she is already emerging as a butterfly, then he still falls back into thinking he's a caterpillar.

And behaves like one. Although he's already become a butterfly. So then the butterfly starts behaving like a caterpillar again.

Can't fly anymore, it goes. And then you need something to remind you that you're not the caterpillar anymore. So the caterpillar in this analogy is the person without any awareness.

Now, as presence arises in you, it does not mean that certain aspects of your personality will not remain. Certain aspects of your personality will remain because you have a form identity. Everybody has a form identity.

There are certain ways in which you do things. Maybe ways in which you speak. And if they are not dysfunctional, but just certain characteristics, they may remain.

So if they are dysfunctional, that means there's an unconsciousness there. And those will dissolve as awareness shines through the person. So then what happens to us is, yes, you are still a person, but a different dimension of consciousness that is not conditioned shines through the personality.

And as that grows, the personality of the person recedes more and more. And just enough remains so that you can function as a form in this world. All that remains.

You can function well. You may find in your daily life fluctuations in the intensity of to what extent you are a person and to what extent you are the presence. And in your work situation, you will be of the greatest benefit if the personality can operate as little as possible.

If the personality is in the background, so that when you work with people, you are predominantly presence. And that is a wonderful shift. I noticed that there was many years ago when I went through my shift in consciousness, people started coming to me to ask questions initially.

Later I said, okay, I'm doing counseling sessions. But at first it was just people asking questions and then I would give answers. But the important thing here is when you work with somebody, there is you, there is the other person, there is whatever modality you apply to that situation that you have learned.

You might be a doctor in which you spent many years accumulating knowledge and you apply that modality to this therapeutic situation. You may be a nurse. Also you have to study several years to be a nurse.

You apply that. If you are a therapist, you probably have gone to therapy training, university. You have certain modalities of how you approach the therapeutic situation, what kind of questions you ask, what you are supposed to say, what you are not supposed to say.

Or if you do body work, of course you have learned that. That is your modality. Whatever it is, that's fine.

This is what you practice. But if that's all there is, you, a person, practicing a modality, a therapeutic modality, then the most vital element is still missing. So there is always a third element there in addition to you, the person, practicing the modality.

But in between, there needs to be that alertness that you bring to the situation, which basically is, there need to be moments when you are not thinking. And that is how presence arises. If you are continuously thinking when working with somebody, what to do, how can I be helpful, it's what I say something that can really help this person.

If you let go of that and become comfortable with not knowing for moments, then this depth dimension begins to come into the room through you. And that really is the sacred dimension of two people being together. So you invite the presence in.

And the presence is what really matters there. Already many of you probably have been doing it perhaps for quite a long time, perhaps without even knowing it, that this is what it is. So we have a line in the Course in Miracles that says, a healer does not heal, he lets healing be.

So even though you practice a modality, it's a balance between still applying your knowledge to the situation, whether it's physical knowledge or whatever it is that you do, and yet not be confined to that in your interaction with that person. This is the balance between what you know on the level of form and inviting the other dimension into the situation. And that is the real healing in a wider sense, which may result in physical healing, but there's a deeper healing that is much more important.

Because what that really means, the deeper healing is the awakening. It's the realization who you are beyond the person. And that can come to whoever you are working with, if you are not there predominantly as a person.

But that is the essence of the healing situation, no matter what you do. So here we practice being the presence rather than the person. This becomes challenging the moment you interact with people here.

But here the challenge is, I'd ask you to use that as an opportunity, because the moment you start to interact through your mind with the mind of another, you can very easily get pulled out of presence. And before you know it, after two minutes of talking, you're completely in the mind, which is your ego, especially if there's a disagreement or something like that about spirituality. And you know absolutely that you are right.

A particular skill is required, and I ask you to practice here if you interact with people, to stay present while you speak and listen to somebody, so that you don't get lost in the mental stream, which is often accompanied by certain emotions too. Don't get lost, because it can drag you along, that mental stream can pull you, and then you spout out all the usual stuff that you've been saying for years. All the old positions and all the things that you're so sure of, and that is how it is.

Now many of you are not that deeply entrenched anymore, but it could happen that you fall back into this caterpillar existence. So, to remain present when you begin to use the mind to interact with another, requires enormous skill and alertness. Now how does that look in practice?

Well, first of all, you bring an alertness to the situation. First of all, when you listen to the other, you're not preparing your next statement in the mind. There's complete listening, and that's, of course, in any client situation also, that is a vital practice, even though you might have an enormous amount of knowledge about what this person needs.

Before you apply this enormous amount of knowledge that you have, which is good, there needs to be a space where you're not applying it yet. There needs to be a space where you give this person complete and utter attention. So you are there as an alert, receptive presence with the other person.

Do not get buried underneath your knowledge that what you have learned to help others, but this can completely occupy your mind to such an extent that there's no space left to even realize that there is a human being there. We all know the cases of certain physicians and doctors, some of them who don't see you anymore as a human being.

They see you as a symptom.

They only address the symptom. There are some doctors, of course, they wouldn't be here. They're not coming.

But there are some, I know there are some doctors here, but they are different. They are conscious. Some of you may be here who are practicing spiritual healing, in which case, I mean, your natural state would be to be in that thoughtless awareness, and you wouldn't be thinking about, okay, what can I prescribe this person, or what is the case history, or there are many different types of healing.

So, as you are with the person, there needs to be spaces when you don't know anything. No matter how much knowledge you have acquired, you need to have spaces with that other person. They don't need to be long.

I don't really want to put a figure to them, but even if it's just 10 seconds, you have 10, 20 seconds when you're just looking and listening. And during that time, you're not searching your memory banks, or in your mind for the thing, how can I help this person? What do I need to do?

And after you've given that person your complete attention, then the mind may operate, and then you say, okay, this is... you may get insights, you may apply your knowledge, and then you do that. And then again, there comes a moment you give your fullest attention, and then you can, if you're a doctor, you suddenly...

there's a true relationship. You're not relating to a patient predominantly anymore. Yes, on the level of form, he or she is a patient.

But you are also there as a human being. The human being, the human is the form. Your person, your body, your mental conditioning, your mind, the being is the formless dimension in you.

So you are coming together of form and formlessness. So, as you practice, don't be a practitioner who is only human, without any access to being. That's a very impoverished life.

And a very impoverished therapeutic situation, too, when you're just there as a human. In the therapeutic situation, the presence intensifies. That is an interesting thing.

The moment a person comes, the session, whatever you call it, begins, the presence arises more than it would be in a normal situation. This is, I encountered as soon as I started many years ago, seeing people privately for counseling. The moment they came, they came into the room.

First they were on a park bench, and then eventually they came to a room. And the moment they came in, they sat down, and the moment I looked at them, they started speaking, and there was not a single thought in my head. My mind was totally still.

And there was just, okay. And then they started to talk, and then I could feel the presence. And it was a wonderful intensity, but a peaceful intensity to it.

And out of that, usually, came the first things that came out of my mouth, and often it was an additional question. What about that? And another question.

Again, without any prior decision what I was going to say. It just came out of that field of presence. So I was lucky that I didn't know much about therapeutic situations.

So there was not that much knowledge that I had to relinquish for those moments. Simply by being so alert, raising the frequency through that alertness, that thought just doesn't happen. So you can start with, sometimes it helps to, you can say, okay, while I hold this, this represents the space between my two hands, represents the moment of no thought.

And you go like that. You don't have to do it now, but you go like that, and let's say, let's give it 10 seconds right now. Are you able to simply let go of thinking, and just remain as an aware presence here and now?

Start now. Now? Okay.

That was about 10 seconds. Now, you may feel it's almost like saying don't think of a white elephant or something like that. And the moment you say don't think of a white, are you thinking of a white elephant?

This is the essence, really, of all spirituality, is to be able to relinquish thought. And not by falling below thought, which would be getting sleepy and tired, so you can't think much anymore because you're too tired to think. This is your falling below thought.

We are rising above thought. This is the next step in human evolution, is transcend thought. Transcend doesn't mean it doesn't happen anymore, but you go beyond it.

You can use it, but you're no longer confined by it. Now, those humans who are not awakened are confined by their thinking. They are trapped in the conditioned mind.

And so, we are becoming free of this prison, which is the being imprisoned by your conditioned mind, and mistaking it for who you are. This is the essence of not knowing who you are in reality. So the practice then, practice it here.

When you're not thinking, you're still there as the essential you is still there, and it's there more strongly. I believe when I wrote in the little book, Stillness Speaks, I think in the first sentence it says something like, you're never more essentially yourself than when you are still. That is the true essence of your being, that you can feel that as consciousness, as presence itself.

That is who you are. So stillness, really, when I use the word stillness, it means rising above thought. It doesn't matter right now for how long you rise above thought.

Little moments of presence are enough. And you will find, if you are able, in your daily life, and practice here, because here is a very conducive environment for practicing, practice rising above thought here in whatever city, walking, looking around at nature, perceiving nature. What do you need to think?

You don't need to know that this is called the Monterey Pine Tree. You know that already. And imagine doing that with another human being, where you can look at another human being without any conceptualization.

And then you can sense that this presence, that is you, also in them. It's the same presence. The same one consciousness.

You sense it in the other. If the mind is still, and then suddenly you have the true empathy, which means really, another word for it is really love, or lovingness, is to recognize that you and the other are in essence one. So, if you can practice that here not only with trees, but also with other humans, which is a little bit more difficult, because they have noisy minds.

The tree doesn't have a noisy mind, so it's easy to be still with the tree and present. You can even sense the stillness of the tree if you are still enough, because only the stillness in you can sense the fact that the tree is very still. But can you sense the stillness in another human who can't stop talking to you?

That's possible too, but you have to sense it within. So no matter where you go, if you look at teachings, Jesus' teachings, we only really have it as fragments. We don't have a complete teaching.

It's miraculous that these fragments survive, but in the fragments of the teachings of Jesus, you can also see that he talks about the importance of take no thought for the moral, but just give attention to what is here now. Don't be worried. Don't judge.

It's all the mind. We have it very clearly in the Buddha's teaching. The degree of absence of thoughts is the measure for progress on the spiritual path.

You can't start thinking about this answer now, obviously. This answer is a pointer, and you can only understand what he's talking about by not thinking. Oh.

And that is the Zen moment of Satori, when your mind stops and you go, Ah. Thank you. Thank you, Master.

Thank you. I got it now. Okay, that's good.

Not whether he still got it a minute later. It's secondary, but at least he got it now. Now, the greatest achievement, it does not matter your life situation, whether you consider your life up to this point a great success, or medium success, or not so good, or failed at most things that I tried, or never failed because I never tried anything.

Laughter. Now, these are all conceptual judgments of the mind, of course, whatever you say. All this is irrelevant if you consider what really matters is where you are in the evolution of human consciousness.

How does the evolution of human consciousness manifest through you? That determines failure or success in life. And of course, the world doesn't know much about that.

It doesn't know that. So if you are able to no longer be trapped in compulsive and involuntary thinking, then your life has succeeded beyond any measure, beyond measure. If you are able to transcend you, it means consciousness, not you the person.

The person cannot transcend itself. The person is the identification with thought. The person is consciousness dreaming.

The awakening is consciousness awakens, and then, yes, the person continues to be there, but you are then in lucid, the lucid dreaming, which is lucid living. If you are able to step out of thought by choice, then you embody the next step in the evolution of consciousness on the planet. And you are vital here, no matter what you do externally.

Now, in that state, which is a state of connectedness with Source, with the Source Consciousness, what repercussions that has in your life, we don't know. How it manifests, we don't know. It will manifest in different ways for different people.

I spent many years of my life before anything much happened after the shift in consciousness, just being. I did occasional jobs eventually. I had temporary jobs here and there, but the presence wasn't manifesting for a very long time.

Except gradually, I was helping people with becoming more present, but even that took a while. There were still huge spaces. I wasn't seeing five people a day.

I might at the beginning see two people a week. And there were these huge spaces of me just being there and think, OK. And occasionally the mind would say, what's your life all about?

You're not doing anything. Well, OK. That's how it is.

And that goes on and on. And then at some point something happened. It's almost as if I had to be in presence for a long, long time before it started to manifest first as a teaching to individuals and then it became a book and then it became this.

I'm not doing it as a person. It's presence operating. If I were doing it as a person, I would become stressed.

It would be unpleasant. So see how much you can be in no thought while you're here. Don't overdo it, but...

... ..

Remember, no willpower. Don't push thought away. Just raise your frequency by being very alert and still.

Occasionally you might feel your mind coming and saying, OK, I'm not thinking now. That's OK. And then you let go of that.

It's a little cloud that comes and then it evaporates. And that is enormously satisfying because in that moment you are free of the person. The person is just relatively unimportant.

There is a presence. And you notice that everything that surrounds you is perceived differently because there's suddenly a depth to things. There's a depth to the tree.

You can sense its aliveness. You can sense its sacredness, even though the mind might not be able to explain what sacredness is in conceptual terms. You can sense the sacredness of the tree or the animal or the other human.

You can sense that presence only through your presence. But it's the same presence. You can even be present with inanimate objects and give them attention that otherwise you would not have done because most people treat inanimate objects as means to an end and that you never actually give attention to a pen that you use for writing or you might not give attention to when you're reading a book.

The book is there to enable you to absorb the text. But the book also has an actual physical presence and you can relate and you can sense the beingness of even inanimate objects. And you can do that wherever you are.

Pick up an object, an ordinary object, and just for a few seconds give it your attention. You're not thinking about it. Just giving attention.

Touch something. You can feel it and see it. Look.

Can you look at this plant without thinking is it real or fake? Another thing you may want to try is driving without thinking. Beautiful.

Many people, most people drive on automatic. They are thinking while they're driving. One small part of their mind is doing the driving and the rest of their mind is thinking about something completely different.

And sometimes they think so much that even the small part that's driving gets absorbed in their thinking and then the accident happens. But driving also, it's a beautiful thing. Your entire life experience gets transformed as you bring in more and more spaces of not thinking.

And then when you resume thinking, when it's needed, because at some point you have to think, you actually think much more clearly because you had spaces of no thought. Because the thought that you think, the thinking that then happens, you still have that connectedness with the depth of who you are, the source consciousness, which then inspires your thought processes rather than having thought processes that are repetitive as most people have. Same thoughts again and again and again, year after year after year.

So the inspired thinking can only come by bringing in no thinking. Inspired thinking depends on your ability to stop thinking. But stop thinking is an end in itself.

It is so satisfying in itself because you experience life in a much more joyful way through not judging things. It's an amazing thing. If you compare that with the so-called normal human state of continuously finding fault, complaining, judging, criticizing, what a nightmare.

And suddenly you go into that clarity of perception. That's again the entire essence of Zen. All the teaching is that.

And being totally present is no thought. And then the mind-made self, the person, is no longer the foundation for your sense of identity. Your sense of identity has shifted from being this limited person with its ups and downs and successes and failures.

Likes and dislikes, opinions, viewpoints have shifted from that. Your identity is consciousness itself. And that's the foundation for your sense of identity.

So you don't need the ego. The ego is the false identity. And the ego needs defensiveness.

It needs to be fed all the time. It needs to incorporate people and things into its sense of self. It feels always insufficient.

Not enough. Ill at ease. Irritated.

Angry. Sad. Complaining.

All the different states. Allowing this moment to be as it is is one of the doorways into the state of not thinking. If you just always work with the present moment, allow it to be because it already is.

So what else can you do? It is. So you align yourself with the is-ness of what is.

And then you realize a lot of the thinking is arguing with the is-ness. So when you align yourself with the is-ness of things then there's no need to think that much anymore. Unless there's a specific problem to solve.

But even there if you have a problem to solve to have fruitful thinking go into no thinking fast before you start to think. Become still. Present.

Alert. In that you don't need to do anything. You don't need to go anywhere.

You are still, present, alert. It's not a means to an end. You don't say, OK, I need to become still so that I can think better.

It's not a means to an end. It's an end in itself. But it happens that as you start thinking again your thinking becomes more intelligent.

And if there's a protracted problem to solve make it a habit to think what can we do these are the possibilities you might discuss it with somebody and make it a habit to periodically step back into no thought for one minute, half a minute step back into no thought two minutes even fifteen seconds can be helpful. Just hmm. And then thinking resumes.

You're more likely to find the solution to the problem in that way than only applying your analytical mind to it. Of course this applies to whoever you're working with also. Just always the stepping back.

The dance between form and formlessness in your life. So you will be lying in or on your bed tonight and see if you can just be there and enjoy the presence any difficulty you have in not thinking bring your attention into the body so you can feel the aliveness in the inner body while you're lying on your bed and you'll see no need to think and enjoy that moment fully if any emotions come allow this moment to be as it is nothing is rejected any emotion that comes just oh, there it is maybe some fear oh, I can feel a vibration there but you are the awareness around it so the emotion exists in that space of awareness which is you so it's like the awareness is the depth of the ocean and the emotion is the wave and the ripple on the surface you are the ocean you're also the surface but that is only the here's the emotion and here's the depth of the ocean you can feel your own depth and then you can allow the ripples and the waves to be there because you know you are not confined to that you can sense that which is deeper than that so that's good laughter laughter thank you be well and please remember practicing thoughtless awareness United States of Awareness thank you

Eckhart Tolle The Unobserved Mind Leads to Suffering [871bed92-028a-46d3-96ec-abb6d1cc5a4d]

The unobserved mind leads to suffering. In this episode, Eckhart talks to an audience in New York City. He reminds them of life's fleeting nature and that in 80 or 90 years, the names of people lit up by the bright lights of Broadway will be gone.

Success, fame, and fortune do not provide immunity from what Eckhart calls the burden of self. The identity we fabricate from our problems, including health, careers, finances, and relationships. Eckhart explains that the greatest source of suffering is not just created by the mind, but by our unobserved thoughts, because they drift in and out of our awareness, and we believe them without question.

Eckhart says over time, we weave them into a sad story called my life, and we become victim to these narratives. Eckhart explains that we cannot go through life without challenges. He says, even if we are awakened spiritually, difficulties will continue.

However, the difference is that we will no longer turn adversity into suffering because we have the awareness to liberate ourselves from the shackles of our thinking.

Our delay was a wonderful opportunity for you to practice presence. And it's wonderful to see so many awakened or awakening human beings, because you're all here, almost all, because what I call the awakening process, which is a shift in consciousness, is taking place in you. And if it's not yet, and you have come here either by accident, or you couldn't say no to somebody who said you should come, then either you are in for a wonderful surprise, or this evening will be excruciatingly boring for you.

And if the latter is the case, feel free to get up. You will not be judged, because most people here are very conscious. They don't judge anymore.

I think we're on Broadway here, aren't we? This is Broadway. A few days ago, I happened to see a clip on YouTube, a very old film clip, which said, Times Square and Broadway, it was mostly Broadway, in 1929.

And it showed like 10 minutes of people and cars hurrying along Broadway. Everybody in a hurry, trying to get somewhere. That was 1929.

I wonder where they got to. And you could do the same now. You could sit or stand somewhere on Broadway, and just for a few minutes, observe all the people and cars walking past you, and realizing in 80 years time, well, at the most 90, they'll all be gone.

And everybody in 1929, and everybody now, walking along Broadway, or any other street in any other city of the world, everybody carries a certain burden, which is the burden of their life, or as I call it, their life situation. And there's nobody who does not, to a greater or lesser degree, carry this burden with himself, with herself. And this is what the Buddha called the self.

That is the burden of the self. And you may find, periodically, you may still get drawn into this too, although you are awakening, you're coming out of it. Many people's entire life or entire consciousness is completely absorbed by their problems, by their life situation.

That is what fills their mind during the waking hours. And even while they're dreaming at night, still you have, it gets reflected even in dreams. And many people's sense of self, sense of identity, which is, of course, a fundamental thing, but your identities, you will be talking about that quite a bit, probably this evening.

I say probably because I don't know what I'm going to talk about. You carry the burden of this problematic identity with yourself. And so many people define their self, their identity, in terms of their problems.

And so this is what you take to the therapist. When you go to the therapist, you're taking with you your problematic self, an identity that is defined in terms of problems. You take that self to the therapist's office.

And then you say to the therapist, this is the riddle I'm presenting to you. Now solve this riddle of me. Give me the key to this solution of me.

Please show me how to get rid of my problems. Or if you already have some insight into yourself, you will say to the therapist, show me how to not make a problem out of my life. Show me how not to convert every challenge that arises in my life into a problem, and then incorporate it into my sense of self, so that the problem identity becomes you.

It's a very common thing. People don't know that this is what's happening. So they truly carry the burden of the self, the problematic self.

And what problems do they have? Some are very real challenges. They could be to do with your physical health, your body.

Could be to do with your financial situation, or your living situation. Your relationships, a huge source of problems you might have noticed. Your relationship, intimate relationship, even more problematic.

So you have all that, or you have somebody, a family member going through suffering. I already mentioned finances, work, professional, living situation, health situation. That's more or less it.

Relationships. So every human gets challenged in one or several of these areas in different periods of their life. You cannot go through life without being challenged deeply by life.

Life will present you with challenges. You can't escape that. And even if you awaken spiritually, it does not mean that you will no longer experience life as challenging.

The difference is you will no longer transform the challenges of life into suffering. You will no longer transform the challenges of life into a problematic me. And so that is the shift.

Now that I've talked about these challenges that nobody escapes. Now I forgot to mention, perhaps the most important source of suffering actually does not come to you from the external situation of your life, and not even from your physical body. For the majority of people, the greatest source of suffering is produced by their own mind.

But they don't know that. Once you realize that the greater part of your suffering is unconsciously produced by thought processes in your head that create certain emotions that are experienced as painful, not pleasant, any form of unhappiness, you will see that ultimately the mind is perhaps the greatest source of suffering in your life. But not just the mind, there's something that we could call the unobserved mind is the source of suffering.

What does that mean? The unobserved mind means that thoughts come into your head. They interpret what's around you.

They interpret your past. They project into the future continuously. They judge this and that according to the particular conditioning of your thought processes of your mind.

And you don't realize that these are all narratives. These are all stories that you tell yourself about yourself and about other people and about your past, about your so-called future. And the unobserved mind means you believe immediately in the interpretations that arise in your mind about life, about yourself, about others, about situations you find yourself in.

This is how it is. My life has been just so dreadful. I would have imagined it when I was 19.

I imagined something very different from what it has come. It wasn't meant to turn out like this. It's all turned into a terrible tragedy and has come to nothing.

My whole life is completely pointless. It's just one example of a narrative. There are many other more complicated narratives, but just as problematic and create an enormous amount of suffering.

The unobserved mind means you believe in every thought that comes into your head virtually. In other words, when I say you believe in every thought that comes into your head, it means you are in the grip of that stream of thinking that interprets people, places, situations, your so-called life for you. And you don't know it.

So you inhabit ultimately this mind that interprets things. And you actually, every person you meet, every situation you go into, your entire past and your so-called future is interpreted through the veil of this narrative. And the unobserved mind means you do not know that this is what's happening.

You mistake reality for the thought processes in your head. What's missing is what we could call awareness. Awareness of thoughts arising in your head.

A thought, for example, that says, I have failed at most things in my life. It's come to nothing. And perhaps you had wonderful successes and then they came to an end and now you have failed completely.

My life has completely become, what's the point of it all? What is the point of it all? Why continue?

I can't carry on like this anymore. And the future that you have all kinds of narratives of how the future is going to unfold for you. And the future, there's two aspects to it.

Hope, it's going to get better. One day I'm going to make it. That's an interesting expression.

Make it. Make what? I'm going to make it.

And perhaps you will make it, whatever it meant to you, perhaps you will make it. And it is something to celebrate. Suddenly you get the recognition you wanted.

Suddenly you get the material possessions you wanted. Suddenly you get the ideal partner. Well, at least seemingly ideal in the early stages of the relationship.

You find the ideal partner and then you're, I made it. So there are many ways of making it according to your personal desires. And very quickly, after a little while, you realize that even making it doesn't free you from suffering and from further problem making.

So there's no doubt that life is extremely challenging for, not only for every human being, for every life form, for every animal, even for every plant. Life is precarious. It is fleeting for every life form.

And yes, it's very challenging. An animal is born, a little puppy, what's going to happen to it? It's very fragile.

A human life is very fragile. And continuously you'll be set with so-called problems. And then the point comes where you can't, suddenly you have a thought in your head, he says, I can't take anymore.

And if you completely believe in the thought, I can't take any more of this, you may draw the conclusion that it's better to jump off a bridge somewhere or a building. If you're in New York, buildings might work best. You jump off a, if you completely believe in the thought that this is just too much, like this, I can't take the, just one thing after another.

Why is, why is God or life doing this to me? God must be malicious, evil, just out to get me. Everybody else is fine.

I know it because I read the Facebook pages of all these. And I know they're all fine. They're doing great.

They're having wonderful meals because their photos are there. And they're all continuously in a state of ecstatic happiness. Indicated by the two fingers they'd have when they show when photos are, no, sorry.

My life is great. It's so great. So you construct then a, an avatar, so to speak, in your head.

And this is the Facebook avatar. And some people actually confuse that with who they are. And that becomes very problematic after a while.

So I can't take any more. This is it. You might as well.

And some people you might have noticed in yourself, you talk to yourself in the, as if you were talking to somebody else. I can't tell you. Why don't you, why don't you just kill yourself?

So you have a dialogue with yourself and then you get completely involved in this dialogue. And there is no awareness in the background that tells you that these are certain thoughts arising in your mind. This is a narrative that's arising in your mind, according to the conditioning of your mind that goes back to when you were born.

And if you don't know this, you believe in it. You're in the grip of the narrative that produces emotions. By the way, as I'm sure you've noticed, the body that produces emotions arise in the body.

The body cannot tell the difference between something that's happening to you and something that your mind is saying. If your mind is saying that your life is totally dreadful, then your body takes that as a real thing. The body doesn't know the difference between, if your mind says you're in hell, the body cannot tell the difference whether you're actually in hell or whether you're just telling yourself that you're in hell.

So the unobserved mind is something that we call, the term we have for this kind of existence is unconscious. A human being who is spiritually speaking is unconscious, is completely unaware of the thought processes that are continuously happening to them. I'm saying happening, people say, I think, as if they had a choice.

Then you might as well say, I'm beating my heart. No, you don't. You are not doing it.

It's the heartbeat is happening to you. In the same way, you say, I breathe. Well, breathe, you can influence it a little bit.

You can take a deep breath. But again, it's not really true that you are breathing. The breathing is happening to you.

You can't even stop it, not for long. You can't just hold your breath and then die. There's something in you that wants to breathe and it's going to breathe.

Even if you're totally unhappy and you want to stop breathing, you can't stop breathing. There's something in you that wants to carry on breathing. So, I breathe is not quite correct either.

And certainly, I am circulating my blood. I am digesting my food. No, you're not digesting your food.

It's happening to you. There's an intelligence embedded in every cell of your body and that is doing all this. It's looking after that in the same way that now you say, I think.

And again, it's just as false in most cases, as to say, I'm beating my heart. Especially if you're completely unaware of your thought processes. You don't have a truth.

The thoughts happen to you. They suddenly pop up in your head. And you say, I think.

No, you don't. You are at the mercy of your thinking. So, once you realize that, isn't that amazing?

Thought or thinking happens to me, but I'm not actually doing it because if I had a choice, I would think more pleasant thoughts. And the fact that you cannot think more pleasant thoughts means you have no choice in the matter. Why don't you have a choice?

Because you're completely identified with every thought that arises. And what does identify mean? The noun is identity, which means there is a sense of self.

When you're completely identified with a thought, there's a sense of self in every thought. Every thought is imbued with a sense of self, me, a me sense. So the thought gets hold of you.

The stream of this continuous stream of thinking gets hold of you and you are in the grip of it. And that becomes your personality, your person. That becomes who you think you are.

And that complete lack of awareness, which is a different dimension of consciousness, that is one could say a dimension of consciousness that transcends the thinking mind. And this is why we are here. I'm just, this is just the preliminary, by the way.

There is a dimension of consciousness in you, either already actualized or still latent and just a potential. There's a dimension of consciousness in you that is non-conditioned, unlike the thinking mind, which is the conditioned thought processes. So a human being who is totally identified with their continuously arising thought processes, we call that human being unconscious in spiritual terms.

This is not the conventional meaning of unconscious because in conventional terms, unconscious means you're... So when people who are not, don't know about this, they think when I say that all these people are unconscious, they, what are you talking about? They're not like they're, they're awake, they're not unconscious.

No, unconscious in spiritual terms is complete identification with every thought that arises, plus the emotion that accompanies the thought. So you have the mental emotional energy field that continuously operates in you. And in most cases, it's not pleasant.

There is a sense of self that is there embedded in this, an identity that is in there and that identity, although it has its happy moments here and there, although it pretends that it is quite good at pretending that it's happy, especially on Facebook, but ultimately that identity is not a happy one. Again, now we come to another word which is used in spirit, spiritually is ego. Ego is a sense of self that arises from complete identification with a stream of thinking and the emotions that go with it.

That is the egoic self. That's the me, a narrative based sense of identity. So narrative based means there's a story of me and emotions accompany it.

The story of me, everybody has a story. I'm not saying you should, shouldn't have a story. Of course you have a story.

You have your past. You have ways in which you interpret the world. You interpret your own life.

To some extent, you have to interpret your life situation, but you realize that these are thoughts. You interpret the past. And again, it's a very problematic interpretation because if you're, you might, if you're two siblings, adults, let's say they are 40 years old and you ask them about events that happened in their childhood and they have totally different stories about the same event.

This is not uncommon. It's a totally different interpretation. So you cannot even be sure that the way in which you remember or interpret your past is correct.

What you can be sure about is that it is a narrative. It may correspond to the truth come very closely or not. It's a narrative.

It's a narrative in your head. So we have an entity that pretends to be you, that consists of thought formations and emotions coming together. And this entity is the egoic self.

And this entity has certain needs and certain characteristics. And one of the main characteristics of this entity that is the false self is a sense of insufficiency, of not enough, and of lack. Something important is missing in my life.

There's something important missing. And also another thought is there that there are certain things that I need to solve. I need this, this.

I mentioned it earlier. I need to solve this problem of me. So many people, identity is, they regard it as a problem.

I am a problem to be solved. Are you ever going to solve it? No.

Not on that level. There is a solution. There is an answer.

But that answer is not in that dimension of consciousness that is thinking, unconscious thinking. That is, there's no answer ever to be found. Some therapists are good that they can perhaps enable you to access that which transcends thinking, the awareness dimension.

I sometimes call it the transcendent dimension. Other therapists may just keep you stuck for 10, 15, 20 years on that level of purely mind and emotion. And the more you delve into it, not that it is bad thing to delve, to see things more clearly, but the more you go into it, into your past, the more differentiated and complicated it becomes.

So again, there's no ultimate solution to the dilemma of your existence. And the egoic self, apart from the characteristic of always experiencing itself as lacking in something, it feels that ultimately it is insubstantial, the me. So you always need something to fill it, to add to your sense of self.

You need either, it might be a possession, it might be an achievement. There's nothing wrong with possessions. There's nothing wrong with achievements.

It might be a relationship. You need a person. There's nothing wrong with relationship.

It's great to want to achieve something, but that operates on a completely different level. It does not operate on the most fundamental level. No achievement, no matter how wonderful it is, and it is great.

Why not achieve something great? But if you derive your identity from whatever it is you achieve, you're still trapped on that level of consciousness. And that means very quickly, your flow go back into suffering.

Even after the great achievement, very quickly, you're drawn back into suffering. I've spoken to many people who have achieved great things in the eyes of the world. And they tell you, yes, always when they say, I made it.

And then one morning they wake up again and their mind creates more suffering. The problematic me arises again in a different form. Challenges I experience that are different from the challenges you experienced before.

You thought, when I have my private jet, I'm not going to have challenges anymore. But you will. I don't have one, fortunately, but I know people who do.

And they are deeply challenged. They are deeply challenged by their life situation. Again, very different from before when they didn't have any money.

That was a different challenge. So it is wonderful to achieve, to do things, to be active. That is a level that is to be acknowledged in your life, that level.

But it does not solve the fundamental dilemma of human existence. In other words, it does not enable you to realize your true identity. Because there is such a thing as your true identity that has nothing to do with the story in your head.

It has nothing to do with your past or your so-called future. I say so-called future because the future doesn't exist. You might have noticed.

I've never found it. I've never experienced the future. If anybody had, let me know if you ever do.

The future only exists as a thought in your head. And of course, it exists on a practical level where we need that kind of thing in order to do things on this level of existence. Of course, we need future.

We could never have met here, come together because we needed future and say, on this day, at this time, we are going to get together here. We could have said perhaps, let's see if one day we accidentally come together because there's only the present moment. So let's see if the present moment accidentally brings us together.

No, on this, on the practical level, it's all fine. You need future. But on a deeper level to know who you are beyond the narrative in your head, you don't need future.

And future is recognized as ultimately illusory. So there is in every human being the potential of realizing the transcendent dimension within yourself. And that is ultimately what spirituality means.

It's the realization of the transcendent dimension of consciousness. Until you at least touch that, glimpse that, your life remains a very frustrating business. And bitter and frustrated if you go through your whole life, never even having had a glimpse of the transcendent dimension.

And hopefully, of course, more than a glimpse is to deeply realize the transcendent dimension. At the moment, there may be one or two of you here for whom the word transcendent dimension is an abstract concept. And your mind might say, what are you talking about?

To some people, it may just sound like some obscure philosophical concept, transcendent dimension. What does that mean? Okay, I will show you.

There are many of you, by the way, who have already accessed the transcendent dimension, but you didn't have a name for it. But we are here to actually experience the transcendent dimension. I'm just gradually taking you there.

And most of you know where I'm going. So just be with me. We're gradually approaching it.

We're just, we've been looking at that which is not the transcendent dimension. So ultimately you could say, you need to know, it's knowing who you are not that is the beginning of the realization of the transcendent dimension. You need to know who you are not.

You need to recognize that the narrative in your mind is no more than narrative. It has a certain validity, but it's not to be trusted. And it has certain characteristics that do not make for a happy life.

I already mentioned sense of lack, sense of insufficiency, never enough, and a very deep desire to experience antagonism with others. That's built into the egoic structure. That's why it's so insane.

The ego needs enemies because it defines itself through the other. It enhances its ultimately illusory identity as a narrative of me by creating a sense of superiority, moral or otherwise, towards your enemies. And this is why people love criticizing others, love judging others negatively.

This is why people love complaining continuously about other people or situations, even situation can become your enemy too. There are people who are never happy where they are. They're never like where they immediately find something to criticize about people.

They immediately find something to criticize about their life. There's continuously complaining voice in the head. The complaining voice is a huge ego thing that continuously feeds the ego loves complaining because then you emphasize your superiority.

Even if you complain about a situation, it implies that you are superior to the situation. You are judging it. You complain about a person.

It's usually you are right. And of course that person is wrong. If there's one or two people here who are still completely unconscious, there might be one or two.

You might want to look in here to see, isn't it strange that you are always right and everybody else is always wrong. Isn't that strange? That's strange.

I'm always right. Wow. In every discussion, in every encounter, I'm always right.

Oh, I never realized that. Wow. I must be great.

I must be wonderful. So occasionally you might still get this complaining thing in your head. It's not it complaining uselessly.

It doesn't change anything, that kind of complaining. It's just whining. Some people have the whining.

You complain about your life. The ego needs superiority. The identity, the false identity of the ego needs to be superior to others.

One way of being superior to others is to have an achievement that others don't have. Now, if you're lucky, you have a great body and other's bodies is not as good as yours. So that means for about, I don't know, for two decades or two and a half or three decades, that works.

And you can derive your sense of who you are from the image of your body and you compare to others. And of course, other bodies are puny if you compare to yours. So you display it with a, and why not?

It's something to be grateful for. But if you don't have a body, there are many other things you can be superior to others. You can be superior by possessions.

You have more than the other. It's a very favorite thing of the ego. You can be superior because your car is better than somebody else's, or you have a car and the other guy has a bicycle.

You can be superior in knowledge and derive your sense of identity from you hit other people over the head with your superior knowledge. Didn't you know that? Let me tell you.

That's how it is. And that gives a boost to the ego. Or you can derive it from your past.

Not necessarily your, but your family's past, especially in Europe. It still happens here and there in England, or you see where there's still a social classes in India still very strongly too. But what does the ego do?

If you don't have any of these things, you don't have superior knowledge. You don't have a great body. You don't have possessions.

You don't have ancestors. Oh, okay. Easy.

Says the ego. I'm a victim. I'm a victim of life, of other people, of groups of people, of people in my family.

I am a victim. And of course there are many people who are victims of other people. There are people to whom bad things happened in childhood, very bad things.

So obviously there are people who have experienced being a victim, but the fallacy is to build an identity around it, which becomes a narrative, which is a mentally emotional entity that then virtually lives in you, inhabits you, and you become the victim. This, by the way, as you know, the egoic identity can be predominantly personal. It can also be predominantly a group identity, a collective identity.

A collective identity is a tribe, or a nation, or a religion, or a race, or political thing. This is the collective ego identity. You have personal and you have collective.

Now the collective ego identity is even more insane than the personal. It is to a large extent responsible for millions and millions and millions of deaths in the world. A collective identity that pronounces the other group as the enemy.

It needs the enemy to define its sense of self more strongly. So to enhance the otherness of others, whether the others are a group or a single person, is one of the things that really keep the ego going. These are things that you need to, you may still experience from time to time remnants of this thing in your life, although you are awakening.

And if it happens, just be there and be aware of it so that you don't get trapped into that. What is the way beyond that level of consciousness, or as we call it, unconsciousness? And that despite certain spiritual teachers that have been around here and there, from the Buddha, from Krishna, others who have pointed to the truth, largely most of humanity has been trapped in the egoic consciousness for thousands of years.

And it has produced what we now know as human history. If you doubt that the normal state of consciousness of humans has a strong element of insanity, if you doubt that, you really need to read a book about, don't even go into distant history, there's too much of it. Just read a book about the first half of the 20th century, that wasn't that long ago.

Read a book about the first half of the 20th century and what happened in Europe, in Russia, in China. Just read that and your mouth will drop open if you read it and see. That actually is insane.

That cannot be other than insane. So much suffering created not by natural disasters, but by humans creating so much suffering for other humans. And so many people, millions upon millions killed, not only in warfare between nations, but killed by their own governments.

Germany, Russia, China, in smaller places, Cambodia, just dreadful, unbelievable things. So there is a strong element of insanity in this, what is called the normal human consciousness, because these, all these atrocities, these millions upon millions of people killed, they were not killed by psychopaths, but the people, the number of people killed by criminals and psychopaths is very, very small compared to the number of humans killed by normal humans. Normal.

And this is why I've been saying for years, normal equals insane. It's a slight exaggeration, but there's a lot of truth in it. We are now again at a situation where you can see the same unconsciousness arising again in the collective, going in the same direction as before.

But what is different here is there's a certain segment of the population in whom a new consciousness is arising. So that is, that could save us, but I cannot guarantee that it will. In the long term, it's all beautiful.

I know that the evolution of consciousness will proceed. The only question is, are we going to experience a regressive period for a while? That could be, but no gain in consciousness is ever lost.

So what is happening here will become part of the collective human consciousness. And even if humanity has to go through a regression, as they did, for example, after the collapse of antiquity, after the collapse of Greek and Roman civilization, which was relatively advanced, humans had to go with the so-called dark ages for several hundred years. Some people say it was a thousand years, but a thousand years is very little in the whole of history.

So it's not important. What is important is that there is an awakening that is spreading. Still, a lot of it is underground.

It is not visible on mainstream television, newscast. You will, very unlikely that you will find an account tonight in the Situation Room of CNN about our gathering here. This is a Situation Room.

There was a meeting at the Beacon Theater today, and these people claim that it is possible to lead a peaceful and sane existence. What do you think?

I'm Oprah Winfrey, and you've been listening to Eckhart Tolle, Essential Teachings, the podcast. You can follow these essential teachings on Spotify or wherever you listen to podcasts. If you haven't yet, go to Spotify and follow this podcast.

Eckhart Tolle The World Is Not Here to Make You Happy [b0169b7c-8413-40a4-b85e-f4614e5a3059]

The world is not here to make you happy. It's here to make you conscious. In this podcast, Eckhart answers a question about overcoming suffering and finding happiness.

Eckhart says the world is not here to make us happy. It's here to make us more conscious. He says the beginning of awakening is the end of suffering.

He believes we should liberate ourselves from the demand that anything should make us happy. Instead, he says we need to discover a deep appreciation for everything that is. Eckhart explains the world does not have the power to make us happy, but it is a wonderful catalyst to help us awaken to consciousness.

Hello. I have a, well, I don't know if it's a question, but I guess to get to the point, nurturing joy, I think with things that have happened and gloom that's come over me because of some physical things. And I'm studying and working on bringing presence.

So any moment that I feel maybe a little bit of happiness or then my mind is looking for pointers, looking at, well, this is temporary. So I guess my question is, can you speak about joy? Because often we're talking about our struggles and how to become present and not have struggles, not have suffering.

So I'm thinking I need to hear a little bit about joy and how to nurture that. Right.

So what kind of give one or two examples of what kind of happiness that arises that you think, oh, maybe I shouldn't be feeling that or it's not, it's not going to last or what, for example, what kind of happiness?

[Speaker 2] (1:57 - 2:48)

Well, what comes to mind right now is, is when I see my grandchildren, I can also get really exhausted and frustrated, but yeah, there's that excitement listening to a song. I can feel something or also a memory of a song, what it brings up. Right.

Maybe for something that I'm going to be doing. And then with that too, another question I had, I find I can get very emotional. So if I get angry, I cry.

If I also, if I go out in nature and I just feel the beauty, I can cry. So I can cry with joy and I can cry with grief for things I've lost. So with that crying, that's my reaction to so many things.

[Speaker 1] (2:49 - 12:08)

Yes. But if you're crying, for example, seeing the beauty of nature, is that something that you would rather not have or are you, would you be happy with crying? Because it's not a, it's not a sad crying.

It's something touches you on the emotional level, the beauty of nature. And then you, you cry a little bit. That can be, I, I have experienced that too, occasionally.

And it's a lovely experience. So the joy is an important part of being present. And it doesn't mean that the fact that all the things that you perceive with your senses are impermanent, it doesn't mean that you cannot enjoy them while they are there or that you should not enjoy them while they're there, but you can only truly enjoy them if you're in touch with the deeper level of yourself, the, the presence, the deep eye.

But if you're not in touch with the deep eye, then to derive your happiness from external things very often, and I think you're, you realize that very often leads to unhappiness because you're happy that there's something there, but it's not going to last. Nothing is going to last. Everything's going to dissolve eventually, sooner or later.

So if something makes you happy, it can also make you unhappy and probably will. Perhaps this is what you mean. So you are, you're aware of that.

And it is very true. Anything that makes you happy, because, because of the fact of impermanence, as the Buddha puts it, and in fact, the Buddha says, talks about the fact of suffering, Dukkha, and he says, even the things that make you happy are Dukkha. And perhaps this is what you're talking about.

Even the things that make you happy are a form of suffering, because if they make you happy today, they will make you unhappy tomorrow, or their absence or disappearance will make you unhappy tomorrow. People have experienced that in relationships, you meet a new person, this person makes you very happy. And the book, the Buddha would call that also Dukkha, because it is more than likely that this person is also going to make you unhappy doesn't necessarily mean that the relationship will dissolve, although very often it does.

But it could just mean that every relationship has is problematic in some way. It's not it's not always easy to live with a person. So there will be many instances when the person that makes you happy today will make you unhappy the next day, or the following week, or then the whole relationship will dissolve.

And then the person that made you happy last year, makes you very unhappy this year. It's called wedding and honeymoon and divorce, which 50% of people who get married, get divorced. So does that mean that you should not allow yourself to be made happy by things that you experience in the external world?

And that is not the case. But these things, the Buddha talks about that these things make you things that make you happy will also make you unhappy. The fact of Dukkha or suffering as the Buddha calls it, only applies as long as you're not aware of the deeper dimension of who you are, and realize that all true joy arises from there.

And that is not caused by anything in the external world. It's a it is, it is not, you experience the joy of being satchitananda, the joy of being it arises from within you, it does not come from without. So it's not that the joy of being you experience because you're lovely environment, it's doesn't, it doesn't matter what your environment is, you can experience the joy of being wherever you are, whether you're in the middle of a busy street in a big city with all kinds of traffic noise, and so on, or whether they are out in the forest, there can be the joy of being.

And once when you're connected with that level, and realize that that's the ultimate reality is there, then you can appreciate all the beauty in the phenomenal world with your that you perceive with your senses, appreciate it, and actually experience it more deeply, because you can sense in all those things, lovely nature, or children, or other humans, or any experience that you have, you can sense that an underlying essence, that is the essence of who you are.

And everything, for example, that you see in nature, you can sense the aliveness of the tree, of the flower, of the forest, of the sky, as one could almost say, you can, you sense them as manifestations of the consciousness that you are, you can see yourself in all that, the beingness of the tree, there's more to the tree than meets the eye. There's more to the flower than meets the eye. But you won't know that until or unless you realize there's more to you than meets the eye.

That is the invisible presence, the essence of who you are, the consciousness that you are, the stillness to feel that, that is, when you've sensed that, then you can sense this as the essence in all phenomena that you perceive in the outer world. The essence of all those phenomena is that essence that you can sense within yourself. And then you can truly enjoy the beauty of this world, and the pleasant experiences without becoming dependent on them for your happiness.

In other words, we could say they are reflections of your state of consciousness that the tree is a reflection ultimately of the consciousness that you are in a different vibrational frequency, but it's the same consciousness. So then you can truly enjoy the world without needing to attach yourself to any condition. A condition could be anything, a situation where you live, a trip, an experience, a walk in nature, any, any, you can enjoy any condition without attaching yourself to the condition because you realize the enjoyment comes from within.

You don't need it to feel happy that happiness arises from within. It's not from without. Because as you know, it will disappear, everything comes to an end.

The most beautiful walk in nature at some point, you have to go home and prepare dinner, whatever. And then you have to, oh, that was so nice. To be able to be to be present in every experience, not lose yourself in the experience, but enjoy it deeply.

The ability to have a loving relationship with the things of this world that can only arise when your state of consciousness is not dependent on the things of this world. Then you can love the things of this world. It's not the attachment, loving attachment, then you can sense their inherent aliveness, inherent aliveness in everything.

But you can only sense it because you can sense the inherent aliveness in yourself. And then even the fact that everything goes eventually or sooner or later, everything dissolves, every experience has a beginning and an end. Every tree has a lifespan, it will die.

You can only love this world when you don't need it anymore for your happiness. Then you can appreciate things without the neediness and appreciate them much more deeply than before.

[Speaker 2] (12:09 - 12:21)

Feeling of love that I can feel. So just nurturing that by realizing that sensation of love and the emotion is just there.

Yes. And there is an indestructible essence in all life forms. And that is the one consciousness that appears or manifests in so many disguises of all so many life forms.

And it's all wonderful when you see, when you recognize that, and then you recognize your oneness with all these life forms. And that is love. Then you can love the forest, the tree, nature.

But what you love is deeper than what your senses show you. It's beautiful. The appearance is beautiful.

But beauty is something deeper than just a surface phenomenon. When you recognize beauty in something, something shines through that in the sense-perceived realm we call beauty. But the recognition of beauty also implies that for a moment, your mind was still, and there was just a presence.

There are still many people, there are many people in this world who are so immersed in their noisy conceptualizing mind that they don't really relate to beauty. They can't, they can't really sense it. And that's a great pity.

It's a great loss. If you recognize beauty, always in that moment of recognition, there's a stillness in you. If there were no stillness, you wouldn't recognize beauty.

Your mind might say, oh, that's a lovely sunset. But you haven't really seen it. You haven't really experienced it.

Oh, that's such a nice flower. What's it called? Oh, okay.

You haven't really seen the flower. You just experience everything through the concepts of your mind. Immediately you have a concept for everything.

Oh, that's what it is. Okay, now let me think about my problems again. So whenever you see beauty, respond to it.

It puts you in touch with the essence of who you are ultimately. Sometimes people can do that when they see great art. A lot of modern art, perhaps not so much, but great art, like a painting of a landscape, whether it's by one of the impressionists of the 19th century, whether it's landscapes of no particular, not spectacular at all, just an ordinary view of a hedge and a tree, and yet there's something there, and you can sense it when you look at it.

Turner, the paintings of the English painter Turner, who painted sky and light, just amazing. You look at that, and some people can, they go into a museum, and they look at the paintings. Perhaps in that moment they can sense something.

But when they go into nature, they can't sense it. I heard somebody a long time ago, it was, overheard somebody, there was a sunset, close to a sunset, and a man said to his wife, oh, look at that Turner sky. So he could see only the sky through the lens of the art that he had seen, no direct sensing of the aliveness of it.

So nature is, whatever it may be in this world, it's always lovely, especially if you don't need it to make you happy. Anything in this world, you'll appreciate it for what it is. It's lovely when you no longer need it to make you happy or give you a stronger sense of self or whatever it may be.

As I often say, the world cannot make you happy. Nothing in this world, it's not here to make you happy. My favorite saying, I've said it for years, the world is not here to make you happy, it's here to make you conscious, to awaken you.

It does not have the power to make you happy. But when you realize that, you drop the demand that anything should make you happy, suddenly there comes a deep appreciation of everything, which some people might call gratitude for everything, because you've dropped the demand that it should make you happy. That's an enormous liberation.

But when that demand is dropped, deep appreciation suddenly arises. So that's how it is.

[Speaker 2] (17:14 - 17:17)

Thank you so much. Thank you. And everybody else.

[Speaker 1] (17:17 - 17:18)

Yes.

[Speaker 3] (17:18 - 18:30)

Thanks so much. Thank you. I feel so blessed to be able to come to you live from across the world.

So thank you. So my question today is, I've been in the spiritual closet for lots of years. Growing up, my mom was very, very spiritual.

And there was always books and I was always learning and I always, I just loved it all from, as young as I can remember, I was always interested, but always just kept that kind of private to myself. And then in the past five years, I've really kind of delved much deeper into my spiritual practice. And I'm a primary school teacher.

So I just love being with the children. But I must admit, now I feel at the stage where I would rather be teaching them life skills than maths and English. I really want to teach them awareness and breath work.

And I feel like I'm getting ready to try and take a new branch out and to transition into teaching meditation, becoming a meditation teacher. But my question is, how do I know when I'm ready to take that next step to go from learning my own spiritual practice to helping teach others the tools to be able to do that yourself?

[Speaker 1] (18:30 - 33:47)

Yes, that's a good question. Thank you. Yes.

Yeah. So you would rather teach consciousness than mathematics or whatever it may be. That reminds me of a funny event in my early life.

There was a time when I didn't know what to do. I didn't know at that point I was destined to be a spiritual teacher. I had already gone through a shift in consciousness.

But I didn't understand it fully. It was just a peaceful state of consciousness in the background. And I thought, oh, I have to do something.

So I applied at a job at a university in England. And they invited me to an interview. There were maybe five or six professors interviewing me.

And they asked me some questions about the subject matter. And towards the end of the interview, one of the professors said to me, I'll always remember, he must have had some insight. He said, and what do you really want to do?

He realized that I didn't really want to be teaching that. So he had some deep intuitive insight. But at that point, I didn't really know that yet.

What do I really want to do? But a little bit later, I was sitting on a park bench and still didn't have a job. And a man was sitting next to me.

It was so long ago, I don't remember the details of the conversation. But he asked me a question. And I gave an answer.

And he must have touched on something spiritual. And he suddenly, as he was waking up, he said, what do you mean by that? And I realized what I said to him at that point was the beginning of an awakening for him.

And that was the beginning of my career as a spiritual teacher. Many other casual encounters followed. So one interesting sign is that, are you already perhaps, in some non-formal ways, providing some kind of spiritual insight or teachings for other people, whether it's children or others around you?

Might not even seem significant. But do people sometimes come to you with a question or wanting to help? That's a good sign that you're meant to do this.

Another important point is that you have probably read quite a few books and have studied meditation deeply and so on. Important consideration is, especially for people who have read books and are perhaps very knowledgeable about spirituality, a question to ask yourself is to what extent you have internalized the teachings. There's a big step between having knowledge, spiritual knowledge that has come through workshops, going to talks, reading books, spiritual knowledge, and having internalized the teaching, which means really be able to live it.

And for most people, that happens when they encounter big challenges in life. I know some people, which is not uncommon these days, they lost their job. One person I know, they lost their job and are now in a state of fear.

Am I ever going to find another job at my age? And this person has been involved in spirituality for many years, has read many, many books, and yet there's a state of fear. Oh, my God, this is your point.

This is the opportunity to internalize the teaching and totally live it. Now, to some extent, you probably have done that already. I have that feeling.

So, the next step would be what do you do? What step do you take to initiate this process of becoming a more formal teacher? The most important ingredient in any spiritual teaching situation is not your knowledge.

That's because the knowledge is fine, but then you internalize it, and then you can forget it. And the most important is your presence. Whenever you sit with another person, are you able to hold that space of alert presence?

That your knowledge is no longer important in the actual teaching situation. When you need bits of knowledge, it'll come. They will come.

But the most important ingredient is to be that spacious presence in the teachings. And you probably know that already, to be that spacious presence. So, if you're able to hold that spacious presence in the presence of another, then you provide that space for them.

You provide it for them. And in that space, transformation happens and awakening happens. Some people, when they feel they are ready, although ultimately you're never really ready as a person, the person is not ready.

But when you become a spiritual teacher, the transcendent dimension of who you are arises, especially in the teaching situation, and you're no longer there as a person. The world needs spiritual teaching desperately. There are some spiritual teachers who are able to hold that spacious presence in the teaching situation when they give a talk or they sit with an individual or a group of people.

And they are not yet able to continuously live it in their daily life. I don't know what applies to you. But even if you cannot yet be totally present throughout your life, it is still the case that you could be a good spiritual teacher and hold that presence in the teaching situation.

So one possibility is to find a modality that is relatively easy that you can use as a medium through which you provide spiritual teaching, a modality of some healing modality, some psychotherapy modality, almost as an excuse for spiritual teaching. We live in the world of form. The world wants some particular form.

Spiritual teacher is not always the easiest form when you explain what you do or who you are. So if you notice that it's already arising organically, then at some point, you may want to consider the possibility of whether you adopt some modality of so that through which you reach people, whether it's you call it psychological counseling or some body work or whatever it may be. That can be an entry point.

And from there, it will expand. And then at some point, you may well you drop the modality. And now as you teach, the teaching will expand and deepen as you will learn many things that you didn't know before when you speak to people from coming from that space of spacious presence.

And that spacious presence is you don't know the answers when you're in spacious presence. You would never feel when you're with somebody, a group of people or one person, you never feel that you know the answer, then you're not going to be a great spiritual teacher. The beginning for every teaching is the state of spacious awareness.

In that spacious awareness, you know nothing. But you're able to listen. The ability to listen is inseparable from the state of alert presence.

And in that out of that listening, occasionally, you will find you might ask more questions. Questions become very important. Just as Socrates taught, mainly by asking questions.

And Socrates said, they call me the wisest old man, because I'm the only one who knows that he knows nothing. The beginning is the spacious openness for every spiritual teaching. So when you learn a modality, that's only an entry point, that's fine, maybe you like it, and you continue to practice it, and it becomes part of your spiritual teaching, or you transcend the modality and then just direct spiritual teaching.

So your accumulated knowledge is secondary. It's it has some perhaps some function, but it is secondary in any spiritual teaching. Your ability to be present is the most important part of spiritual teaching.

And in that state of presence, you don't know the answer yet. Then the answer may come through you, or it may come through the other person, or the problem will dissolve and be recognized unimportant. All these things can happen.

So once you take a step, and you can take a step probably as a part time part time thing first. So in my case, it grew very gradually and organically over a number of years. So it started with meeting people casually.

Then finally, I recognized this is my mission in this world, it seems to be. So I no longer applied for any jobs anymore. And then I announced that I would see people.

For a little while, I used the modality of spiritual healing, because I, some people actually experienced some spiritual healing when I gave them counseling. So for a couple of years, or two or three years, people knew me as a spiritual healer, and would come for spiritual healing. Then I dropped that label because I saw too many people just wanted to get rid of their physical symptoms, but they were not interested in spiritual awakening.

And spiritual healing became not that important to me anymore. Because after you heal a person a few years later, they die anyway, they all everybody dies. So there's something more important, or there's nothing wrong with spiritual healing, it's beautiful.

But there's something more important, and that spiritual awakening. So I dropped that. And then again, there was a, there was a chance encounter, I was invited to a dinner in London.

And there was a man, at that point, I was seeing people for counseling sessions. And they, initially, they would just leave a donation. And then after a while, there was a charge.

I met a man at a dinner in London, while I was engaged in beginnings of spiritual teaching. And I talked to him, he didn't, he knew nothing about me. And there wasn't much to know about me.

But he worked for the Theosophical Society in London, Theosophical Society, you may know, they've been around for a long, long time. And he said, Oh, we need people like you at the Theosophical Society, you must come and give a talk. So she must have felt something or seen something.

So he invited me, that was the first time I ever gave a formal talk, was in the Theosophical Society in London, to about 20 people. And that was the beginning of a more clearly defined form. I still remember the title of that talk that I gave my first ever public talk.

It was called, they wanted an interesting sounding title. It was called spiritual dimensions in psychotherapy. And that talk, I found one interesting fact, I had, I would never have known.

When I did counseling sessions, of course, I had no notes about sometimes I wrote things down afterwards. Because I was surprised under what I said I did said things I didn't know that I knew them. But during this talk, I thought, Oh, I need to have some outline of what I'm going to talk about points 2015 points, something.

So I talked. And then I came to end of what I had to say. And then I looked at my notes.

And I noticed immediately the moment I looked at my notes, these 20 people in the room, the energy in the room got deflated immediately. When I talked freely, there was a collective presence arising. Everybody was alert.

I looked at my notes, and it went like like a balloon that was coming. And then when I started talking again, it took a while for the presence to return. And then okay, okay.

Then I looked again, same thing happened again, energy deflated. And that was the last time I ever had notes for talks. Even if I forget something important, it doesn't matter.

The presence is the teaching. It's not ultimately what you say. The presence is the teaching.

The presence is who you are. So you are the teaching. You're not the teacher, the essence of who you are as a teaching.

And you will reflect to people who they are. You awaken the presence in the other by your presence. And the other is not other.

It's the one presence arising. And that's the function of the spiritual teacher. All the stuff is secondary.

So words or what you have learned, etc. is secondary. Primary is the presence.

There's only one teacher. Presence is the teacher. And so that's how it is.

And the more presence shines through you, the more powerful the teaching. Thank you.

That's fantastic. Thank you so much. Thank you very much.

Right. So we've come to the end of our session. Let's conclude with a moment of stillness.

Thank you.

Eckhart Tolle The World Will Always Challenge You [27c17d1b-ff0e-43cf-90d9-b927661c802c]

The world will always challenge you. In this podcast, Eckhart talks about the importance of remaining what he calls teachable. He cautions us to be aware of the stories, the concepts, and labels we use to interpret the world.

He encourages us to ask ourselves when we meet someone new, do we give ourselves space to just be, to perceive, or do we instantly judge and manufacture stories about this person? He ponders when we travel, do we experience awe or do we compare it to other places we've been? He points out that when we never experience anything new, the sense of aliveness is gone from our lives.

Eckhart says we must ask ourselves who are we without the old narrative, the mental and emotional conditioning, which is the result of our self-centered thinking. He points out the world will always challenge us. He says it's not here to make us happy.

It is here to help us awaken.

It's two o'clock in Europe and Australia. It's already tomorrow. It might be interesting to check in inside yourself right as we are sitting here, as you are sitting here.

Are you thinking all the time as you sit here, or are there spaces when you're not thinking and just an awareness? And by saying you're in spaces when you're not thinking, I do not mean drifting off towards sleep after this perhaps too heavy a meal. So I'm not referring to, okay, I'm not thinking because I'm too tired to think.

Yes, you have become free of thinking, but you're moving towards unconsciousness. But are you able to simply be alert? And are there spaces where you're not, you don't have to think, just be the awareness for whatever is being perceived in your consciousness?

It does not require effort, but it requires alertness. There was a Zen teacher who summarized the teaching of Zen in one word. He called it attention, and he'd raise his finger.

Can you explain Zen, please? They asked. Attention.

And in many humans, that spacious awareness does occur briefly throughout their day, but they are not, it's so brief that they don't know that it's happening. Every time you look at something, something new comes into your field of vision, or you hear something new, a sound. For the first few moments, it's just the pure perception against the background of awareness.

And then the mind comes in. Or there's a sound. Before the mind interprets it, there's a space of perhaps two seconds or three, when there's the pure awareness and the sense perception.

Or when you meet another person here for the first time, you look at them, or maybe they say something, or they don't, and you look at them. And if you're alert for the first moment or a few moments, I don't know what is a moment, you're simply perceiving that human being. And then the mind comes in.

Or you're observing another human being, they're sitting at another table, and you're looking. Is there a space where it's just a pure perception against the background of awareness? Or how quickly do you interpret, formulate some kind of concept?

Be aware of the voice in your head, the narratives, the stories, the concepts that interprets the world. And be aware that often there are brief moments when that is not happening, and it's usually when something new arises. Traveling can be helpful in that sense, because whatever you experience is something new.

And potentially, it can help you to be more awake, because every impression is new. And unless you carry such heavy conditioning in your mind, that there's only a fraction of a second when you look at something new, and immediately you compare it to what you know, and judge it, oh, that's not, I don't like that, there's too many people here, that's whatever. It's immediately judged, so that you never experience anything new, because you experience everything through the filter of your conditioned mind.

Every situation, everything you see is through that filter. That is the unconscious state, spiritually speaking. Also, there's a reason why Jesus said, to enter the kingdom of heaven, you have to become like a little child.

And he refers, of course, to the absence of concepts, because a little child who hasn't learned the language yet is in that state of openness. Even a dog is in that state of openness, unless it desperately wants something, which is usually food. In that state of no self-concept, and doesn't impose a concept on you, either, because it has no self-concept, no self, the dog has no self, in spiritual terms.

The dog is itself a self, himself, whatever. The dog is itself, doesn't carry the burden of a concept identity, every human carries the burden of a conceptual identity. So the dog has no ego.

Or the cat. Although I have observed in rare instances, the beginnings of ego in certain dogs and cats, just little beginnings, because they've lived with humans for too long, so it rubs off on the dog, and then suddenly they have a bit of resentment. But that freedom of living without the burden of a self-concept is amazing.

It allows for a huge amount of joy in your life, and a sense of aliveness, without the self, as the Buddha would call it. No self. So the dog is free of inferiority complex, or superiority complex, free of negative body image.

Even the ugliest dog is okay with it. And even an overweight dog doesn't have a problem with weight. So there's not that image self in the mind, that you then split yourself into.

You live with an image of yourself, and you live through that image of yourself. And that is, that image consists of stories and narratives, and it's your life. Humans call it my life.

And of course, that is always there, but is that all there is? Or is there more to you than meets the eye? And of course there is infinitely more than meets the eye.

You just have to discover it, not achieve it. Because if you say you need to achieve this transcendent state, or you need to achieve the realization of being, that would imply that you are not there yet, and you need time to get there. But time doesn't get you there, because time is the obstacle to that realization.

Time is needed, of course, in this world, which is the horizontal plane of existence. Time is everywhere. Everything functions through time.

You can't have an appointment without time. We couldn't have come together here without using time to say, on such and such a date, at such and such a time, we're all going to be here. And it worked.

We're here. Now, if you confuse that horizontal realm with a transcendent realm, then you might say, let's not be the slaves of time, but just trust that one day we'll all come together here in the present moment, because that's all there is. And the universe will arrange it.

And perhaps if we lived indefinitely, then perhaps after one billion years, we all accidentally come together here. But that's unlikely. So time is here on this plane, cannot be denied.

It's everywhere. It gives you a lot. It offers you a lot of possibilities of growth and attainment and so on.

Every doing requires time. Every achieving requires time, and it has its place on this horizontal plane, of course. And of course, eventually, the time kills you.

So, okay. It gives you everything, and then it takes everything away on this horizontal plane. As a pessimist once said, life is a sexually transmitted disease with always a fatal outcome.

That's true, it seems. Can't be denied. And then there is another dimension that is accessible in human consciousness.

There's a potential of realizing the vertical dimension as opposed to the horizontal dimension. And the vertical dimension, you enter it as you become present. And as you become present, the stream of thinking subsides, is replaced with a space of awareness, awareness arises.

And so you exist as a temporal being. Yes, you have a certain age on the horizontal plane. But when I ask you, who are you or what are you on the horizontal plane, you will often, when you reply, you will refer to perhaps first thing, you might refer to your gender, and then you refer perhaps to your age.

And then you might refer to other things, race or the work you do, or your position in society, or whatever it may be. All these things exist on the horizontal plane. But one of the first things on the horizontal plane is you think you have a certain age.

And that, of course, is true as far as the body is concerned. And then when I ask you, who or what are you, without reference to any thought, what does it feel like to be you without reference to a narrative in your mind that you call my life? So for example, in this moment, you don't need to remember anything about your life.

But when you don't remember anything about your life, are you still there? And what does that mean? I am still there without reference to a narrative.

What is that I am that's still there, that doesn't seem to have any content anymore. Without the narrative, there's an I am without content. This is why it's so hard to describe it or to talk about it.

What is left is a presence. That's all you can say about it. It's an absence of thought, but there's a presence there.

Can't define it. And there, you have no age. It doesn't matter whether you're 20 years old or 100.

There's a presence, a beingness, a being. One could say, you know that you exist. Well, exist is the wrong word.

You know that you are in that realization in the vertical dimension. You know that you are, but that's all you know and all you need to know. Nothing needs to be or should be added to it.

The beingness itself. In ancient Greece, the temple of Apollo at Delphi had inscriptions. There's enormous wisdom arising in ancient Greece.

One of the inscriptions was, it goes back to Socrates or Pythagoras, know yourself, know thyself inscribed. And then on another side of the temple, there was a strange inscription, you are. And people didn't know later on when they looked at it hundreds of years later, thousands of years later, what does that mean?

Maybe there's something missing. Let's look more closely. You are, maybe it got eroded by time.

There must be something else. But they couldn't find anything else. And a few people later realized the deeper meaning of it.

And they actually go together with know thyself and you are, go together. Know thyself does not refer to the personality. It does not refer to knowing the story of you in great detail, exploring perhaps hidden things that you hadn't known about yourself.

There's a place for that too, but that's not what is meant by the ancient know thyself. It's not the self that you get to through going through psychoanalysis for 10 years. Because there's always new layers of memories.

Oh, I hadn't realized that. That's so interesting. My life is becoming so complex and interesting.

The longer I have psychoanalysis, the more interesting it gets. It has its place. It's fine.

It's interesting. It's like a movie. That's an interesting movie.

And people like to see movies that are not only interesting, but interesting must mean things must, there must be things that go wrong in the movie. Otherwise it's not interesting. And in the movie of your life, there also there must be things that go wrong and they do all the time.

Otherwise it's not interesting. So know thyself doesn't refer to all the details of your life, hidden motivations, all those things, repressed desires. Know thyself doesn't refer to that.

That's a different, a different knowing and a different self, a different knowing and a different self. The knowing, the work to know here is not used with reference to conceptual knowing, analytical knowing, knowing through thought structures, thoughts, words, concepts. There is a deeper knowing that is non-conceptual.

And there is a deeper self than the conceptual entity that is the egoic entity. The self that the Buddha described as an illusion, that is the conceptual entity. There is a deeper self that in Buddhism is described as the no-self and in Hindu teachings is described as the transcendent self, the Atman.

So the inscription on the Temple of Delphi refers to that. So first of all, the knowing is not the conceptual knowing. There is another way of knowing and there is another self other than the self that you are familiar with that you call your life, me and my life.

So that's important to know. And the key is given in these two words, you are, that is the key to knowing yourself. And you are is the realization of being, which is the transcendent self.

And that knowing is very different from conceptual knowing. And this is a very important point, especially in our contemporary civilization, which is all over the globe now. We only know conceptual knowing, we disregard or completely forget there's another way of relating to the world, being in the world than the conceptual one.

And that refers to yourself also, but it also refers to the ways in which you experience the world. When you experience something new, let's you travel a completely different environment on the one that you live in. For some of you that may be here, this is very different from where you live if you live in Canada or Iceland or anywhere in England.

We visit many foreign places and sometimes a few days before or after an event we explore a little bit, we are transformed into tourists. And if you have a guide, sometimes you had guides to show us a city or to show us only maybe a very unusual area, the nature reserve or something like that. And what I noticed is the guides, because that's their job, they never stop talking.

It's going insane. But you can't say anything because they're so nice and they're so knowledgeable. It's rude to say, can you please stop talking?

I want to experience it. I want to experience this place without concepts. I want to really know it deeply.

I can have concepts too, but that's not the main way in which I want to experience this wonderful place. So I don't remember where we were not that long ago. It was some kind of tropical place somewhere.

And there was a guide, a lovely young woman, very knowledgeable. And we are walking through this forest, a group of people, maybe 12 people or so, they were following her. And she talked continuously because it's everything.

So this tree and this little thing and that, how it originates, how it interacts with other things in the forest, and so knowledgeable, you learn so much in this, there is a place for that. But I don't want to be confined to that way of knowing the forest. There is another way of knowing the forest.

So what I did is I stayed behind. And then the group was always far ahead of me. And I could hear her talking in the distance, but I couldn't understand anymore what she was saying.

And I was actually able to experience the forest in a different way. I admit I missed quite a lot of what I could have learned by listening to her, probably would have forgotten 90% of it afterwards. But at the time it would have been so, and everybody else was so interested in asking questions.

But are they really there? Or are they in their conceptual mind and the actual experience of the forest is a peripheral event, mainly they are in the conceptual structures of their mind. Huh.

So that's how I avoided being trapped in that by staying behind. And I don't know whether our guide noticed it, she didn't say anything, she looked at me a couple of times, and wondering why is this guy staying behind, doesn't he want to learn things? I'm not against learning because there are the two dimensions, admittedly, you can learn many very interesting things about the forest, but there is the other also.

You cannot have just the one that confines you to a very limited way of experiencing reality, that reduces everything to concepts which are dead. So can you really sense the aliveness of the forest? Can you sense the sacredness of the forest by only applying concepts to the forest?

No, you cannot sense that when you are trapped in concepts. There is no space for the deeper experiencing of the forest. There is no space for it.

So I'm not advocating letting go of all knowledge, but finding a balance between one way of knowing and the other way of knowing things. Our civilization has lost the balance, it's trapped in one way of knowing only. And the deeper way of knowing which is associated with the vertical dimension, and is associated with the present moment, and associated with the absence of thought, but the acute awareness in the present moment, that nobody in mainstream culture teaches you that, or talks about it, or even knows about it.

They don't know about it. And again, know thyself applies here also. You can know yourself as a conceptual entity, which is your, sometimes I call it your form identity.

Your form is the physical form and the psychological form of you, the personality. The body and the personality is your form identity. Everybody has one, and it lasts for a little while until it gets killed by this horrible, criminal, we call time.

So everybody has one, but do you need to be one, or was it to have it? You have it, but you are not it. Essentially, you are not it.

What you are, the being, is realized not through concepts. It is much deeper than concepts. There is a knowing that is non-conceptual, and that is a higher intelligence than conceptual intelligence.

One could say conceptual intelligence is like the reflected light, like the moon reflects the light of the sun. In that same sense, the conceptual intelligence, yes, it is also consciousness. It is not separate from consciousness.

Perhaps a better analogy is, my favorite analogy for that is to say that compared to this conceptual consciousness is ripples on the surface of the ocean, waves and ripples on the surface of the ocean. If you are a ripple on the surface of the ocean, the question is, do you know yourself only as a ripple, or do you realize that yes, you are a ripple, but you are also, and more fundamentally, a manifestation of the ocean itself. So you are both.

The ripple existence is fairly short-lived, but what happens when the ripple realizes that it is not just the ripple, it is also more important, more essentially, the ocean. Now that would make a lot of difference to the life of the ripple, because if the ripple only sees itself as a ripple on the surface, the horizontal dimension, all it knows is other ripples, and it looks around, associating itself with other ripples. Let's get together.

Maybe if the two of us get together, we can become a bigger ripple. Okay, and then there are others that don't look, they are a bit threatening, stay away from me, I don't want to, I don't like the way you look. And then there's a little wave, not a ripple, there comes, who is that guy?

Well, his name is Bezos Ripple. Well, that's a big ripple, it's a wave. But eventually, its fate is the same as all the other ripples.

This horizontal dimension, it ends up where all the ripples end up. So if you are trapped on the horizontal, then the world, you're always looking for something that the surface dimension cannot ultimately give you a deeper sense of who you are, a sense of having arrived, a sense of being at home, where you are, a sense of connectedness, freedom from fear and anxiety, that the horizontal dimension cannot give you that. And so perhaps then the ripple suddenly realizes, when it stops looking around the horizontal for some kind of fulfillment, for a moment it goes, hmm, oh, there's a stillness there, and there's a, there's a sense of aliveness, what is that?

No answer, I don't know. And it feels a connectedness to something very deep, but it can't interpret it, and suddenly it's, wow, I'm actually being carried by this vast thing, and not only am I being carried by it, essentially I am it, and suddenly there's a sense of connectedness to something deep, which the ripple cannot interpret, and doesn't need to interpret. And if the ripple stays connected with that, the way in which it experiences the rest of its life on the surface changes also, it becomes more, much more enjoyable, more pleasant, because it's not looking on the horizontal dimension for something that the horizontal dimension cannot give it, in relationships, in acquisitions, in attainments, it can have these things and enjoy these things, but not expecting or demanding some ultimate satisfaction, or the absence of things going wrong, it's on the horizontal dimension. And so, when there's a state of connectedness, now, obviously you have realized by now that you are the ripple that I'm talking about, and it can even enjoy relationships, which before were always a source of conflict and problems, problematic at best, and a source of horrible suffering at worst, and even that can be enjoyed, because you're no longer looking for others to, let's put it simply, make you happy. You're not looking for a human to make you happy, or a situation to make you happy, or some kind of acquisition or attainment to make you happy and complete.

You enjoy the relationship, you enjoy the attainment, you enjoy whatever it is that you get on this level, but you can only really enjoy it, because you're not dependent on it for your sense of your deep, your real sense of identity, of beingness. You no longer derive your sense of identity, your sense of self, from the things that make up your life on this level. You can enjoy them, you play around with things, you can even strive towards attaining this or that.

Without expecting something from these things that you can play around with, and that expecting something that they cannot give you, then the life that you lead on this horizontal level becomes actually quite enjoyable, because you'll have let go of the demand that you have placed before on people and situations to make you happy and fulfilled, and then you get angry or upset or irritated when they don't, because they can't. So whatever situation you go into, in the absence of the deeper, the vertical dimension, life is frustrating.

Every relationship turns out to be, well, it wasn't that great, I thought it would be wonderful. That's the key to having a life that is enjoyable, is to drop your demands before you had placed upon people and situations. Make me happy.

Tell me who I am. Complete me. That is realized in the vertical dimension of now.

You don't need time for that. Time becomes the obstacle. So as I've said before, an important realization is the world is not here to make you happy.

Because as long as you believe that the world is here to make you happy, you're not going to be happy, because the world can't do it. You've placed an impossible demand upon the world. Make me happy.

Fulfill me. And then you have resentment when this is an underlying assumption that it should make me happy, then there's always continuous resentment, which is all forms of suffering. But when you realize the world cannot make you happy, it's not here to make you happy, it has another purpose.

What is its purpose? It's here to make you conscious. It's here to awaken you.

It's here to awaken you to that deeper dimension, which we call the vertical dimension, which is the awakening of consciousness, the transcendence of ego. And the world is here to challenge you so that you awaken. If the world did not challenge you, and it does it all the time, you might have noticed, you can't get away from it.

Even though it's a wonderful thing to practice positive thinking, it works to some extent very well. You can change your life through changing your attitude, your thinking. But even then, the world will still challenge you.

No matter how much positive thinking you do, and you can achieve things through all the manifestation, but the world will still challenge you. You will move. Every situation, there will be a polarity.

You achieve something great, but there's a downside to it. There's always the other polarity.

Eckhart Tolle There Is Something Beyond “My Life” [9a477e76-5fe5-4198-8c09-f31f488bbf94]

There is something beyond my life in this episode Eckhart explains that many of us have to go through a lot of Unhappiness before we awaken. He says he's never met anyone whose life is not difficult and fraught with challenges He believes it's actually a good thing when we become dissatisfied with what we call my life He says our spiritual growth often begins when we realize there must be something more and our suffering Pushes us to find it. He goes on to explain that our real life is actually in the here and now Separate from the past and the future in that way for Eckhart.

It is eternal and connects us to the transcendent He says we can become familiar with this divine aspect of ourselves through a state of no thinking free of the inner critic and false narratives Eckhart says when we discover who we are without our past what emerges is the profound presence of being

For most people they have to arrive at a place where the the sense of self they recognize it as painful ultimately Suffering a lot of unhappiness and that for many people the unhappiness the Dissatisfaction with their life what you call my life To become dissatisfied with my life Can be a very good thing Because that might take you to a questioning whether there's anything beyond my life And then you discover that there is something beyond my life me and my life and That's already here. It's not something you can attain in the future That which is beyond this limited thing my life that is so problematic The past has a heaviness to it There's regret and guilt and blaming and grievances for many people and the future The future is on the one hand holds a promise of Fulfillment and Unfortunately, it also holds the threat of destruction because you're going to die So the future is a strange thing that's You're on the one end you think it's going to fulfill you but behind that you also know it's going to kill you To get out of the conceptual sense of self is the great liberation That's a being dimension Then of course the self still operates on this level of reality the self the person continues to operate function in fact more harmoniously easily Effectively on this horizontal level when there is connectedness with being you're not dependent on this conceptual entity For your sense of who you are So the story of your life becomes secondary and something else arises and that is life itself I believe in the book maybe the power of now I said You have a life situation What people call my life when they refer to my life When they say my well, my life is how is my life?

Well It's hard I don't know whose life is not hard I've never met anybody except people were deluded And then they didn't last long I've never met anybody whose life is not hard It's challenging. It's difficult. Of course it is But what people call my life is really refers to I could say that's your life situation my life situation That's not life.

Your life is inseparable from Present moment. You can only find your life in the present moment not in a narrative in your mind and So that's again another approach towards the being dimension. Your life is now Your life situation exists in time So find the life underneath that is underneath your life situation And that's in the present moment and you cannot find it through thought Which means you cannot find it in the future because the future is a thought which means the entire spiritual thing Trying to achieve a particular state for many people is misleading Because if you're trying to achieve something it implies time and future It's true that time is needed for virtually everything in life from building a house to making a cup of tea or learning a new language or traveling. Everything takes time except one thing Knowing who you are beyond the conditioned entity, the person, does not take time So spiritual awakening, spiritual realization, whatever you want to call it As long as you think it takes time that belief Prevents you from realizing it.

That's a very interesting thing Because the being dimension is already here. It's just obscured by continuous thought It's already here When thinking subsides for a moment What is left?

well You might want to ask yourself, who am I?

If I don't tell myself who I am, if I don't remember What happened in the past, because I mean most of the time you don't remember what happens in the past unless your Mind brings it up, which it likes to do quite often Well as a little exercise imagine for a moment that you don't have a past You don't need to think about it right now. It doesn't really matter Let's say it was just maybe it was just let's say it was all a dream up to now It was it was a dream. Okay, there was the dream whatever happened in the past.

It was a dream and suddenly You're waking up out of the dream and then you just look I don't let go of the dream Do you still have a sense of? Self a sense of identity without remembering the dream of your past which ultimately means without having any thought but simply a Sense of presence because that's what remains So there's a dream of your past And you put that aside And what remains are you still there without remembering who you are? well There's something there But it's very hard to describe it what's left when you let go of the dream of your past And there's only the naked Presence of being So who are you without your past without your past you are that The bare presence of being Can't describe it very well.

There's not much there Nothing there. No thing is there nothing no thing But all you know, there's still there's a presence there a being And not just that there is an awareness that there is a presence but these are not two things When we talk about it, it's two things. So when you let go of the dream of your past What's left of me what's left of me without my past or who am I without my past?

Okay, let's try again Another way of putting it. Who am I without any thought? Where am I if I'm not thinking?

What's left of you is a sense of presence beingness

[Speaker 3] (9:10 - 9:11)

And that is

What I call the deep I Sometimes I ought to call it your essence identity Is that Your form identity is the person thought etc Your life the dream of your life Your essence identity is that and ultimately There is only your essence identity Because the essence identity is a light of consciousness When you derive your identity from form the narrative the mental narrative those thoughts can only exist as Manifestations of the light of consciousness shining through this form.

It's a bit like a lampshade The person is a lampshade And Behind it is the light that shines through the lampshade So when you derive your sense of who you are and everybody has a sense of something. They absolutely Feels absolutely precious. I don't want to lose that.

I don't want to lose myself. That's why people have this fear of death I don't want to lose this me. Am I still going to be there?

When they die, am I going or am I just going to dissolve completely into some impersonal Consciousness or or some people say am I going to dissolve into just nothingness? Am I I want to I want to survive. I I'm so I And this I is the all the things that make up the person It's a lampshade and you derive your sense of identity from that But the real thing that is happening is the light it's light behind the lampshade That is the essence.

It's consciousness the light of consciousness itself So you you're mistaking something that is Filtered through thought the light gets filtered through thought filters through thought which is a manifest Just a bit like the surface of the ocean The the waves on the surface of the ocean are the thoughts Who you actually are is the vastness of the ocean. So the light you confuse The light with something that it shines through So you think you're the lampshade But really you are the light beyond it At first it seems like nothing much perhaps because it there's an that state of pure awareness that you have in the absence of the person There's just a presence but there's Enormous intelligence in there. So intelligent is not confined to The conceptual mind.

It's a it's a small Manifestation of intelligence. It's a form of intelligence. Yes IQ tests and so on But it goes far deeper than that Anybody who has who does anything creative it means bring something new into this world Even if it's just a song that people respond to that has a certain essence to it that it survives many generations Or work of art or any great insight or realization anything you add Anything that brings something new into this world comes from that place that is beyond the conceptual mind It might then use this intelligence may use the conceptual mind to give something form But it is in itself far beyond the conceptual mind.

So any creative person Often they don't know it. It's just happens to them they Have access briefly in the area of their creativity They have access briefly to that dimension where for moments stop thinking subsides and Just a presence is there and they go into that presence and then perhaps They use the mind to give it form whatever form might be Every intelligent even great scientists. I mean science is just a systematic application of the power of thinking But even in science the great scientists who have great revolutionary insights It came in moments of no thought Einstein was famous for being able to relax into these states and and And Theory of relativity came to him also as an insight.

Yes, he had done a lot of thinking before but hadn't arrived at any conclude any real answer and Then thinking subsided and then the realization The great composers many of the great composers They say often things that they when they the composition that were taking down composition in many cases it was like a Dictation it came already out of this vast intelligence That's beyond the mind and then it used the mind as a form of expression. So our task then is not to Add anything to our knowledge. Everybody knows a lot already We're not adding anything we are Becoming Familiar with the dimension of awareness which means state of

Not thinking at first brief moments And then it becomes So wonderful that you want to go there more often

you invite The state of not thinking just pure awareness into your life for example right now

[Speaker 3] (15:49 - 16:00)

The personality isn't is afraid of that the person Because it says don't go there because then you don't know who you are anymore

And that's true conceptually you don't know who you are when you are not thinking Can't say much And yet there is a knowing that it is non Conceptual, you know that there is a presence and you are that presence But it's no longer than after a while. It's no longer a question of Being able to have moments of pure presence when you're not thinking That certainly is important or to have meditation when you sit in formal meditation, perhaps you're able to just be present as long as you're not looking To the meditation to get you somewhere Realizing that you You cannot do a meditation Because you think you're doing a meditation you bring in future Meditation the purpose of it is the realization of being It's not a doing So that's all fine moments of presence In each moment of presence you become free of yourself You light up Because the burden of self lifts for a while and you light up You become like a little child again but with an added dimension of knowing Jesus talked about to enter the kingdom of heaven. You have to become like a little child. What he's trying to say is The conceptual mind cannot get you there Becomes an obstacle But then what happens is we even when you are thinking Speaking there is still a remnant of awareness in the background So and you're no longer completely Absorbed in the stream of thinking it doesn't drag you along Completely there's still part of you that is rooted in the witnessing consciousness the awareness Yes, you engaged in thinking but in the background there's a still a remnant of awareness Which you could say another way of putting it You're aware of yourself Even while you're engaged in conversation or discussion or Working on your computer Or whatever you may be doing. There's still an awareness of yourself as the underlying presence or field of awareness Whatever you want to call it even while you're engaged in thinking So ultimately it's not a question of either or you can either be you can either be engaged in thinking and have a conversation or discussion or You can be present Initially, you might experience it like that But our Task is to bring the two together So that we can operate in this world through the conceptual mind without losing ourselves in the conceptual mind And then the conceptual mind can work much more powerfully by the way because it's it's no longer Continuously sabotaged by the absurd human ego Which a lot of what the ego does is counterproductive So self-sabotage is a very common thing many people have that and that all these things don't no longer happen when There's a remnant of awareness even when you're operating in this world and so and then you will notice shifts Depending on the situation that you find yourself in Sometimes they will the mind will be engaged much more and there may just be you can't quantify but I'll just say it anyway Let's say there's 10% of awareness still left in the background even while you're having a conversation with Somebody about the political situation in the United States or wherever it may be at the moment Which is so problematic and you know that what you think this is what you think and you're explaining what you think But you're not totally Identified anymore just a little bit.

Yes We're not completely identified with your mental position anymore meaning You don't look to your mental position for your sense of self You still have a mental position. Of course, you're still at whatever you are Democrats Republican Whatever you can you're still that But you're not completely deriving your sense of who you are from that. You're not identified with it You still have it but not identified with it, which means the other who has a different mental position doesn't become your enemy Just as a different mental position if you're not Identified you don't make the other into an enemy and the ego loves to make the other into an enemy because then it feels Its own identity more strongly to the other the other defines who you are on the ego level You need the other because without the other you have no idea who you are Because the other is really other Sense of separateness So practice Thoughtless awareness As much as you can in in everyday life Even a few seconds are fine Observe something or feel the inner body just be aware of

Presence just be the presence and there may come a time when you don't want to think

You don't think Especially when there's nothing particular to do I think when you're going for a walk in the in the forest or on the seashore or in a park Do you need to think? No Some of you are not yet able to do that. That's that's fine to simply step out of thought But gradually you discover that you have that ability on the horizontal level It takes time it takes time to fully discover the timeless dimension within yourself it sounds like a paradox because we're dealing with horizontal and vertical dimension So do not think Without going to sleep.

It's not you don't lose consciousness. I'm not talking about that state. Of course when you're When you're about to fall asleep You stop thinking also, but this we're not referring to that where you go below thought referring to rising above thought alertness Attention

Breathing might help if you need a little bit of help Become aware of your breath

There's an association of breath and consciousness There's more to breath than just a physiological thing Breath is also formless like consciousness Breath and spirit are synonymous in some languages for example in in the Old Testament In Hebrew breath and spirit are the same word at the beginning of the Bible there's the the chaos of the deep and The breath of God has floated over the waters of the deep of the chaos In some Bibles, it's called the breath of God and in other Bibles, it's translated as the spirit.

I wrote somewhere perhaps in New Earth Somebody asked me which workshops to go to in a there was a selection of interesting workshops to go to for spiritual awakening or whatever And I suggested instead of going to any just For this period of time that the workshop it was a weekend workshop be aware of your breath As much as you can during that time. You don't need to go anywhere Just be aware of your breath your breathing, please consciously not you know, it doesn't mean you go Sometimes that's fine too, but just be aware of the breath that's occurring naturally Every time you're aware of the ingoing and the outflow of breath you are present and you're not thinking Can't do both Can either think or be aware of your breath?

So if you're aware of your breath as much as you can, which means you're not thinking during those times So instead of telling a person to not think which might be difficult Until you you have that ability. I have it I don't have to think when I don't want to and a lot of the time I don't think it's wonderful That's my main achievement in life, by the way. I Don't have much else.

I wouldn't even get a job if I put that in my resume. Would they give me a job? I don't need to think anymore Yeah, you are the person who have been waiting for I don't think probably not but it's not to have to think compulsively what a liberation that is But instead of saying to try not to think well That's not easy for many people be aware of your breath is the same thing You're not thinking you become aware of inner space.

Oh And you can still be aware of other things while you're being aware of your breath the for example the sky and Then you gradually become aware that to be aware of your breath ultimately really means To be aware of being aware You're aware that you don't wear self-awareness So your breath can be your most intimate friend they can free you from compulsive thinking Initially you might need little point little Reminders where you live in your in your house in your room I don't know what place little things where you often look on the wall on a mirror on Your computer a little sign that reminds you to breathe consciously That can be helpful except that after after a Week or two you may have to change the little point just because you become accustomed to them. You don't see them anymore but this can it can be helpful to have little little pointers off you can have anything you can start with a There's a lovely Egyptian you all know the ancient Egyptian the eye of Horus Let's see the eye of awareness or use any eye a little eye the eye of awareness and Then when that doesn't work anymore because we've used it for two or three weeks Use something else use the Sun little emblem of the Sun for example the light of consciousness in other words and every time you see it, ah Take it one or two or three conscious breaths

[Speaker 2] (28:09 - 28:29)

Eckhart Tolle There Is a Self In Every Thought [e4903a25-5a94-43ad-a4b1-02564454786b]

There is a self in every thought. In this episode, Eckhart explains what it means to be unconscious, and he says we all have inner scripts, those old dysfunctional patterns that are handed down generation after generation. He says eventually they crystallize into an identity.

Eckhart explains until we wake up to this, we remain largely unconscious. He says we don't have to remain hostage to our hard wiring. We can resist our thinking and stop mistaking it for the truth.

Eckhart says every human being is like a seed waiting to awaken. The potential may be buried under layers of ego, but it is still there. He says we find answers to the secrets of the universe when we look within.

[Speaker 1] (0:43 - 36:39)

If you are unconscious, which means, by the way, it means identified with every thought that goes into your head, and it's immediately taken for the truth. You're totally with your opinions. Vroom, vroom, vroom, vroom.

I'm not saying you shouldn't have opinions. Everybody has opinions, but the question is does your opinion become your identity? That's the unconscious state.

If opinion becomes your identity, this is then the thought that is the opinion becomes your identity. So in other words, there is a self in every thought, so to speak, using slightly Buddhist terminology. There's a self in every arising thought, and so that is the unconscious state, and that self, which we consider to be you or the person, is ultimately a delusion or a fiction, as the Buddha pointed out, that ultimately that is a kind of fiction.

So let's say a person in prison would normally be considered their very bad life circumstances, or if you have a narrative in your mind, you might say, my life has been all dreadful. Nothing makes sense anymore, whatever the narrative is, and then at some point, maybe if you're ready, you read a few lines in a book, and suddenly something happens in you, and we are now getting to the answer of who or what is it that is actually unconscious, because we are saying, when you're identified, you are unconscious. So, okay, now we know that the thing you identify with is the person, which is a mental-emotional accumulation, but who or what is it that is actually, spiritually speaking, asleep, unconscious?

And that's you, but not the person. So this means, and this is the message of all, if you go to the core of every spiritual tradition, in every spiritual tradition, and the core points to this, the possibility and the necessity of awakening to who or what you are at this deeper level. So we have the person, of course, is still there.

I sometimes call the person your form identity, because you have a form, and this form, which begins with a physical form, the body, that you can see and touch, and you see it, and you see it in the mirror, that's the beginning of your form identity. The next stage of your form identity is the mental-psychological form, which is the person. But the personal sense of self is also, the body is a very important part of that.

So it's both the physical body and the mental conditioning, mental-emotional conditioning. So you identify with the physical vehicle and the psychological entities, that they come, they are together. So I call that form identity.

Everybody has a form identity. The question is, is that all there is to your identity? Is that all you know?

And for most humans, that is still the case. They are totally identified with their form, physical form and psychological form. Physical form is very important for large numbers of people.

Their body is a very important part of their identity, and the body is a source of either pride or shame for many people, these are the two extremes. And for many other people, they're kind of in between. All this is ego, of course.

Whenever we talk about identification with form is ego. That's the definition of ego in spiritual terms. I'd complete identification with their form identity.

And so the body is a very important part of that. And for many people, it's a source of huge problems. This body image that they have, and say, that's me.

And they're not happy with it. And it becomes a source of great suffering for many people. It's ego too, to be unhappy with your body.

And again, derive your unhappy identity from it. That's ego too. Or you're happy with your body because it looks better than other bodies.

And you do a few things to enhance the body that already looks good, but you do things to it to make it look even better, including certain clothes you put on or whatever you do. Maybe you do something to your face. And certainly when you use social media, which is externalizations of ego, when you post images of your body or your face, then of course you can make your body look much, much better than it actually does by applying the correct filters to the image.

And everybody looks great. Except when you look at other people's images, then you feel, oh, my body doesn't look as great at all. Everybody looks so beautiful except me.

And then you learn to abuse filters also. And you live in this... And you start to live in this fictional world complete where before the technology came with the devices and social media, you already, humans already had a big ego.

And now the devices make it even bigger. You can project the whole thing outward and say, this is me. It's a total image.

It's a total creation of technology and imagination. Nothing to do whatsoever with who you are. And yet, for some reason, you have 2,000 friends on Facebook and you've never met them, but they love you.

And then that becomes incorporated into your sense of egoic sense of self. So it goes even bigger than it used to be in the past. Now technology helps you to have an even bigger ego.

In other words, be even more deluded about your identity. Oh my God, this is what we are faced with and these poor youngsters, they grow up with that. And for many of them, this virtual world into which they project their ego becomes more important to them than the real world outside.

It's an enormous challenge for humans. And this is why it's so important for humans about to make this step out of the egoic consciousness because otherwise it will destroy us. Certainly will, it will destroy the world and us.

The good thing about the ego is it has built a self-destruct mechanism into it as part of the ego. Eventually, the ego blows up and self-destructs. That's the good news about it.

And so we have body identification, the part of your former identity. And let's put aside now the virtual world and all the filters. Let's say your body is better looking than most.

It's almost inevitable that a young person is good looking. This would become an important part of their ego identity and then become a source of pride, which means the ego feels a bit inflated when it compares itself to others. And then years pass, of course, and then gradually time begins to attack your body.

And then for people who had a strong body identification, that becomes very painful because it's not just, time doesn't just attack your body and begins to erode it. Because you had identified with your body, time is actually attacking you. That's how you perceive it.

Your whole identity begins to crumble because the body is becoming eroded with horrible suffering. So that is the destiny if you're particularly good looking, those of you here. And if you do not awaken by the time you reach, let's say, 50, 60 years old, then you are in for a lot of suffering.

Now, if your body is not great looking, then you're suffering already, so. So you can't escape. This is why the Buddha said, wherever you go, you will encounter suffering.

It's the essential teaching of the Buddha. But the implication is, if you do not awaken to who you essentially are, to awaken, if you do not awaken. So we've seen the delusion, the identification with form, the complete identification with form that most humans are still trapped in, that leads to suffering.

And there's the possibility of awakening out of that limited sense of self is there. And it usually comes through big challenges. It usually does not come while you're in your comfort zone.

Very few humans, I don't even remember knowing of any, well, don't want to think back into the past. Very few humans awaken while they're in their comfort zone because there's no pressure, there's no need to awaken because let's have another drink. Let's have another nice meal.

Let's binge watch Netflix. No particular challenge. And then if they are lucky, something bad happens to them.

And that could be the beginning of an awakening. The reason why the term awakening has a very long spiritual tradition, many spiritual traditions use this term awakening. And the reason is that it is such an apt comparison or analogy because every human knows what it means to awaken after a night's sleep, where you've slept and in the morning, there comes a time when suddenly you open your eyes and you go, and then you think back, oh, that was just a dream.

And then it's gone. But there's a fundamental difference between the sleep state and the state when you suddenly go, you're awake now. And that is a normal wakefulness.

And this normal wakefulness is for those who are not awakened to the deeper dimension, the spiritual awakening, that is a normal state, which means relative to normal consciousness, in other words, unconsciousness, to awaken spiritually is very much like awakening out of the sleep state into the wakeful state, but it's just a higher level. I can demonstrate quite simply one moment you're absorbed in the stream of thinking probably about your life and how difficult it all is and whether you're going to make it or not and all the problems that are waiting for you tomorrow and next week. And what might go wrong and what you might lose if you're not careful.

And the awful thing in the past, those people, the grievances that have accumulated. And the narratives go, the stories go. Stories that are being repeated many, many times.

And then something happens, maybe you're faced with a difficult situation suddenly or something happens and perhaps accompanied by certain emotions that go with it. Suddenly there's a, oh, and that is the step out of complete identification with thinking is the beginning of awakening. For many people, it takes the following form.

They suddenly become aware that the thoughts that they have been thinking, perhaps repeatedly for years, are not who they are. They recognize them as thoughts. That is the beginning of an awakening, that you are not your thoughts.

I realized that when I was 17. I accidentally, somebody left a spiritual book with us. I'd never seen a spiritual book before.

And I read, and it said something about the nature of thought and being identified with thought and the possibility of stepping out of that. And I had a mini-awakening, as I call it at that time. After that, I went back to sleep, spiritually speaking.

But I had a mini-awakening that lasted maybe for a year or a year and a half. And it suddenly became aware of how negative my thoughts were at 17 years old. I realized, for example, that since the age of eight, at least, I had several thoughts that recurred again and again in my mind.

One of them was, bad things always happen to me, of course. Bad things always happen to me. And then, of course, bad things would happen.

And say, there you are, there's another one. Bad things always happen to me. Always to me, not to others, just to me.

Always. And for the first time, I became aware of that. Ah.

So, what arises is another level of consciousness. And we may call that presence, or we may call that awareness. And that, the ability to be aware of what kinds of thoughts go through your mind, and the ability to be aware of the emotions that you're feeling, instead of being the emotion.

A huge difference. If you are the emotion, if you are identified with the emotion, the emotion and the mind, they will go together. For example, if you have a strong emotion, and there's no awareness of the emotion, you are the emotion, then it takes over, it rises up into your mind, and it influences your thinking.

And then you usually become, the thinking becomes very irrational. Let's say the emotion is fear, or the emotion is anger, and then the emotion rises into your mind, and it makes you think certain thoughts, and the thoughts give even more energy to the emotion, and it's a vicious circle. When the emotion rises up into your mind, your thinking is no longer rational at all, and decisions that you take in that state, things that you do or say in that state, when emotion has invaded your mind, and it's even more unconscious than your normal unconsciousness.

Dreadful drama is created through that unconsciousness. Every difficulty is reacted to unconsciously, and is amplified by reacting to a challenge or a difficulty in an unconscious way. You make it far worse, and you amplify it.

That's how humans create drama all around, not just in their personal lives, also collectively, entire nations can be trapped in the same pattern of anger or fear. Then comes the awakening, is the realization that is, oh, there's an emotion, and you can feel the emotion. That's a huge step forward in consciousness from being the emotion, to be able to say that that is.

So you no longer say, I am angry, for if it's anger, or I am fearful, you would say, there's anger in me, if you had to verbalize it, or you'd say, there's fear in me, there's fear. I can feel that, I can feel the fear, but you are not it. It exists in the space of consciousness, but you are not it.

That's the beginning of the awakening. And that is something that opens up here, is the vertical dimension to your life. All the things you've been talking about is the horizontal dimension, where the person or the personality exists in time.

That's all fine, but there's something else that's possible that can awaken in a human being. Every human being is potentially capable of awakening, but in many humans, this is a latent potential that is deeply buried, because there are layers of ego and consciousness on top of it. The destiny of humans is to awaken to this, what we could call it, higher level of consciousness.

That's the entire evolutionary destiny of humans. As all the ancient traditions point to that, the evolutionary purpose of humans is the awakening of consciousness in you. And every human being has the seed, the seed of awakening.

But the question is, has the seed sprouted or not? And it sprouts only if the conditions are right. It may not sprout in this lifetime, but there is the seed there.

And then Jesus often used parables to do with seeds. And there's the seed that then becomes the kingdom of heaven, the kingdom of heaven that is within you, not here or there. You can't say it's here or it's there.

It's an inner state of consciousness. And that is the awakening of human consciousness. And the vertical dimension opens up in the, the entry point is always when you awaken, you become present to the now, both externally and internally.

Internally, you realize what your mind is doing or what your emotions are doing. And the thought is there is a knowing behind what's happening within you. There's a knowing behind what's happening externally.

And this is very different from reacting to situations, circumstances, and people through the veil of your conditioning, which is the person. As awareness arises, and we could call awareness the unconditioned consciousness, whereas everything else is a conditioned consciousness. It has taken on a particular form.

But so that one could say, then let's temporarily put it like this. It's not the ultimate truth, but it's just a way of approaching it. You could say there is two of you.

One is the conditioned entity that is a person or the personality. Then there is a deeper being that is transcendent to the person or the personality. And that deeper being is kind of, let's say in the background, the deeper being isn't not manifested in this dimension.

It hasn't come into this dimension yet. Some humans talk of higher self. I try to avoid that term because higher seems to put it kind of up there somewhere.

So then you're looking for yourself there. And then you could have an imaginary conversation with your higher self. Hello, are you there?

So there is a deeper self. Now I use these two terms that I've been using the past few years. You have two I's, I meaning the pronoun I, when you say I.

As a person, when you use the word I, you refer to the conditioned entity that you are, I, I. I like, I don't like, I believe, I want, I don't want, I hate, I whatever. I, I, this is the surface I.

Then there is a deep I. And that deep I is who you are beyond the person. And that realization is the awakening.

And it begins with becoming, if you wanted to have an actual experience, of the deep I, rather than hearing me talk about it. Although if you have already had glimpses and experiences of the deep I, then you know what I'm talking about. And perhaps while I'm talking about it, you can sense that deep I, but not necessarily.

So let's go more, let's see what we can do to make it more experiential. Because there's an old analogy, I don't know where it comes from, maybe from India, that you may have heard. Honey, you can talk about honey forever and describe the nature of honey.

And then you say, I know honey very well. You can write a PhD about honey, probably exists, PhDs about honey. The question is, have you, have you tasted honey?

That's the difference of way of knowing, spiritual realization. You can ask, do you have a lot of spiritual knowledge? Which is, yes, I know a lot about honey.

But have you tasted honey? That's the vital question. So let's hear, let's not just talk about honey.

Although many of you, while we've been talking about honey, you have been tasting it too. But here, where's the honey? It is the direct knowing of what it is that these words point to.

And the access point to this vertical dimension of the deep eye, the access point is, of course, in the present moment. If you feel lost in this world, which means ultimately lost in your mind, if you feel lost, then you suddenly realize that you've lost yourself again in your mind. Often, let's say you're upset about something and something goes wrong and wrong.

And suddenly you say, okay, I'm lost. I've lost myself again. Oh, that's, at least you know you're lost.

It means you're not totally lost. And so if you know that you are in the present moment, you're entering the present moment with your attention. So you know you've lost yourself.

Okay, how do I find myself? Become aware of the present moment. But how do I do that?

Don't listen to your mind when your mind says, no, no, no, I can't do it now. I have too much to think about. I can't, present moment, what is this nonsense, present moment?

I have so much on my plate. I mean, I can't be bothered with all that spiritual stuff now. I have to, this is so important.

Don't believe your mind when it says that. It's just thoughts. Okay, there's a thought that means you cannot be present now.

And then you can, you realize, oh, I can be present anyway. And then how? How do you enter the present moment?

There are various easy ways of accessing the present moment. You can start with becoming aware that you're breathing. Oh, you forgot about it.

You're actually breathing. Breathing happens all the time, but normally we're not conscious of breathing. But if you can be conscious of breathing, being conscious of breathing, you don't even have to make it into meditation.

Although it is a meditation method too. It's a very ancient meditation method called the Anapanasati yoga. The awareness of the ingoing and outgoing breath is a meditation.

It's wonderful too. But even if not just as a meditation, just as wherever you are, suddenly, am I breathing? Okay, let me find out.

And so in order to find out, some of your attention has to move from being absorbed in thinking into the observation of your breath, so to speak. You can feel your breath moving in and out of the body. And so your attention follows the breath, which means you're taking attention away from thinking, useless thinking.

We're not talking about creative thinking or thinking that has a good purpose. No, we're talking about useless, unhappy-making thinking, which is 80% or more. And breathing.

Ah, and that can easily lead you into the awareness of the inner body, which is you feel that the body is alive from within. But to feel that, attention has to move away from, you take attention away from thinking and it goes into the body. Are your hands, is there aliveness in your hands?

Do they feel alive, somehow? How do you know your hands are still there if you close your eyes? Do they feel, yes, somehow?

The very subtle feeling of an energy that pervades your hands and your feet and legs. And the entire body is an energy that I call the inner body. And so you can sense that.

Your breath can take you there and you can simultaneously sense the energy field of the inner body and your breathing also. They go together. If you follow the breath with your attention, that also takes you into the inner body.

And then there's the, you're out of your mind now, in a good sense, not the usual sense. In a good sense, to be out of your mind is a wonderful thing. So this is an anchor, as I call it, for presence.

An anchor for presence. And there you are. And then you realize that you can be, you don't have to have all your attention in the body.

You can have some of your attention in sense perceptions. And so that means visual and auditory and maybe other, some other sense perceptions. So you become aware of what you're perceiving and you look around wherever you may be and you listen to any sounds that there may be.

But the way in which you are aware of your sense perceptions, you are really aware of your sense perceptions, not through the veil of your conditioned thinking, where whatever you perceive is immediately named, interpreted, judged, labeled in one way or another. Everything immediately, you form labels and judgments for everything. Oh, oh, what a pretty flower.

What's it called? I wonder what it's called. It looks a bit like a tulip, but it's not a tulip, is it?

No. Let me see. What could that be?

I saw, blah, blah, blah, blah, blah, blah. Are you really looking at the flower or are you looking, are you mainly perceiving the veil of your mental conditioning, of naming, of names? And then you do it to human beings and you do it to situations.

But now being present, the ability arises to be there as a space of awareness and perceive the world around you through your senses without compulsively having to name and interpret and label what it is that you're perceiving. So you just go, hmm. And you see this.

Suddenly there's more to the flower than just a label. There is an alive presence there. You perceive it more deeply.

Even a so-called inanimate object, even that has a certain presence, a certain beingness to it. And so you look. The world is suddenly, it feels much more alive because you are not deadening everything through conceptualization, imposing mental concepts on everything.

So that is the space of unconditioned perception. And the question may arise, in that state of perceiving through presence, where is the person that you think you are or you were? In that moment of pure perception, are you still there as a person?

Not really, because in that moment, like now, the person has receded and something else has arisen or emerged. So the person has receded. And what is it that has arisen or emerged instead?

The unconditioned consciousness. The person was also consciousness, but has taken on a conditioned form. Now what arises is the deep eye, you as the unconditioned consciousness that is connected to the vastness of, it goes all the way to the one that we call God.

It goes, it's all the way, enormous depths to it. Person recedes and there's just this, wow. And there's no labeling in your mind, but everything is known.

You know it, but not through concepts. And of course the person will return after maybe very soon, but at least you have had a glimpse of what is possible that you can actually be in this world. You don't always have to be in this world as a person.

You can be in this world as a space of awareness. And then at first it's either or, at first. Sometimes you're able to go, wow, breathing, inner body.

And then the person comes back. Maybe your phone makes a noise and there's a text message coming in, ding, ding. And immediately the person gets back.

What's happening? Nothing is happening, but you have to look. Another Facebook post or something.

Okay, and the person is fully back. Okay. But so at first, yes, you have moments when you're able to be really present.

The person recedes and there's the deeper I is there. This may be called pure. This is real intelligence arises there.

The mind is a kind of reflected intelligence, secondary intelligence, like the moon reflects the light of the sun. So in that sense, the human mind is reflected intelligence of the greater mind, the mind of the universe, we could say, or the mind of God. Or another term you could use is the soul of the universe that you can sense because you are a microcosm of the macrocosm.

The deepest answers to the secrets of the universe you can find by looking within because you are a microcosm of this, of the totality. And you are in essence, and this is amazing to realize, you are the consciousness of the universe. In addition to being a little person.

So more fundamentally, and this is not something to believe in. I believe that I am the consciousness of the universe. For to know this, the mind needs to stop for a moment.

Like now.

[Speaker 2] (36:44 - 37:04)

I'm Oprah Winfrey, and you've been listening to Eckhart Tolle, Essential Teachings, the podcast. You can follow these essential teachings on Spotify or wherever you listen to podcasts. If you haven't yet, go to Spotify and follow this podcast.

Join us next week for more enlightened teachings from Eckhart Tolle. Thank you for listening.

Eckhart Tolle This Moment is the Most Important [ad04a538-a1e3-4059-b37e-840e36e641c6]

This moment is the most important. In this episode, Eckhart describes the subtleties of what happens when we become present. He says the mind slows down, thinking recedes, awareness rushes in, and our preoccupation with the past and future fades.

He explains that some people are so obsessed by their history, it consumes their current life. Eckhart says the mind is a wonderful instrument if used in the right way, but if not, destruction often follows. He says most of us do not use the mind, it uses us.

Eckhart encourages everyone to practice moments of pure awareness. He says presence can be a powerful tool for healing because loving kindness then flows through us and affects everything we touch. He says we don't know yet how it will transform the world, but it most certainly will.

Make sure you're not waiting for me to start speaking. And if you give up waiting, which is a state of consciousness, one could almost say it's a normal state of consciousness for most people. They're always waiting for the next thing.

[Speaker 3] (1:16 - 1:25)

Now, to relinquish waiting can be a wonderful thing just as an experiment.

So let's just as an experiment, let's assume that the next moment is not going to be more important than this one. And let's assume that this moment is the most important moment, because obviously it's the only moment there ever is. So it must be the most important.

And it's always now.

The mind, the thinking mind makes something else more important. It's usually the next moment or the one after or after, whether the next moment means a minute from now when Eckhart is finally going to say something meaningful, or the next moment could be tonight, it's going to happen tomorrow, the rest of my life. That's a big next moment.

So you become present as you relinquish, give up waiting. But that may have to begin with yourself noticing that you are actually still waiting. You may be waiting for your ability to give up waiting.

I'm working on it, on giving up waiting. Just give me some more time. So waiting is a state of consciousness, the normal state of consciousness.

And as you give up waiting, you become present. That's an enormous shift in consciousness. The main characteristic of being present is the thinking mind slows down or dissipates completely or recedes.

Thinking is replaced with awareness. Before there was thinking, one thought after another, always to do with future and past and more future. Future for most people is more important, but other people carry so much past in their mind that the past is more important than the future, which happens also.

A terrible burden to carry if the past to you obscures the present, just as the future can obscure the present. For some people, the past has such a heaviness to it that it obscures the present and whatever they experience, they experience through the heavy, dense veil of the past that they carry in their mental, emotional field that makes up their identity. That's me.

So as you become present, awareness comes to the forefront. Awareness is conscious without thought or very little thought, occasional fragments, like you have a blue sky and occasionally you say little clouds floating by, but you allow the clouds, the thoughts to float past. When you practice presence, instead of becoming interested in the little cloud of thought that arises, and if you become interested and you think that's more important than being present, then the little thought, the little cloud suddenly becomes a big cloud.

It grows because you give it your conscious attention. You give your conscious attention to the thought. And then where before there was a little cloud that could have just passed by, now you energize it with your attention and it becomes a huge, very often a dark cloud.

And then other clouds appear that are attracted by it. And before you know it, where before there was a clear blue sky, there's now a heavy layer of clouds and you can't even see the sky anymore. You become immersed in mental noise.

So we are here right now to practice this. We are not here to figure out mentally, conceptually, what it is that I'm talking about. Please don't try to understand what it is that I'm talking about.

You can't understand it because it's non-conceptual. And it's too simple to even try to understand. There's nothing there to understand.

It's not complex. Being present is not complex. It's simplicity itself.

So you don't understand it, but you can know it in your own realization. Then while I'm talking, you know what it is that I'm talking about because you are realizing it in this very moment. And as a little help, become very alert, very conscious of the gaps between the words as I'm speaking now.

The silent spaces. Be aware of the silent spaces. Why is that important?

Every time you're aware of a silent space, your mind becomes still and silent. And what does that mean? What does it mean to become aware of a space, a silent space?

What are you aware of? If it's silent, there's nothing there to be aware of. There's no object in your consciousness.

You can be aware of the words. Every word is a thought that has become verbalized. Sound has become sound.

Yes, you're aware of a word. That's an object that you're aware of in consciousness. Not a material object, but an object in consciousness.

You're aware of the words that I'm speaking. That's fine. That makes sense.

But to be aware of the silent spaces between words, it doesn't seem to make sense. Why not? Because there's nothing there to be aware of.

There is no object that you are aware of. It's a silent space. So if there is no object that you are aware of, what is it?

What does it mean? And the answer is very simple. It's called awareness of awareness, self-awareness.

In some Indian traditions called self-realization. You're aware of being aware. You are conscious of being conscious.

You are the consciousness that is conscious of itself, that has awakened completely. Because before that happened, this consciousness was always identified with some object of consciousness. It was identified with the sense objects.

I want this. I like this. I don't want this.

I must have that. And it was identified with mental objects that to a large extent represent physical objects, the object of the thoughts and the object of the senses. It was continuously identified with this, that and the other.

And running after this, that and the other. And that is called the unawakened state. Other words, you're asleep.

Not asleep in the conventional sense, but very similar. You are unaware of yourself. You seek yourself in the objects of the senses and in the mental objects.

Looking, you're really always looking for yourself in things and in thought and never really finding yourself. Everybody's lost. Amazing.

So, this is the dream of consciousness, that consciousness is dreaming. Consciousness is dreaming your entire life, the so-called life, all the things that happen to you and that you do and that happen to you and you make happen, is the dream of consciousness. It's dreaming you.

It's fine. But the important thing is, are you completely captured by this dream? Are you completely immersed in this dream?

Are you completely lost in this dream? Or is it the case that you know that this dream is happening? Is it a lucid dream?

There is a possibility for your life not to become, not to just to continue to be a dream. A lot of the dream, by the way, is not all that pleasant. And for some people or many people, the dream is very often is a nightmare and they're trapped in a nightmare.

But you may have experienced in an actual dream when you were in bed asleep and you were dreaming in bed, that's a dream in a conventional sense. Sometimes in the middle of the dream, you suddenly realize that you're dreaming. That can happen in time.

Many people have experienced that. It's called lucid dreaming. And that's quite interesting because then you go, oh, wow, this is a dream.

I can make anything happen. And nothing really matters that much because it's a dream. So even if you saw a monster in your dream, but suddenly you become aware that you're dreaming, the monster is no longer that threatening.

Oh, there's a dream monster. Isn't that interesting? And when you're no longer running away from the monster, usually the monster changes into something else that is not threatening anymore.

So there's lucid dreaming that sometimes happens, but more importantly, there's a possibility of lucid living. So that while you live this life and you participate in this life of the external world, the senses, while this happens, there is an undercurrent of awareness. So it's very important for us to be here, to become familiar with that dimension in yourself, the awakened dimension, become familiar with this awareness.

And once you had a taste of it, you can access it more easily and you will want to access that dimension. That is the awakened state. As you may know, when the Buddha was asked, who are you?

Or what are you? He said, I'm awake. That's where the word Buddha comes from, on the Sanskrit root to be awake.

That's all. I'm awake. When God was asked in the Old Testament, same question, somebody asked, I don't know who asked, was it Moses?

Asked God, who are you? Or what are you? The answer is, I am.

Or I am the I am. What is I am? I am is the first person singular of the verb to be.

Easy to forget that. The being that underlies all existence. The being that underlies all existence.

That is an infinite intelligence, just to use one word, an infinite intelligence that is the organizing principle behind and within all the things that appear as the world. So existence is an interesting word, to exist, comes from Latin, exist. Ex means out, just in the word exit or ex.

Exist, to stand out. To stand out is to exist, something is manifested, it has a form, existence. You exist as a person, but the essence of who you are does not exist.

It has no form, no manifested form. And this is why I often say the important thing, you are a human being. There are two dimensions to who you are.

There's the dimension of the temporal, of past and future, where our life unfolds, that's the human. And you are the being that is the transcendent dimension of who you are. And to become aware of awareness is to become, that's another word for being, to be.

You become aware that you are, and thinking must stop for a moment in order to become aware of that which transcends all form.

Another word for this is self-transcendence.

[Speaker 1] (17:15 - 17:54)

Self-transcendence, that is the liberation from a limited and ultimately fictitious sense of identity. As much as possible in your daily life, practice moments of pure awareness. It doesn't matter for how long, moments of pure, like now, this moment.

[Speaker 3] (17:55 - 18:12)

As I stop speaking for a few seconds, before I start speaking again, be aware that you are aware.

[Speaker 1] (18:15 - 24:53)

So one could say you disappear as a person, but you are there very powerfully as a presence. You disappear as a person temporarily, but in a very powerful way, there is a presence which you cannot define. You then access this dimension, that is one way of putting it, it's pure, pure power, pure intelligence.

All, anything created arises out of that. And as you invite that into your life, it can and will transform even the way in which you live as a person. And that happens without you thinking that you need to transform yourself.

A transformation happens even to the person, although the person obviously will always have certain limitations. You are good at this, but you're not good at that. And so on.

The person obviously cannot be perfect. There's always certain characteristics that define a person. It has form, that's understood, but that dimension as you access that flows into the conditioned entity that we call the person, and can even can use the personal mind and express itself through that.

In other words, inspiration can happen, will happen more easily, intuition happens more easily, a creative ability develops more easily. Obviously you need to have some mastery, some expertise in some fields, then it can be this creative energy from the unconditioned realm of being or consciousness can flow into what you do and transform and empower it. Of course, you need to already, in the case of activity, you need to have already developed something that it can flow into.

In my case, it cannot flow into becoming a fantastic swimmer or tennis player. It's not going to happen. It's not going to empower me on that level.

And it's too late for that. Nor is it going to come up in me with the creative realization, finding the unified field theory in physics that Einstein unsuccessfully looked for, the unified field theory. It's not going to come through this mind because it has not developed that particular avenue through which spirit or consciousness could express itself creatively.

But it is expressing itself creatively through these words, which is possible that as you access that dimension, the power of now, as you access that dimension within yourself, it may not even express itself through some creative endeavor. It could be something else. It could be the way in which you relate to other humans, changes, affects everybody that you come in contact with.

Perhaps you carry on with an ordinary activity and yet a new energy comes into that.

This came to mind just now because some time ago, I was at a toll bridge. There's a man and a little woman in a little booth.

And he or she says, one dollar, please. And there was one, everybody felt better after paying the one dollar because she was so present. And there was an energy flowing through her that every person who went through, I imagine, must have felt better because that brief interaction, there was an outflow of loving kindness, meta loving kindness that comes out of bliss.

This is another way in which presence then manifests itself in this dimension. I've already mentioned creative things, creative endeavor can empower many things that you do, or it may just manifest itself as what we could call loving kindness that flows through you as you go about your normal business. Perhaps you haven't developed any particular avenue through which presence could express itself creatively, whatever it may be, sports, dance, science, musical instrument, all the various things.

Maybe you haven't developed. Maybe you could still develop it or not. It doesn't matter.

In some way, presence will use you as a channel and then something will flow through you into this dimension. And it could be just your presence itself can be a powerful tool of transformation in this dimension so that this loving kindness flows through you into this world that affects everybody you come into contact with. So who knows how this will transform the way in which you experience life, but it will transform it.

Eckhart Tolle Transcending Our Limitations [869634b7-c9bb-41b7-89b1-2a8cfb66a1f7]

Transcending our limitations. In this episode, Eckhart answers questions about transcending our limitations. He says every human has certain obstacles in their life and facing them as part of the path to awakening.

However, Eckhart warns that problems arise when our limitations become part of our identity. He believes we create a false narrative about who we think we are. Eckhart says while it's important to surrender and accept what is, we do not confuse deeper acceptance with the acceptance of the narrow concept we mistake for ourselves.

Eckhart says we reach transcendence by letting go of those concepts. We can embrace the isness of this moment and through that process transform into the realm of spacious awareness.

Hello, welcome. And I'd like to welcome you to our session and to the present moment. And so I suggest we start not by thinking that now we are going to do a meditation, but we simply start by becoming aware of what's already here.

That is you in the present moment, but who or what is you? Let us let go of memories. Without memories, who am I?

Ask yourself that question. But don't look for an answer in the realm of concepts. Be happy with not knowing who you are when you make no reference to your past or any past or future.

So without past and future, who am I right here and now? After asking the question, there comes a space of stillness, alert stillness. And that is presence.

And that is who you are beyond concepts, narratives, stories. And who you are is already always present, often covered up by mental noise or the fluctuating emotions or the seductive nature of sensory perception and gratification or the search for sensory gratification, all kinds of things covering up what's always already here. That is who you are in your essence.

So let's go on to the first question.

This is a written question we received. This person writes in, I've been legally blind since birth for 62 years and I relate very well to your distinction between overcoming and transcending a disability. After decades of trying to prove how strong and independent I was, I chose some years ago to just go with it, accept my disability and see where it would take me.

The experience softened me greatly and brought greater connectedness with others. You might say there's no need to hold on to a story called disability, but it does come up very often and in many different ways, which makes it hard to ignore. So I would say there is something to accept, but then how do I reconcile this acceptance with the idea that my true essence is not and has never been blind?

Maybe your response could also help others understand their particular situation better.

[Speaker 1] (4:27 - 14:26)

The important thing is not to accept a concept that describes who you are on some level. Disability or disabled is such a concept so that the concept does not become a conceptual self, the conceptual sense of self. I believe you're already on your way to complete transcendence.

This is the beginning of transcendence, is to let go of concepts. Obviously other people may label you with concepts and that's fine. The important thing is that you do not confuse acceptance, which is always acceptance of the present moment, that you do not confuse that deeper acceptance with the acceptance of a concept.

So it would be misleading to say, okay, I need to accept that I am disabled. It's better than to live in a place of anguish or anger or some kind of extreme negativity created by non-acceptance. But even to say I need to accept that I am disabled, you're still to some extent equating the concept with who you are.

So when I speak of acceptance, acceptance refers to acceptance of in whatever way you are experiencing this present moment. With the limitations that may be there because of your condition, every human being experiences certain limitations in their life, certain obstacles, and they manifest in the present moment. The only place where the limitations can manifest is in the present moment.

For example, in your case, crossing the street is much more difficult in your condition than it would be for somebody who has eyesight. So it is a limitation and many other limitations you experience, but only in the present moment. As you surrender, you accept that this is what you need to deal with in this moment.

This is what is. So acceptance always refers to the isness of this moment. Then by doing that, this acceptance opens up a portal or doorway into the state of transcendence.

And that is then how you free yourself from inhabiting a conceptual reality, which is often painful, unpleasant. So you don't think of yourself as a sufferer of such and such.

I'm a sufferer of this or that condition or this or that.

Or I'm a survivor of this or that. Yes, you have survived. Perhaps people have survived many bad things.

But if you make that into your identity, you know that you have survived it, but you're not a survivor. It's temporarily pleasant perhaps to think of yourself as, but it's still a narrative. You're still in the prison of a conceptual sense of self.

So the letting go is always the letting go of labeling yourself and your condition. Unless on a practical level, you can say certain things to communicate with people. But you know, in the depths of your being, that who you are in your essence transcends all those limitations.

But only by accepting the limitations in the present moment, are you able to access a dimension within yourself that transcends those limitations, almost a paradox. Only by accepting limitations, and this applies not just to you, whatever conditions that any human being experiences, or is limited by, because we're here essentially, the essential part of life here is to face limitation. This is how awakening actually happens.

At first it becomes a source of suffering, and then you begin to awaken through it. So by accepting the limitation in this moment, not some idea of a limitation, or accepting that this is going to be, this is how it's going to be for the rest of my life, another narrative to do with the future, or, oh no, for the past 62 years, I have lived like that. All that is narratives, so that you don't, it's never a question of accepting a narrative, it's letting go of a narrative.

And when you let go of a narrative, which is self-identification with certain conceptual mindstreams, then you just come to the acceptance of this moment, the limitation of this moment, and you do what you can in order to, you're facing this moment, but no longer in a state of resistance, but in a state of openness. And then you connect with the power that is beyond the person, and that which you connect with that, the dimension that transcends all limitations, and that is the realization of who you are beyond that. So that's the beauty of the grace that's hiding beyond the restrictions, the limitations, the burdens that we seem to have to carry.

And that's already expressed in the idea of the cross in Christian terms, which you can understand even if you're not a Christian. And if you are a Christian, it can deepen your way of being a Christian. The cross is the torture instrument, the worst possible limitation you can imagine for a human being.

So there's a human being nailed to the cross, the cross is a torture instrument. That's very strange. But in a strange way, the cross has a double function, the cross is also a symbol for the divine.

Very paradoxical. The torture instrument is also a symbol for the divine, the transcendent. And so there is a deep message embedded in that, which is exactly what we have just been talking about, and it's through surrender.

Jesus is supposed to have said, not my will, but thy will be done, which is an expression of surrender. Then the torture instrument became a portal into the transcendent, and then the torture instrument suddenly became a symbol for the divine. So the cross is whatever you bear, there's a medieval, goes back to medieval times, the expression, carrying your cross.

Carrying your cross is to endure whatever suffering there is in your life, whatever limitation is in your life. And by willingly carrying the cross, which means surrendering to the condition of the present moment, you transcend and you become whole, you become holy. And that is a miracle.

So acceptance of whatever is right now, you don't accept or have to accept that for the rest of my life, I'm going to be like this. All these are narratives. So that you no longer inhabit the conceptual sense of self that goes.

Then who you are, beyond the limitations of your form identity, you begin to realize how deep you are. And you're already on your way, the questioner already, the question you hadn't understood completely, I believe the true meaning of acceptance and perhaps confused it with acceptance of a label. So it's a wonderful thing, the, I can see that this limitation in your life is already becoming or has already become an opening into the essence of who you are, the realization of the essence of who you are.

And whenever that happens to a human being, then the obstacle, the limitation, and that which for a long time, probably was a source of suffering, becomes a, one could say, a blessing. You recognize it eventually, as a blessing. And that's how it is.

Hello. I wanted to thank you so much for taking my question and for all of your teaching and for your staff. And my question is, I'm a veterinarian and I've been practicing veterinary medicine for about 14 years.

And during my time, I've had to perform many end of life services, euthanasias, and in many cases, especially with traumatic events, it is a true blessing to be able to end physical suffering. But on a deeper level, I struggle with me as one manifestation of the one consciousness and these other beings who we call dogs and cats, as also manifestations of the one consciousness. Who am I, legally, I'm allowed to do this, but who am I in the form of consciousness to decide to participate in the end of the physical life?

[Speaker 1] (15:38 - 19:32)

Right. Well, you can approach that with different narratives. You just mentioned one, you begin, you're questioning whether it is the right thing to do.

You're saying, who am I? You can also say that your function is one of compassion in that moment, because you have the ability which you accept humbly and gracefully. You have the ability to end the physical suffering, because that is normally the case of that being.

So it's more a question of accepting that life through you or the one consciousness through you is able to end in a gentle, compassionate way, the suffering of that being. So that would be a narrative that is more true. But in the moment of performing that act of compassion, you do not need any narrative in your mind.

You can even let go of that, because that narrative is the closest to the truth that you can get. But in the moment, you let go of all narratives, and you're just absolutely present. And often, perhaps, I would think the owner of the pet is present sometimes or quite often.

So they will be probably extremely moved and sad emotionally. But if you are present, the entire situation can become something that is ultimately holy and an act of grace and beauty. If you embody the presence in that moment, then this being passes away in a very, very gentle, very gentle and loving way, which is the most beautiful way in which we can leave this dimension in surrounded by acceptance, compassion and love.

So that, I would say, is your function in these cases. And it's a beautiful function that I'm sure there are other vets who do not have your level of consciousness. And they may not have a problem at all.

There's never been a problem for them, but they are not aware of the depth and sacredness of that moment. They can't be aware. So it's not a problem to them because there's not enough awareness.

Then as awareness grows, it becomes a problem as it became for you. And then the next step is you transcend that, you transcend that as a problem. So you're no longer underneath the problem where we are unconscious.

You rise above. It's no longer something problematic. It's something to surrender to.

And you have been chosen to perform this compassionate act. And that's really how I would say that's how you need to approach it and realize that that's how it is. Sure.

[Speaker 3] (19:33 - 19:37)

Sure. Thank you so much. I really appreciate that.

[Speaker 1] (19:38 - 19:39)

You're welcome. Thank you. Thank you.

We have another question here, Eckhart. This person writes in, when we're living in a state of presence for the majority of our waking life, will we necessarily be called upon by universal consciousness to perform a certain outward purpose in the world? And would we be aware that it is our purpose at the time of performing it?

An example of this is when you, Eckhart, felt the impulse to move to Canada from England in order to write The Power of Now.

Well, it's not the same for everybody. It varies a lot from person to person. Your rising presence, how it changes your life, or it changes, certainly changes the experience of your life, how you experience your so-called life, how you experience reality, whatever you want to call it.

That certainly changes. For some people, it means they stay in their usual surroundings and continue to perform whatever work they are doing with an added dimension of depth. They realize that what really matters in whatever work they do is the state of consciousness that they bring to the action.

So their presence flows into what they do, and then it spreads to others. Some people may find that they are being removed from situations that are almost incompatible with presence. For example, you could be working in a company that is extremely dysfunctional, with continuous infighting and intrigues, and everybody hates everybody else.

And whatever the company produces does not really benefit the greater good. And you may realize that this is not the place where you can continue to work. So these are extreme cases.

And if that is so, then when you are as presence manifests more and more in your life, then those changes are not arrived at through mental decision making, should I or should I not carry on working here? As presence is present in your life, the realization sometimes of what you need to do, for example, remove yourself from a situation, has such certainty that you cannot even question it. It comes as a ready-made realization.

Or you may even find that you're walking out of the place, and you haven't thought about it before at all. But don't confuse that with an angry reaction. That does not arise out of presence.

So out of presence, there's a peace behind it, a peaceful knowing. And that immediately transforms into action. Or maybe not immediately, it could be that you wake up one day and realize that this is not the place, but you're not sure you give it a bit more time, just to make sure it's not just a passing thing.

And then a few days later, a few weeks later, the same feeling is there and is growing in you that you cannot carry on where you are. And then you remove yourself. And if you don't remove yourself, then the people that you are, let's take the example of a company, they would ask you to leave, because if the gap or the discrepancy between your level of consciousness and the collective consciousness of wherever you're finding yourself is too huge, then the separation has to happen, like oil and water.

So if you don't remove yourself, they would one day call you in and say, I'm sorry, we'll have to let you go. And that would become one of the happiest days of your life. But there are other cases when you may continue in your usual surroundings, but because you can make a difference there.

So you may be working in your place of work, maybe to some extent dysfunctional, there's an element of dysfunction in almost every place of work. But it's not such that you can no longer endure it, you can actually be the presence in that place and thereby perhaps help transform how other people work there, how they behave, how they interact with each other. So it is possible that your presence transmits itself to others who then, and more likely in a smaller place, if you work in a smaller company, so all kinds of possibilities.

Nobody can predict how the arising presence will affect your life, but it will affect your life deeply. It's just a question of whether it affects it deeply, not only internally, which is always the case, but in many cases also externally. So when the realization, just you mentioned this example, in my case, although I loved England, I still do.

I lived for many, many years. One day I woke up and I realized I had to leave and I knew I had to go to the West Coast of North America. I had never been there.

No, I'd been there once many, many years before, but there was hardly a memory of that. So I didn't really have a mental image, but I knew for some reason, I didn't know the reason why. And that stayed with me.

I didn't act upon it immediately, but the impulse grew, actually became stronger and stronger. Weeks passed, I think, I don't know how many months, two months, three months passed, and finally I realized if I don't act now, I will become ill. I could almost feeling, I could feel the beginning of something going wrong in the body because there was the impulse and I was not acting.

I knew I had to act now. And if I had not acted, I would probably be dead now. Well, that's fine.

I would just appear in another form somewhere else, but a pity because I would not have fulfilled the possibilities of this incarnation. And so I moved. And only when I was there, I realized the writing after a few weeks started to happen and I realized I needed that energy field for the writing to happen.

So it was a, the impulse is very strong and you had to trust the impulse. And sometimes it means when the impulse comes out of presence, but you need to do something, just give it some time because you might be falling. If it stays with you and it even grows, then you need to obey it.

If not, something like an illness can easily happen. Now, this often means that there will be a loss of, a temporary loss of security in your life because you may have to move. Now, this does not apply to everybody, but to some people who presence arises.

And then you may have to step into the unknown in some cases, not everybody. You may have to step into the unknown to some extent. And so it's a question of also becoming comfortable with insecurity, not running away from it.

Sometimes it is the case that security is your prison. Security is not only the security of life insurance or whatever insurance you have, it can also easily become a prison. So don't be afraid of insecurity.

Often you have to step into a totally new situation and then just stay, stay present. So presence will guide you. Some people remain where they are, as I mentioned earlier, but the way in which they perform their work changes, it deepens.

And again, how present sometimes changes your relationship too. If the other person is, that if you may be living with someone, you are awakening spiritually, the other person is not. We don't, it is quite possible that you can surrender to the fact that your partner is not awakening and you can continue to live together relatively peacefully.

You are no longer reactive. So you're not fueling your partner's pain body in any way, which your partner, if he or she has a heavy pain body, would find quite disconcerting. But in some cases, it may be fine.

You can surrender to the fact that your partner is not awakening spiritually. In other cases, the discrepancy between the two states of consciousness becomes so great that separation is the only possibility. So nobody can predict how it's going to unfold in your life.

Just trust and realize that your main responsibility is to be present in the moment. And then out of presence, wisdom arises. This is one word we could use.

Wisdom means you can do the right thing. If you only use your mind, your rational mind, it does not necessarily mean that you will do the right thing, because the rational mind only focuses on one little thing and pursues one little aim. It usually cannot take into account the totality of the situation.

And only if wisdom arises, you can see something that is problematic within the totality of the situation and then take action that you take into consideration many factors. It's interesting. We could talk about this for a long time.

But wisdom, yes, that's what the world needs. But wisdom arises out of presence. And that will guide you.

Eckhart Tolle Transcending Our Stories [d170c348-c94e-4db7-b062-ad42015bf9dd]

Transcending Our Stories. In this podcast, Eckhart talks to a live audience about our tendency to manufacture stories about ourselves and others. He discusses our desperate need to be right and to make others wrong.

And while it may feel gratifying in the moment, Eckhart says having a story actually strengthens the ego, keeping us stuck. However, we don't have to stay in that negativity. He explains how we can learn to shift our inner narrative, release the ego, and align ourselves with the peace of the present moment.

I'm beginning to receive your questions. Thank you very much. If possible, write as legibly as you can.

Otherwise, I'll get really irritated and my mind will say, do they expect me to read this, to be able to read this? Why can't they write more legibly? Isn't it common sense that they should write legibly?

Why do people do things like that? That would be a normal ego reaction to something that in itself is perfectly okay, because you can either read it or you can't. But the ego adds a story to it, and behind the story is always an attempt to be more right than the other person.

There's always an attempt to have in some kind of superiority. It's unconscious, of course. Ego is always unconscious.

Alternatively, what actually I don't get irritated, as you might have guessed, if there's a paper that's not legible, I look at it, okay, I'll put this aside and give it more attention later. In the meantime, I'll read the legible ones, and then if there's time later, I'll give it more attention. There's no problem without a story.

You are not wrong and I'm not right. This is just what is. Just a tiny example of the difference between aligning yourself to the simple isness of the present moment and imposing a story on it in the service of the self that wants to inflate itself.

Indignation, irritation. They should. Why do they?

Don't they know better? Or they're all stories in the service of a false sense of self. And so in presence, all this, what I sometimes call unnecessary baggage that people manufacture mentally and emotionally, all that unnecessary baggage that really is a heaviness to it that they carry around, doesn't arise anymore.

And there's the simple. This is what is. I can either do this or I can do that.

I can deal with it now. I can put it aside. No story.

But this is frustrating to the ego because when there's no longer any story where you oppose the other, where you make yourself feel superior to the other, then there's no food for the ego anymore. But there's an incredible lightness, the lightness of being comes and the heaviness goes out of situations. That's what the ego is.

The heavy me. And even when it attempts to make itself superior, what it doesn't recognize is that all these are really forms of suffering. The ego doesn't even recognize suffering as suffering.

It doesn't realize that when you get angry or irritated about somebody else's behavior and bring up a big story about it, you are actually in a state of suffering. If you were able to have attention in your body, you would notice that your body is suffering because those things affect the smooth, harmonious working of the energy field that goes through the body. So an angry thought has an effect on the body.

A small irritation has an effect and the body doesn't really like it. But the ego, the ego itself is not in touch with the body and it mistakes suffering for something good. Anger.

I can really get into this. So you can look at your own life and see where you are manufacturing unnecessary stories, both in small situations and in bigger life situations and in situations to do with relatives, family members, partners, ex-partners, a wonderful source of egoic stories. Can talk about your ex-husband or wife for hours, either to somebody else if they're ready to listen or in your own mind.

Or you had a confrontation or an exchange with somebody yesterday and you can go on, continue that in your mind and say so many hurtful things to the other person that unfortunately you couldn't think of in the situation. But you can relive it now and it's almost as good as the real thing. So in that fantasy world of the mind, you can be right again and again and the other person can be wrong again and again.

How wonderful. All this is what we call unconscious. So people don't know what they are doing.

For them that is their reality. Now can we understand why Jesus said forgive them for they know not what they do. They are unconscious.

It's an automatic process of ego inflation, of ego reinforcement. It's conditioned, learned. It's part of the structure of the mind.

So that is something important to recognize. Stories can be new stories like the one I just talked about, a simple event. You get irritated about something because they are not doing it right.

They should know better or why don't they or whatever. Or it can be a long-standing story that has been going on in your life for years. A story about your parents, for example.

A story about somebody in your life years ago, what they did. Often people approach me with questions like, how do I deal with betrayal in relationship? How do I, what my husband, my wife had for a long time an affair with somebody else and then finally he walked off with her or him, he or she.

He betrayed me and how can I get beyond that terrible thing of having been betrayed by him. Much more terrible than what happened is the word betrayal because that is already a story. So if you remove that, what is left?

Just the simple events. He, while we were still, or she, while we were still married, was in a relationship with somebody else but didn't tell me about it. And in the end, he, she walked off with him or her.

And I felt very hurt. And I can still feel that pain inside me now. That's what there is to it.

But the reason why you still feel that pain is because you went beyond the simple facts of the situation. You added the betrayal story to it. And by dwelling on that mentally, it continuously renewed the pain, the initial pain of the event.

So it is normal when somebody you're close to walks off with somebody else that you feel emotional pain. But this does not have to be carried on from one year into the next and into the next and into the next. That is like a wound, like a physical wound.

A wound is inflicted on you and then the wound has a certain time span within which it heals. Yes, it may leave a scar behind, but it's healed. The wound itself is healed.

The scar may still be there. And in the same way, an event like that, yes, there may be some suffering there. But if you add the story to it, which of course is in the service of the ego, then it can go on.

The hurt goes on for years because you relive it by calling it the betrayal. You relive it continuously. The fact is, no human being can act beyond their level of consciousness.

So your husband, your ex-husband or ex-wife manifested the particular level of consciousness that they were at at the time. And that's what happened. So he didn't realize, she didn't realize that she was hurting you or she realized or he realized that he was hurting you, but something else was more important for him or her.

And so that corresponded to his or her level of consciousness at the time. But that's not a satisfying perspective for the ego. But that's a simple fact.

Nobody can act beyond that. And of course, everybody has to suffer the consequences of their actions because most probably this new relationship of your ex-wife or ex-husband didn't work out either. Because again, the same level of consciousness or unconsciousness manifested in that relationship.

And the same thing started all over again, most likely. Or they became a bit more conscious. In fact, might be awake, let's say at least awakening now.

And you might meet him or her again accidentally in the street. And they might now manifest a completely different level of consciousness. But if you're stuck in the story about them, you won't even see that.

You will see the old person still, there will be no resolution possible. If you are not stuck in the old story, if you simply accept the facts of the situation, then you would be open to meeting this person again and realizing, oh, this is not the same unconscious jerk that I was married to. Jerk is of course the story again.

He is now much more awake than I knew him. What a pity. Why couldn't he be awake when I was married?

Why does the universe always does that to me? And this new person, she gets to live with a conscious person. So the two levels of story observe the spontaneous stories that arise when little things don't go according to expectations and in an unconscious attempt to make somebody wrong.

And the old longstanding stories that in some cases have provided you with a sense of identity. So longstanding stories that are frequently repeated in the mind about what you and somebody else and what happened and what they did or failed to do. It is not unusual for a human being to derive a significant part of their sense of identity from such collection of three or four of those stories or even just one big one.

We all know the expression victim identity. You cannot see yourself as a victim without a story around it. You must have a story.

And of course, people do bad things to other people. There's no doubt about that. But when you construct a story, you are doing something to yourself unconsciously that is often worse than the initial event that the story is about because it prolongs it indefinitely.

What otherwise would have a certain time span, the injury, the healing process, and the scar remaining and that's it. Then yes, you can still look at the scar and say that's metaphorically speaking. But it's basically you have gone beyond it.

So it requires vigilance to discover in yourself the arising of stories around things and the old stories that you may still carry in your mind that gives you a false sense of identity that strengthens the ego. It's so common that most people do it to a greater or lesser degree. So when you are present, gradually, perhaps even suddenly, you don't do that anymore.

You relinquish the stories. And then a certain simplicity comes into your life and your relationships become much easier. Stories are even little things when you tell somebody, oh, yesterday you did that, but you should have done that.

It can be expressed even without that, without the should. Yesterday you gave me that, but can you, could you from now on do that? The way in which you communicate can be done in such a way that you don't make the other person wrong.

That is a very helpful thing. And also things resolve themselves much more quickly if you don't add the story to the event without the baggage. The resolution comes about much more quickly.

The egoic self that adds a story to a simple event does not want a resolution. It wants a continuation of its assumed sense of superiority. In other words, you want the problem to continue unconsciously where consciously you say, I don't want this problem.

I don't want to have to deal with these people anymore. That's what you say, but you do because they help you feel superior. And of course, again, that's unconscious.

So it's amazing what mind patterns humans are trapped in. Forgive them for they know not what they do. So it's your job to identify stories.

If you have any doubt about what is a story and what is, where does the fact end and the story begin? Please ask. But I believe most of you are clear and you can identify stories in your mind, both the ones that arise spontaneously in situations and the old ones.

They are very important to identify. And there is a reluctance. If they have become part of your sense of self, there is a reluctance.

There will be a reluctance in you to let go of them. I'm not letting go of that one because then my sense of self will be partly collapsing. But that of course is a wonderful thing because that is a false sense of self.

You are not that victimized person and you are not superior to somebody else. You are presence. So don't attempt to strengthen your form identity that is there anyway.

You don't need to strengthen it. The form identity you might remember I wrote about and sometimes speak about, you have two identities. One is the temporal identity, the conditioned identity of you as a person, temporal of course, you have a certain lifespan.

You as the person who has a body and a mind that has been conditioned by your past and by your surroundings and the past of the world that you grew up in, conditioned by many, many factors, including even your native language is already a form of conditioning. So you've been conditioned by that. It's the temporal self and that's the form identity.

And there is an essence identity, which is the timeless, formless consciousness, without which the form identity could not even exist. The form identity is not separate from essence identity. It's just a temporary form that your deeper essence of which is consciousness itself has taken for this lifetime.

So your form identity is a ripple on the surface of the ocean. Your essence identity is the ocean. When your mind becomes still, the thinking subsides and only awareness is left.

That awareness is the ocean. Now sometimes people say, don't you need the ego? You can't live here without the ego.

The way I use the word ego is ego meaning complete and utter identification with your form identity. Nothing else. There's nothing else that you know about yourself.

Only you know yourself as the body and the conditioned mind. That's ego. Form identity itself is not the ego.

It's only form identity. So you don't have to get rid of your form identity and say, I want to be nobody in particular anymore. No, you don't.

That's not unnecessary. You can honor your form identity. It includes the physical body.

It includes what you have achieved in this lifetime. It includes all the relationships that you have and have had. What you have experienced is all beautiful.

You can honor and you can have plans for the future. What do you want to add to your form identity? I'd like to learn to play the piano.

Why not? You add this and that to your form identity or I'd like to achieve that on the level of form. That's fine.

But what is the foundation for your sense of self? The foundation for your sense of self, if that is the form identity, then that's ego. But if the foundation for your sense of self is your essence identity, which has no form and is timeless, and it is what the Buddha called formlessness, which is a better translation than emptiness, sunyata, that is your essence.

And you can know that here and now, the moment thinking subsides and you have not gone to sleep. Thinking subsides. There's this little gap that arises in the stream of otherwise continuous stream of thinking.

And this little gap is, there's a gap between this hand and this hand, so to speak, in your mind. And there suddenly you have this space of simple, what's left of you when you don't remember any story. You're not thinking about anything.

You're not even thinking about your name or how old you are. Why? And yet something is left of you.

How do we describe that? A spacious sense of presence, stillness, inner stillness, beingness, a sense of I am without anything added to it. Because usually I am follows, I am a man, I am a woman, I am a success, I'm a failure.

That's the form identity. So if you add something to I am, that's your form identity. But if nothing is added to that sense of beingness or presence, I am.

This is the I am that has no form. This is why certain teachers recommend it as a meditation to ask yourself, who am I? That meditation fails when your mind comes up with an answer.

It is not a puzzle that has an answer on a conceptual level. And you cannot solve the question, who am I, by thinking, hmm, let's see, I'll just start thinking about that. No, you need to allow the question and then the question can take you into beingness or presence because who you essentially are is consciousness itself.

Who am I? I don't know. And you don't feel that you need to know or should know, become comfortable with not knowing who you are.

If you are comfortable with not knowing who you are, then that makes it much easier to realize who you are beyond form. If you become uncomfortable with not knowing who you are, then you get fearful. I should know who I am.

So there is a level of not knowing that's extremely important in your life, and that the ego does not like to go there. It fears to go into that not knowing. And this also applies to a human being relating to other human beings.

When all there is when you relate to another human being is your perspectives, your judgments, your opinions about that human being, that's extremely limiting. You are not really relating to that human being. You're relating to the screen of mental concepts about that person.

And this is how this huge obstacle arises in many, many relationships because you never really meet the essence of that person. Why can you not meet the essence of that person? Because you have not met your own essence.

You identified only with your form identity as a man or a woman or whatever conditioning makes up the person. But if you have met yourself as the essence identity, and it's easy here and now, what's left of you? A still space of presence.

It's your essence identity. And the more you surrender into that and allow it to be there, the more peaceful, deeply peaceful, but also there's a subtle sense of joy in that presence. To know yourself as consciousness is inherently joyful, not the ecstatic joy that goes, ah, I am consciousness.

It's a very subtle joy, like a distant sound. And this is the realization of being and the realization of being is the realization of consciousness, the self-realization of consciousness, consciousness realizing itself. And that is joyful.

So spaciousness, I've pointed out how important it is if you work with people in whatever capacity, not to become completely taken over by whatever modality you use when you work with people. Not to become completely taken over by the knowledge that you have about what you do, because obviously you apply your knowledge. There's nothing wrong with that.

That's part of the world of form. But if you get taken over completely by the accumulated knowledge, the forms, then what is lost in your relationship is that sense of spaciousness. So a vital question in any relationship, even more so in the helping relationship, therapeutic, whatever you want to call it, a vital question is always be vigilant and say, is there space here in addition to dealing with things on the level of form?

Is there still a sense of space within me and between us? And here the space between us is awareness present, is stillness present in some way? And that is vital in therapeutic relationships, but it's vital in any relationship to have not a one dimensional relationship with another human being, which is only on the level of form, but to acknowledge the form level, to honor the form level, but not be confined to the form level.

And that means in addition to your knowledge that you have in your whatever work you do with another person, in addition to that, there needs to be something else. And that is almost contradictory to knowledge, because you need to be able to enter the spaces of not knowing anything in between applying your knowledge. So you become still, even if it's just listening while the other speaks, you're not responding while you listen, you're not formulating the next question yet, there's open and spacious, attentive listening, and that is an energy field, that is presence, that is the the energy field of presence is suddenly there between you.

And that transmits itself to the other also. And that is more foundational than anything else that you do on the level of form that, yes, you can be helpful to a limited extent, even on the level of form alone. But if you want a true therapeutic relationship with another human being, the presence needs to be there, the stillness needs to be there as part of the relationship.

So in some kinds of work that you do, intuition may be important. After a while, you begin to go beyond what you have learned. And it takes sometimes years before a therapist has the courage to let go of what he or she has learned.

And then at some point, they just become present without even having a word for it. And then just go. Hmm.

And then they begin to say intuitively, out of that spaciousness, out of that stillness, they say things that they never learned. And then they never knew that they knew that, because they didn't know it until they said it until the situation required this knowledge come forth. And then you become a truly effective therapist when more and more intuition takes over, but intuition can only take over if you become comfortable with not knowing instead of thinking immediately that you have the answer, or you just applying the model that you have learned, becoming comfortable with not knowing gives you access to a much deeper knowing, almost paradoxically, it gives you access to intuitive knowing, which is primordial intelligence arising, and then it uses your mind and then you speak. But the important thing is how vital it is not to become completely identified with your knowledge so that you you have both your knowledge and the space of not knowing which is when the mind subsides and only this alert presence remains.

So that is space in the relationship. Is there space in the relationship and this really applies to any relationship. It is certainly important in your relationship with your partner, wife, husband, children, family members, colleagues at work in any situation, you have to bring spaciousness to the situation in addition to the things that you know you have to talk about and so on.

So that the two dimensions of you are always present in any situation. You as the form identity and you as the underlying unconditioned consciousness. The two.

There's a balance between form and formlessness. So both of you, so to speak, need to be there. You as form and you as your essence.

This requires vigilance. The normal thing to happen is that this the connectedness with your essence identity is lost very easily in human relationships because the mind is so active and we live in a civilization that provides continuous and incessant stimulus, stimuli, the plural, continuous incessant stimuli for the mind even more than even 30 years ago. 30 years ago, it was just radio and television and you would people would sit there for hours.

But nowadays you have countless sources of stimulus for the mind that draws you into continuously thinking about what's your next Facebook post? What's it going to be? And you look at the ones that are coming in.

All these people are doing these fantastic things. And me, I'm just sitting here and then you have to pretend that you're also doing fantastic things. And usually it involves taking a nice selfie.

It's Narcissus. You might remember the myth of Narcissus, the Greek, ancient Greek myth. There was this young man who had never seen himself before because they didn't have mirrors at the time.

But one day he happened to look into a little pool of water and he saw himself and he realized that he was extremely beautiful. He said, Oh, that's me. And the story goes, he fell in love with himself.

Not in a good way. Not by becoming one with who he is, but the separation happened. This myth shows the beginning stage of the egoic sense of self expressed as a story.

The image that he saw of himself in the pool is the mental image of the ego. And stories are part of that image. That's me.

I'm me and my story. So you have the image of me and then, oh, so this guy, Narcissus, he experienced that separation. And then I think something bad happened to him, but I don't remember what.

It's like the civilization has made a great effort to come up with as many things as possible to prevent people from becoming still and spacious and taking a moment of looking at the sky and feeling the inner spaciousness arise and becoming aware of the leaves of the tree or the branches and the wind blowing and the noise of water. The simple thing becoming still, alert, sensing that stillness within. And of course, a minute later, another text message is coming in.

Of course, you have to look at it immediately. And emails are coming in, too. Oh, dear.

I must be very important. I'm getting all these messages. And some people are beginning to realize how dreadful that kind of life is.

And some more enlightened companies, they may not be totally enlightened, but their beginning signs of enlightenment, they even forbid you to answer emails after a certain time in the evening. Some have even disabled your phones. And that is very wise, because otherwise people will go insane eventually.

So there are great opportunities in this new technology also, but it's also very dangerous. There are both. You can spread messages of awareness, you can spread enlightenment through that also, it can travel and incredible madness, too.

So the essence then is the two dimensions. Let's just put it like that, of who you are, balance them in your life and at work. And you will find inevitably in certain situations, one will become stronger than the other.

And then the situation changes and the other will become stronger. So look at your own life and see how you and this is vital, can give you a reflection of where you are at in your spiritual life. How do you respond to the challenges when they come, from the little ones to the big ones?

Do things and situations and people have the power to upset you, to throw you off balance, to create negative emotions? Or are you able to become more present, more aligned with the present moment when a challenge arises? That's the critical line.

Only you can know that. That really gives you a reflection of how conscious you are, if you want to know. Because you could formulate in your mind and self-image of yourself as being so spiritual.

And some even suppress emotions because you're not supposed to have negative emotions when you're spiritual. So I'm not angry. I'm just letting you know what I think.

I'm not angry at all. Why do you always accuse me of being angry? You should look at yourself.

Denial, so that you can keep your self-image intact. So how do you deal with challenges? It tells you how conscious you are.

As somebody said to me on the retreat, I can be present when I'm sitting alone in my room. I can be really present and still. But the moment I go out into the world, I lose it.

This is why some people think if I could live in an ashram, in a community, in a protected setting, in a way it's like, imagine that we are here and we are not going home anymore. Why, let's live here. Let's all live together.

Wouldn't that be wonderful? I would come and visit you occasionally. Although compared to the mainstream population, it is true that there is this, our group here embodies a more awakened state of consciousness than the one that is still normal in the world.

That is undoubtedly true. But even though if you started to live together for a longer period of time, you would encounter many situations that would require you to be absolutely present because ego would still surface. The best situation for most of us is to be out in the world and face the challenges of the world.

Use the world and whatever the world presents you with as your spiritual practice, rather than hoping for ideal situations so that you can really start practicing spiritually. Because what the mind or the ego envisages as an ideal situation is not the ideal situation. The ideal situation is one that provides you with challenges.

Because without that, there is no awakening. That's the truth of it. So once you know that, you also know that life is meant to be challenging.

It's not meant to be, it's meant to be challenging because that forces evolution to happen. It's challenging for every life form on the planet. Every life form has its own challenge.

And there would have been no evolution without life forms being challenged and being forced to evolve. And so you might have noticed that the universe brings you one challenge after another. And some people get very upset and despondent of this.

Why can't life leave me alone? Why is there always the next thing? Just when I've achieved this and I thought everything was fine, something else happened.

Everything was fine here and then somebody crashed there. Every challenge gives you an opportunity to go deeper, to be more awake, to let go of ego. So you can welcome all those things when they arise.

That could be a significant shift in the way in which you experience life when you no longer get upset when the next challenge happens. Or if you do get upset, suddenly you notice that you're upset and then you go, oh, isn't that interesting? I just, I missed the bus or the plane and I got upset.

For what? How important is that whole thing, missing a bus or a plane, on a universal scale? It's completely unimportant.

I thought it was terribly important. Isn't that interesting? So sometimes being upset is fine too.

That's part of the learning too, because awareness comes in at some point and says, oh, I can feel the upset. Why? Because I missed the plane and I have to wait here for another three hours or another night.

And then you ask, I'm just giving one example out of hundreds. Does it matter where you wait, where you breathe? You can breathe at the airport for the next three hours or somewhere else.

We can sit on a plane or at home in a chair or at the airport in a chair. You sit, always sit somewhere or stand somewhere or lie somewhere. Does it really matter when the mind says, I should be home by now.

What would you do at home? Well, I would sit or lie or stand somewhere. Or I would check my email.

Well, you can do that now too. A certain independence comes, there's a certain freedom from externals that begins to come in as you live more consciously. You are free of being totally, your inner state being totally determined by external conditions.

And that's a wonderful sense of freedom. Otherwise you're at the mercy of whatever happens out there. And things as the Buddha already realized and told us, things are unstable in the universe.

Everything is changing, impermanent and in flux, continuous flux. So if you're dependent on things being stable, you get upset a lot of the time. If you're dependent on your inner state on things going as they should, you get upset and suffer.

You suffer a lot. And the freedom comes when you can immediately go with what is internally. No longer construct a story about how unfairly the universe or somebody else has treated you or how dreadful they are.

None of that. Just immediately align with the present moment. Freedom from externals.

Wonderful. Especially from unconscious people, because otherwise every unconscious person makes you unconscious. Every angry person makes you angry.

So we transcend just a brief recapitulation in one minute. Essence identity. I don't know if it's going to be one minute or ten, but let's...

Essence identity, form identity. The two bring them together so that they are both there in your daily life. Form identity alone is ego.

Form identity with presence is just what it is. Form identity. Nothing wrong with it.

You can see how religious people fight different religions. Why? Because they're completely identified with their form identity.

So you find that the disagreement between religious people happens because these people are trapped in their egos. And the religion has become part of their sense of self. And you can still honor your religion, which is part of the form of life.

If you have gone deeper into the essence of yourself, then you recognize the essence in your religion. And then you can meet somebody else and recognize that no matter what the outer form of their religion is, you realize you truly meet the other. So moment of stillness.

Eckhart Tolle Transcending The Self [566dc6ff-9f3b-4377-8a5b-6c3325bf1f58]

Transcending the self. In this episode, Eckhart reflects on his signature teaching, awareness of the present moment. He says when we focus on the here and now, our senses become heightened.

We smell a familiar flower as if it were the very first time, or we reread a favorite book and understand it in a whole new way. Eckhart says when we give any experience our full attention, that is the first step towards what he calls self-transcendence. He explains we release our limited perceptions and connect with the aliveness of the universe.

Welcome everybody in the present moment. Welcome to the present moment, in case you've been missing it. Easy to miss by too much thinking.

So we begin by, I'm not going to call it a meditation. Let's put that word aside. There's nothing wrong with meditation, but I'm just not going to call this meditation.

Let's begin by becoming aware of the present moment, more aware than you would normally be, or for some people the first time. Today you're actually acknowledging the present moment. Where is it?

Of course you can't see it, but what you see, you can only see it in the present moment. So you can't see the present moment, but whatever you see happens in the present moment. Seeing is inseparable from the present moment.

Now, I can't hear the present moment either, but you can only hear whatever you're hearing in the present moment. It's a prerequisite for hearing and other sense perceptions too. They all happen in the present moment.

They're inseparable from the present moment. So you cannot perceive the present moment, of course, but the entry point, a good entry point or portal into the present moment are sensory perceptions. To become more acutely aware, or for some people, aware of something that they had been habitually missing most of their life, which is the aliveness of whatever it is that's around them that is being perceived now.

And if you give your fullest attention to whatever it is you're perceiving, either your attention to one single thing that you're perceiving, hearing, seeing, touching, smelling, tasting, giving your fullest attention to one thing that you're perceiving, that's fine. To really look at something, to really listen to something, the sound, to really taste something, give your fullest attention, that's fine. And already it does something.

I'll tell you in a second what it does. Or you give your attention to the totality of the present moment without singling out one thing. So you are aware of your sense perceptions.

So right here now, whatever it is you're seeing, the screen, this person, or me on the screen. And of course, you're also aware of the, in the periphery of your vision, you see also wherever you are, the rooms, that's all around there. So you're aware of the totality of what you see.

And you take it in. And then you might be hearing certain sounds, or maybe it's only the sound of my voice. You're aware of that.

And it's perhaps not likely that you're aware at this moment of a particular smell. But maybe you're burning some incense, in which case you are, but maybe not. Or maybe it's springtime, and maybe you can smell the flowers, who knows?

Whatever it is, that's what you're aware of now. The totality of sense perception in the present moment. Now, that's already a step, an important step to be able to do that frequently, so that you don't continuously miss life, which is inseparable from now.

Because what happens in your mind is a secondary life. It's an abstraction of the actual aliveness. So be aware, acutely aware of sense perceptions.

That is already a step towards what I sometimes call self transcendence. Because as you're acutely aware of sense perceptions, which is the aliveness of the universe all around you, you are less aware or unaware of this entity that normally occupies, takes up most of your attention, which is the person that you are or think you are, the self, the entity, the narrative in your mind that you perhaps call my life, or perhaps call it me and my life. So when you give your, this, of course, is an abstraction, a narrative in your mind.

It's fine. And the tendency is for this abstraction to absorb a huge part of your consciousness. It gobbles it up all the time.

Because your life is so problematic, you have to continuously think about it for many people. And the more that happens to you, the more unhappy you are also. The more anxious you are, the more depressed you are, all kinds of strange emotions continuously arise that are due to the unsatisfactory and unsatisfying nature of this entity, the self, which is your form identity, as I sometimes call it, the person with a history.

You have a past and history that makes up the person. And that absorbs people's attention. They are continuously attempting to defend that sense of self, to add something to that sense of self, or even to get rid of something in that sense of self, or exchange it for something else.

It's a problematic, very frustrating way to live if you never even have a glimpse of self-transcendence. The first glimpse, and perhaps even more than a glimpse of self-transcendence, can easily be awareness of sense perceptions. Because then you're no longer, your consciousness is no longer being absorbed by continuous, compulsive thought processes.

So, it's a portal. Actually, you can feel a sense of, some sense of peace descends upon you when you become aware of sense perceptions. Whether you're in your room, and perhaps more powerfully, when you're out in nature, wherever it may be in nature, whether it's your backyard or whether it's a park or whether it's the shore, the seashore or a forest or mountain or field, doesn't matter.

Nature is very helpful. It helps you in that being aware. It makes it easy, easier for you to be aware of the present moment when you're out in nature.

In the middle of a city, a little less easy, because you're surrounded by human-made things, mind-made things, and continuously your thinking is being stimulated continuously by whatever you see around you. Nature does not think. Nature is, of course, there's a consciousness there that lives through every natural form, but those things, the animals and the trees, they are not engaged in conceptual discursive thought, and they don't have an identity based on thought.

In other words, they don't have a self. They are prior to the arising of self. Humans are trapped in self unless they are awakening, and then our journey is to step beyond ultimately the illusion that that is who you really are, to become free of that illusion.

So the entry point is sense perception. So what am I aware of right now, whatever it is, you don't have to label it. It's better not to label it.

It's unfortunately not taught at school that you can look at things or listen to things and know something without calling it anything in your mind, either out loud. And then you're touching upon something that is the pure, the awareness you can perceive through thought or you can perceive through awareness, the non-conceptual knowing, and how often you can know something deeply without needing to find mental labels, thoughts about it, and you just, you know. Part of the arising of presence or awareness is that increasingly that dimension of knowing comes into your life more and more.

So you look at things, including even human beings. You can look at them, perceive them, hear what they say, but you do not form any mental image about them, any conceptual image about who or what they are. And that deepens everything.

It deepens your relationship with you, another human being. The moment you formulate concepts about who they are, a sense of separation arises naturally. Concepts limit things or reduce things to something that you think you can understand.

And whatever concept you might have about another human being is only ever partially true if that, and often not even that. In many cases, it's a projection of something in yourself. So whatever concept you have could be at best partially true.

It's never the total truth because every human being is capable of change. It's not a fixed entity. So even the worst person that you would see now could awaken spiritually through usually very unconscious people, through suffering.

Suddenly, there's a shift. But if you are attached to a conceptual reality that you've created for the other person, then you've put this other person in a prison, and you've put yourself in a prison, a mental prison. So it starts with a simple thing, being aware.

When you look at something, be aware that of what it is you're looking at and not needing to comment mentally. It's not needing to. It's a different way of knowing.

You can look at a pebble, little, beautiful, simple, smooth stone. If you look closely, you can see tiny sparkles here and there. So it's already engaged in a process of transformation.

There's already a certain crystallization. It's a wonderful practice to have something like that and engage several senses. In this case, an important part of this is the sense of touch.

And give that your attention. And you can look and touch at the same time. A wonderful meditation.

You can use the mineral realm of our planet to take anything and see and sense the inherent aliveness of something that is habitually called inanimate, which means not alive. There are two ways of finding out that this is not inanimate. One is by becoming a scientist, physics, and penetrate so deeply into this with whatever they use, electron microscopes or whatever they use.

You could penetrate so deeply that it's no longer a pebble or a stone. It's swirling atoms and molecules with 99% empty space in between them. But this is no longer a stone or a molecule.

It's actually intensely alive. And the other way of knowing that it's intensely alive is to let go of all that and perceive it without conceptualization and sense its inherent aliveness. Anything like that can be enormously helpful in the awakening process.

It's miraculous. The moment you call it something, you've closed the door to any further deepening of your experience, the way you experience it. The moment you say it's a pebble, okay, the door is already closed.

If you totally believe that now you know what it is, the door is closed. You can still say, I can say it's a pebble, but I know that it's not ultimately what it is. And ultimately, nothing is actually separate from anything else.

Therefore, as far as language and thought is concerned, any noun you use, a noun, pebble, table, tree, chair, flower, is actually a limitation because it is not a separate entity. The moment you use a noun, it gives you the delusion that there's a separate entity, separate from the rest of the totality of what is. So it's only a limit.

We limit ourselves by creating so many nouns, including for people, including for yourself. But to believe in nouns is to miss the vital important fact that everything is an intensely alive process. It's a happening.

It's not a static thing. So this pebble is a bit live process and you are on another scale, an intensely alive process of consciousness. You're not an entity as such.

Our ability to think has been enormously helpful in many ways for the development of civilization, et cetera. But it had a big downside to it. It would have been an enormous step forward and it presented, but at the same time, an enormous challenge because the very power that arose in humans through thinking also became an enormous limitation.

So they're now trapped in the power that came through them. That's us, humans. They are trapped in that trap of thinking, excessive thinking, overthinking, deriving your sense of identity from thinking.

That needs to be transcended because otherwise the ego, because identification with thinking becomes the ego, the ego will become more and more destructive. So here we are perceiving this and make it into a meditation if we wanted to use that word. You can use anything.

And then become aware how often you're actually perceiving something and you're not conceptualizing it. It does happen spontaneously, especially as you are awakening already spiritually. There are more and more instances when you perceive something and you know exactly what it is or you know exactly what you have to do, but you're not telling yourself anything about it.

It's that deeper way of knowing, unitive knowing, you could call it. So to lose that is that this is what happened to humanity through the proliferation of the thinking faculty. We lost that dimension, which we once had naturally, the connectedness with the totality.

And then we are now at a point of, for many humans, almost losing it completely. Losing it meaning being totally unaware of the dimension. And now we can regain it.

It's an ancient myth, paradise lost and paradise regained. But when you regain something, you regain it with an added dimension at a deeper level because there's a knowing now before it was natural. Humans in ancient cultures, they had a natural perception that the world was animated, the world around them.

So they interpreted as spirit presences that you can sense everywhere. The ancient Greeks had it. In India, they had it.

The Romans had it. Every house had a spirit presence, they felt. Locations had spirit presences, objects.

And although there might have been a slight misinterpretation, but there was a deep truth behind it, that it's all alive. We're inhabiting a universe that is intensely alive. We are part of that aliveness.

And that aliveness is consciousness taking form continuously and metamorphosis of form, continuous process. And then something happened. It was not only thinking eventually brought about technology and science.

And then we learned about evolution. And we learned that we are not the center of the universe, not in the conventional sense. In a much deeper sense, you could be described as the center of the universe.

If you know yourself as consciousness, that has no space, it's beyond time and space. So to know yourself as consciousness is to know yourself as the essence of all things. So gradually, we began to believe that the entire world was interpreted as being became dead.

It was all a random development of life, everything. There was no intelligence gradually, that was the belief. When the theory of evolution came, of course, there's a truth there.

But the mistake was to see it as completely devoid of any purpose or meaning, completely devoid of purpose or meaning. Random process, pure chance that brings about that was the belief. And that's an error.

Evolution, of course, has a certain truth to it. But there is a something behind it. And intelligence inhabits every life form.

And you know that by going deeply within yourself, not through auto examination of phenomena. And that's what we're about here. You go deeply within.

And then you know yourself beyond conceptualization. And you know yourself right now. And this is the next step.

Let's come back to our big, we started with sense perceptions, and we're still sense perceptions. The next step is, when you're very much aware of sense perceptions, you become aware of yourself as a perceiver. And that is sense that it's not a thought.

And it's easier to sense it with the entire energy field of your body, the totality of you, not the physical you, but that which is beyond the physical you, is aware. That is the, you're aware of yourself as this presence that inhabits every cell of your body. And that presence, of course, is the presence of consciousness.

You become aware of yourself as the consciousness that makes all sense perception possible. You're simultaneously aware, right here and now, for example. You hear me, you're aware of that.

Peripherally, you're aware of the totality of wherever you are, perhaps, yes. You're aware of that. And then you become aware of yourself, not the historical person, not that self.

You become aware of that which is beyond all that. And that is a silent, very still, intensely alive presence. So, the sense perceptions were the portal into that dimension.

But then you go through that portal. And then even sense perceptions recede a bit and become a secondary phenomenon, still beautiful, but they become a secondary phenomenon. And your primary attention is on yourself, but not the person, the consciousness, the stillness, the presence.

And then you could even temporarily let go of sense perceptions. You can close your eyes, whatever it is. If, let's say, you were looking at a beautiful tree, or you were looking at a beautiful sky, sense it, and then become aware of the presence that is perceiving.

And then you can even let go of that which is being perceived, so that only the presence is left. And then you return to the world of perception. But you're still, in part, aware of that underlying presence.

Simultaneously, you're in the sense-perceived dimension, and you are in the transcendent dimension, which is the essence of all spirituality. It's nothing else. And once you sense that, the door is open.

You know where it is. You don't have to study all kinds of scriptures anymore, although you might enjoy reading and say, oh, yes, yes. But you don't need to figure anything out anymore about spirituality.

That's it. A big obstacle in spiritual people is trying to figure something out. One thing that's helpful to figure out is how the many ways in which you unconsciously stop yourself from that deeper realization, which is an unconscious process.

That is something you can perhaps not so much figure out, but you can give some attention to that, how many times the mind takes you away from that. And the egoic sense of self that is inseparable from the unobserved mind, how many times it takes you away from that. That's good to know.

But as far as the spiritual dimension is concerned itself, there's nothing to figure out as such. But sometimes pointers are helpful. These have been, when I speak about this, these are pointers.

When I say, be aware of this, look at it, feel it, then be aware of who or what it is that is aware, that is beyond all concepts. And that is the essence of the present moment. The present moment is consciousness.

And it's not only that. It's the essence of the present moment. It's the essence, it's consciousness.

It's the essence of who you are. And it's not exaggeration to say, and it's the essence of the entire universe. Because you're a microcosm of the entire universe.

The ultimate answers about the universe, you can find within yourself. And the ultimate answer is this. Many other insights can arise out of this deeper realization, because it can inspire the thinking mind that thinking can become helpful and you can have all kinds of insights.

So this is the only thing or no thing that is of absolute importance in what you might call conventionally your life. There's no such thing, but let's just call it that. Why is there no such thing?

Why do I say there's no such thing as your life? Why do I say you don't have a life? Because if you say my life, or if you say I have a life, you have created already a separation through conceptualization.

You've created my life. There must be two to say somebody says my. So there's one thing that you own or that you have.

Or you say to have life, to have a life, you have created a duality of somebody who has a life. And then you believe that you can lose your life. Because you've created a duality of me and the life that I have.

Now, if you think that you have a life, then you can also lose the life that you have, of course. But who are you separate from life? It's nothing.

So you create an entity that doesn't even exist. When you say I have a life, so there would be you and the life. But who are you without the life?

There is no life apart from you or separate from you. Which means there is no consciousness apart and separate from you. So the answer, of course, is the realization.

I am life. I don't have a life. I am consciousness.

I don't have consciousness. Now, this consciousness will not indefinitely manifest through this form. It only temporarily manifests through this particular form.

And then it withdraws from that particular form. At the moment it withdraws from that particular form, this particular form dissolves very quickly. A few days, a few weeks, depending on the outside temperature.

And of course, if your brain gets damaged, the consciousness can no longer fully or not at all express itself through this form. It withdraws. And it happens with some illnesses that affect the brain, like Alzheimer, that they cause damage in the brain cells.

So the brain loses its capacity to act as a transmitter or receiver of consciousness. And then it becomes, the consciousness manifests itself in a dysfunctional way. In the same way, if you damage a television set, then the picture will become distorted if you have a picture at all.

The consciousness, whatever, cannot fully express itself anymore. But it's there. But it begins to withdraw.

So in some people, it's seen as very tragic from an exclusively external point of view. When you see somebody close to you, it's beginning to lose their memory and they can no longer remember who they are. And it's happening to them.

It's very tragic when it happens from the, look at it from the outside. The process is a withdrawal. Consciousness, the vehicle, let's just call it that for a moment, is no longer capable of transmitting the consciousness.

So it withdraws gradually. So some people die before they die physically, not in a deeper spiritual sense. But it's a gradual withdrawal of the animating presence, the animating consciousness.

But that which makes every tragedy and every disaster and every death into something that, yes, it is tragic on one level, undoubtedly. But if you go deeper, then you realize the tragedy and the suffering existed on this dimension. It does not affect that which is beyond form.

The form is the physical and the psychological form of who you are. That is, of course, fleeting. It doesn't last long.

And it's also very precarious. All kinds of things can happen to it. It's fragile.

It's fleeting. It doesn't last. Impermanent, as the Buddha said.

That's undoubtedly true. And that in itself means that ultimately every life ends in some kind of tragedy because you die. And everybody around you thinks it's a terrible tragedy.

And sometimes the tragedy doesn't happen when you die. It starts years before you die. You lose certain faculties.

Things happen to the body. So there's the, from that point of view, I had a, I must have had some weird spiritual insight when I was 10. My father reminded me many years ago when he was still alive.

He said, do you remember what you said to me when you were 10 years old? I said, no. He said, you said to me, every life is tragic.

Where did that come from? I was 10 years old. I said, every life is tragic.

I must have seen something there. Then the insight disappeared again. From an exclusively, from our external, one-dimensional perspective, it is true.

Because no matter what you achieve, either it is going to leave you or you are going to leave it. No matter who you live with, companions, partners, either you leave them or they leave you. On this level, it's all, these are things that, this is the ephemeral nature of the world of form.

So if you attach yourself, meaning attaching yourself to any form means ultimately using it in your attempt to build up a sense, a lasting sense of identity, a sense of self. That to be attached means to use something or someone incorporated into your sense of self or who you are. That's the attachment.

And that leads to suffering because whatever you attach yourself to is subject to decay, to use a somewhat brutal term. Whatever you attach yourself to is subject to dissolution, to decay, loss. The Buddha, all the essence of the Buddha's teaching, Jesus talked about it too.

Jesus talked about, as I mentioned a few times before, it's the realm where moss and rust consume and thieves break in and steal. Moss and rust, moss and rust consume. Everything gets consumed by time, you could say, on this dimension.

So attaching yourself is seeking an identity through it one way or another. Now, to detach yourself without accessing the transcendent dimension means to deaden yourself. You say, okay, I'm not going to have a touch with any human being anymore because it's all leads to suffering.

I've had several relationships that didn't work and they made me suffer terribly. I've had enough of this. I'm not going to allow any human being to get close to me anymore.

And then I will be safe from that suffering. And so, yes, perhaps you will be safe from suffering, but there's a deeper suffering because you're deadening yourself to the aliveness of the world. So you cut yourself off from that.

So the detachment could be a detachment in a negative sense, in which case it would be much better to continue to be attached and suffer. At least you're still alive. And so the detachment happens naturally.

You don't have to really be concerned about, I've used in spiritual terminology, the importance of not attaching yourself. But I would say, there's no need to pay too much attention to that or to attempt not to attach yourself because probably you will not succeed. If your spiritual practice is, an important part of your spiritual practice is to get rid of attachments.

Wow, that's a very hard job. And if you get rid of one, but without knowing it, you attach yourself to something else. If you say, I want to get rid of attachment to material things, physical things, I don't want anything to do anymore with possessions, cars and things like that.

I've gone beyond that. I don't want any expensive things. I don't want to own anything.

I don't want to have a house. I don't want to. Okay, then you get a bicycle because you don't want to attach yourself to a car because you could see that your ego was involved in owning a car.

And then you're great. And you think you're free of attachment because you're no longer attached to cars. You have risen above cars and you're on your bicycle.

That's fine. It's better for the environment and probably more healthier for your body. But you may not realize that you may have then attached yourself to a mental image of you as somebody who has gone beyond attachments and actually superior to anyone still driving around in their BMWs.

Much superior to all these people. But you might not even say to yourself, but you feel very much superior to all that. So you exchange one for something else.

Eckhart Tolle Transforming Our Consciousness Through Adversity [260df1ce-7104-439a-b05c-ad2d0151ff5e]

Transforming our consciousness through adversity. In this episode, Eckhart reassures us that we should not panic when life's difficulties arise because they can become our greatest teachers. He says it's often hardship and suffering that play a critical role in the evolution of our consciousness.

Without it, we would not feel the urgency to change, nor would we learn to lead what Eckhart calls an awakened life.

Any kind of adversity in your life, whether it's personal, of a personal kind, of a collective kind, the only way for it not to become converted into suffering is for you to go deeper and realize who or what you are beyond the conditioned mind. And the strange thing is that adversity is absolutely essential for the evolution of consciousness. Although it seems to block what one could call perhaps the flowering of your life, it seems to, when you look at it superficially, all of the so-called bad things that happen to you that go wrong, they seem to block you from fully being yourself, fully expressing yourself, being able to do what you want to do.

And so this, what I earlier called sabotage, that is experienced as life or God, or whatever, trying to sabotage your life, that happens very frequently. But the strange paradox is if the human being did not experience adversity, the human would not evolve in consciousness. There would be no growing of consciousness.

And that's a very strange fact. But that does not only apply to humans, it applies to all life forms. Every life form experiences difficulties, adversity.

For every life form, life is not easy. Whether it's a blade of grass that's trying to come up, or a flower, or a fly, or a mosquito, or a fish, whatever it may be, every life form experiences obstacles. And the survival of every life form is precarious.

Many life forms survive only very briefly, and then they're gone, because other factors come in, and it's gone. A sapling grows out of the seed, or the acorns, the seed. The sapling grows.

The chances of a sapling becoming a huge tree are relatively small, because there's so many factors that could prevent the sapling from growing, and it would kill it. Lack of water, all kinds of insects could eat it. Somebody could step on it.

All kinds of things could happen. And yet, the world is full of trees, so many make it, and many others don't make it. But for every life form, life is a challenge.

If it were not, they would not evolve. So I'm sure the reason why certain animals can fly is there was a need for them, because if they had not been able to overcome gravity, they would not have survived. There must have been situations when there was an absolute need to overcome gravity.

Fish, they say, life developed first in the ocean before there was any life on land. Why would a fish that's comfortable in the water, why would a fish decide to suddenly start crawling on land? My theory is there was a huge expanse of water that was gradually, over a very long period of time, diminishing, and so the fish could no longer survive in the water.

They had to develop the capacity to crawl on land. Must have been enormous pressure behind that to force that life form to make that transition. When you look at a bird, the alertness of a bird is so wonderful to see.

I love watching birds where they sit on a branch. You look in their eyes, there is an absolute alertness. Why is the bird so alert?

Because it could not have survived, but it needed that, because if it had been a little bit less alert, the birds would have been completely eliminated because they had so many enemies. There are many other enemies who would only be too happy to eat a bird, and so they had to develop this extreme alertness, and they had to develop the ability to fly. It's miraculous.

To the ability to overcome gravity, just amazing. But why did they develop? Because adversity.

You had to. Let's go to human beings. How do you grow a stronger body?

You need to exercise. You need to go to a gym or whatever you do. But what does that mean?

Okay, here's a weight, and you have to lift that weight, or whatever you do, you're on a treadmill. You are making life difficult for your body. That's what exercise is.

You are creating adversity for your body. That's how the body initially experiences it. It's not the comfort zone of the body to lift a weight or to go on a treadmill.

And so what happens? The body experiences it as a form of adversity, as life is suddenly become difficult. But now what happens then?

What happens then is that the body is making a demand in order to cope with the arising difficulty. It's making a demand for more energy. The body says, I need more energy.

And out of that need, which is created by the adversity, suddenly you experience an influx of added energy in the body. And then actually it can become enjoyable to exercise the body. Why is it enjoyable?

Because suddenly there is an added energy that has come in. And this added energy then strengthens the body. The energy would never have come if there had not been a demand for energy, a necessity for energy, because life was getting difficult for the body.

So there's an evolutionary principle hiding, and just giving one example, there's an evolutionary principle hiding behind there that operates everywhere and on every level. Life has to become difficult in order for evolution to happen. Let's say a child at school is bullied.

So there's the child experiences suffering, experiences life is getting very difficult. Now, what does the child do? It could perhaps try to learn a martial art in order to be able to defeat the bully.

But on the other hand, this may not be possible. So it could happen then that the child becomes much more focused on learning, focusing mental attention. So the child becomes much better at school.

It compensates for the physical weakness by developing a stronger, more focused mind. And so then the child would not overcome the adversity on that level where it arose, but overcome, kind of transcend that and overcomes it on another level, this adversity. It forces you to demand more energy.

The energy can be, there's only one energy in the entire universe. It can be a different vibrational frequencies. It can be physical energy that increases as a response to adversity.

It can be the mental energy that increases as a response to adversity, or it can be consciousness that grows as a response to adversity. And that is how humans awaken, spiritually awaken. Their consciousness awakens also usually as a result of experiencing adversity in their lives.

There's a famous Latin saying that goes back 2000 years, per aspera ad astra, which translates as through adversity to the stars. Per aspera ad astra. And so there's a deep wisdom in that, the vital function of adversity in the development of human beings, and ultimately in the development of human consciousness.

So to awaken spiritually, in most cases, humans awaken spiritually through suffering, which is encountering adversity. And that's an amazing realization. There must have been some intuitive knowledge of that in going back thousands of years, because in many ancient cultures all over the world, they had initiation rituals that normally adolescents, sometimes also other age groups, but normally the adolescent, the transition from childhood to adulthood, all over the world, Africa, Australia, South America, Europe, everywhere, these ancient cultures developed for the adolescent, the one who goes from childhood to adulthood, develop initiation rituals. Now, there are countless forms of initiation rituals, but every initiation ritual was confronting this young person, often they were done for men, but sometimes also for women, confronting the young person with huge difficulty, a huge form of adversity, like to go into the forest and survive there with nothing for several days, confront a dangerous animal, and sometimes it would involve injury of the body, extreme forms of pain. There was an intuitive knowledge, knowing that it is important for a human to encounter adversity at this crucial age, so that he becomes a mature adult who has a certain amount of inner strength, rather than remaining a child into adulthood and behaving childishly, even as an adult, and not having been forced to go deeper by encountering the suffering. And it was a very useful, very extremely necessary function.

And after the initiation ritual, if the young person survived, he, sometimes she, was no longer the same person, was no longer a child. So in a way, what the initiation ritual did, it deepened, to some extent, your consciousness, not yet didn't lead to enlightenment or full realization, but there was a deeper human being there after the initiation ritual. There was a certain depth to you.

And this is the case in many humans who experience illness, some great loss in their lives, or some other extreme form of suffering. Very often, people have come to me and said, I understand what your teaching is now, but I only understood it after having gone through this suffering that I went through. Some say they became drug addicts, they became alcoholics, then they were led to Alcoholics Anonymous, and suddenly this huge difficulty in their lives suddenly was, it enabled them to go deeper.

And there was an awakening of deeper dimension of consciousness that is beyond the ego, because the ego, in the suffering, the ego experienced diminishment, sometimes even ego death. And that is why it is adversity so helpful. It's the ego ultimately gets eroded by adversity.

And there's a paradox here, because quite a few forms of adversity are created by the ego, whether it's a personal ego or the collective ego. For example, the collective ego creates the absurdity of huge warfare between nations. The warfare is collective, created by the unconsciousness of the collective ego.

And warfare leads to extreme forms of suffering for human beings. And quite a few humans through the suffering deepen, and the suffering diminishes their egoic sense of self. If it doesn't completely eliminate the ego, at least there is a diminishment of the ego, and then there's a certain depth to that human being.

The worst thing for any human being would be to be prevented from encountering adversity throughout childhood and adolescence, into adolescence. As some parents try to do that, they say you have to protect the child from all possible forms of adversity or difficulty or suffering. And this sometimes is the case with children born into a very wealthy family.

So they can have anything, and they just express a desire. And the parents say, yeah, yeah, you can have it. No, I want this.

Yeah, sure, okay, have it. We want you to be happy. So the child reaches the age of 17, never encountered any obstacle, any adversity.

And this adolescent now has an ego that is entitled, completely unaware of the needs of other humans, completely devoid of any form of empathy with other human beings, completely unable to understand other human beings, to feel other people's emotions. Totally self-centered, completely superficial, never having experienced any that actions have consequences. And so you have a very low-level functioning human being because this human being has never encountered adversity in their lives.

And then, paradoxically, because it's not possible for a human being to go through life without encountering adversity, if that happens, then the very fact that this human being has never encountered adversity becomes this human being's greatest form of adversity. He becomes his or her own worst enemy and creates many, whatever relationship they have ends in disaster. They make everybody unhappy around them.

Every relationship becomes an unhappy relationship. So here we come to, when I was contemplating adversity yesterday, I suddenly thought of, I want to read to you, really, it encapsulates it all. In the Bible, there's a parable by Jesus which goes like this, which really is about the role of adversity and how it can be experienced in one way or another way.

So Jesus says, everyone who listens to these words of mine and does them, that's his teaching, it's a teaching about finding the kingdom of heaven, which is a dimension of consciousness that is within you. Everyone who listens to these words of mine and does them will be like a man building a house who dug deep and laid the foundation on the rock. The rain fell, the floods came, and the wind blew and beat against the house.

But it did not collapse. It had been set solidly on rock. And everyone who listens to these words of mine but does not do them will be like a fool who built his house on sand.

The rain fell, the floods came, and the wind blew and beat against the house. And it collapsed and was completely ruined. So the house is, you are the house.

It's your life. The key words are here, listening to his teachings and practice. Seek the kingdom of heaven that is within you, which means the dimension of consciousness that is beyond the mind, that is the spacious awareness.

This man who builds a house, he digs deep. Those are perhaps the most important words in this parable. He digs deep until he finds the rock, the foundation.

He goes within in order to find that which is beyond the mind in him, in order to find the consciousness that underlies the mind. So digging deep is going deep within. You find that dimension that I sometimes call the transcendent dimension in you, and then your life is rooted in the transcendent dimension, which in this parable is compared to the, it's the rock.

It's rooted there. Then you lead your life. Then adversity comes as it inevitably will.

And that's symbolized by saying, and the rain fell, the floods came, and the wind blew and beat against the house. Nobody escapes that. Nobody escapes in whatever form, it will come if it's not here already.

The adversity, the rain, the wind, it beats against the house, the floods come. And mostly not just once in your life, they come a few times in your life. And the one who built his house on the sand had no inner depths.

The house was built on the sand. So when the adversity comes, total devastation, it devastates you. And this is what it says here in the fool built his house on sand, it collapsed and was completely ruined, devastated by adversity because it lacking the depths.

You haven't found the transcendent dimension within yourself. And this is what all spiritual teachings are just about that. Find the transcendent dimension within yourself.

And then the rains and the floods come, but they won't devastate you. There's something in you that is beyond that. Yes, these things happen, but there's something deeper in you that gives you a permanent sense of peace and rootedness, even in the midst of turmoil, when turmoil is on the outside.

It's sometimes the case that even if you don't have it yet, it sometimes happens, often happens that when turmoil happens in your life, it eventually drives you deeper to that dimension because you have to go there because you can't stand it anymore. You can't take the suffering anymore. You have to go deeper, otherwise you just, you might kill yourself or you'd be completely unhappy for the rest of your life or complain about how unfair life is and how things should, this should not be happening to you.

So find that rock and so that your life is rooted there. And where is it? Well, it's in the present moment by going deeply into the present moment.

I already pointed out earlier that there's in the space of this present moment, a problem cannot survive. Your sense of self, the egoic sense of self, the narrative of me and my problems that you'd have to think about, what's going to happen to me or what did happen, also doesn't really survive in the present. In the present moment, what survives in the present moment is your awareness, your consciousness.

The personality or the person recedes. Yes, of course, you remember who you are and if you have to remember your past and you can make plans for the future, but the personality or the person recedes and there's something else that's much more vital than the person. The person couldn't exist without it, is not separate from it.

It's the very consciousness that gives rise that enables the person to be, but is far beyond who you are as a person. It's consciousness itself. But the simple fact of becoming, if you become conscious of the present moment here, you also become conscious that you are conscious in this present moment.

It sounds a little weird, but you can sense if you don't remember your past or think about the future, what's left of you? What's left of you when you don't remember your past? And your future, right now the future is unimportant.

There's only this. Who are you without remembering your past? What's left of you?

In fact, what's left of you when you're not thinking really, you're just present. What's left of you is the presence. You can't describe it.

It's a sense of beingness, a sense of aliveness, a sense of I am, but not this or that, I just, I am. This being is a deeper dimension of who you are. This being is a transcendent you, that which connects you to the totality of all life, of all, of consciousness.

That is the rock described in the parable. That's the foundation for your life. So when you are rooted there, then the, whatever it may be, the pandemic, the whatever, any form of illness, the adversity, the adversity, yes, they still arise, but they're not transformed into these extreme suffering anymore.

There's a place, a deeper place in you where you're free of suffering. And there may be physical pain or physical discomfort. Yes, that can still exist, but you're rooted in the transcendent dimension.

That's liberation. And that means, yes, challenges will still arise, but your state of consciousness is very important. What is the state of consciousness with which you meet any arising challenge?

That's very important in determining how the challenge is experienced by you, or the adversity, the challenge, how you experience any arising challenge, whether it's financial loss or loss of a loved one or illness or financial ruin, collective pandemic. The consciousness with which you confront or meet this, with which you experience whatever it is, determines what it is for you. And the strange thing is, if you are present when challenges come, you're conscious that, and part of that is acceptance of this, whatever is in the present moment, then you do not amplify the adversity or the challenge.

If you are reactive, you amplify it and it gets even worse. You can see that easily when you're confronted with a difficult person, because in many cases, the challenge or the adversity in your life is a difficult human. That's for many people to encounter.

They experience life as difficult because human beings are difficult. And they say, for many people, most of their difficulties are other humans. Now, if you are reactive, a difficult human is usually an unconscious human.

They don't know what they're doing. They don't know that they're creating suffering for themselves and others. They just can't help it because they're in the grip of certain forms of mental emotional conditioning, which is their ego.

So they can't help it. They don't know. But if you react against it, you amplify the unconsciousness and the difficult person becomes even more difficult.

And then the difficult person triggers your own unconsciousness. And then you have a huge situation. It didn't have to be, but it blew up into a huge confrontation.

Drama didn't have to be, but your reaction amplified the unconsciousness. And that can even happen when you experience an illness. If it leads to an extreme reaction of fear or even the feeling that you need to fight the illness.

When you fight something, you usually make it stronger. You give it added energy. Illness is best transcended by not developing the idea that you are suffering from an illness, but just be with whatever it is you're experiencing at this moment.

Discomfort, maybe pain, maybe weakness, maybe in whatever form you experience this, this is what is. And then you come to a point of acceptance of the is-ness of this moment. This is what I'm experiencing.

Rather than having this mental idea of your identity becomes the illness and then you're fighting yourself. By accepting this moment, you already begin to touch the deeper dimension of consciousness in you. By fighting this moment, you get trapped in the form that this moment takes.

By accepting this moment, you connect with the transcendent dimension. It opens up. The transcendent dimension opens up by that acceptance.

And very often healing happens by having access to this transcendent dimension in you. Then, ah. So when accepting an illness does not mean accepting the idea that you are ill, that you're an ill person.

It only means accept whatever symptoms you feel at this moment. It's important to not make sickness into an enemy and also not make sickness into your identity. Both are illusions.

So when there is sickness, do not fight against it. Accept whatever you feel in the body at the present time, in the present moment. Do not accept the idea of sickness in your mind don't focus on it.

Yes, seek help, whatever help is required, medical help, but do not focus on the mental concept of sickness and then begin to fight that. A very powerful healing is initiated when you accept whatever you experience within you at this moment. Surrender to what is.

And in that act of surrender or acceptance, something deeper opens up, which is the unconditioned consciousness, the essence of who you are. When you realize your essence identity as consciousness, then the fear of death begins to dissolve because you're able to sense that in you, which is beyond death. It in Buddhism is sometimes called Amaravati, which translates as the deathless realm.

And Jesus speaks of it and calls it eternal life. They both point to the same reality, which is a dimension of consciousness within you that opens up when you accept this moment as it is.

Eckhart Tolle Transforming Our Suffering into Awakening [965f2f51-dff8-40a4-a5df-2375c18ac16b]

Transforming suffering into awakening. In this episode, Eckhart talks with a live audience about the paradox of suffering and awakening. He says the ego, in its attempt to strengthen itself, creates distress and eventually brings about its destruction.

For many, this cycle can be the catalyst to awaken. If we had not suffered, we would not find transformation. Eckhart says the paradox is a good thing.

People have told me that they were given a book like Power of Now or New Earth by a friend or relative ten years ago and they looked at it and said, what is that stuff? Who writes this thing? And they put it on the shelf and then they got on with their lives and then they suffered a bit more.

They had another failed marriage and then they lost their job and then the stock market crashed and then they developed an illness and suddenly the pressure of suffering created a crack in the shell of ego. It became so much and then a day came when suddenly they were, oh god, and they picked up the book again and then they were, oh my god, now I understand it. That is the first spiritual awakening.

It would not have happened if this human had not gone through this period of intense suffering. A lot of it may have been and probably was self-created by the ego. The dreadful marriage, the continuous fighting in their job, at their workplace, continuous negative states towards other humans and so on.

All the suffering that generates whatever they experience as their reality, self-created to a large extent, and then an illness. Now you could say maybe the illness was not self-created. Maybe there is a correlation between their state of consciousness and the illness, which is sometimes the case.

It may not be every illness. But sometimes, of course, if you live in continuous negativity, in continuous stressful negativity, even mainstream medicine recognizes that stress and negativity is an important factor in the arising of illness. So the suffering is self-created.

So it's a little paradox here. The ego, in its attempt to survive and strengthen itself and enhance itself, creates suffering. That is the unobserved mind.

That is the ego. But the suffering that the ego creates eventually leads to the destruction of the ego. This is almost a little paradox.

So that's a good thing. So you could say that ultimately, and seen from a higher perspective, the fact that humans have to go through the suffering is actually part of the whole, which is ultimately benevolent. But when you look at it from only a lower perspective, it certainly does not look benevolent.

When you look at it from a higher perspective, you see that there is a reason why things happen. I can say that, and many of you know that. You don't have to believe in that.

Many of you can verify what I'm saying by reference to your own life. If you had not gone through the suffering that you have gone through, you would not be here. There may be a few advanced souls here who may be 20 years old only, or 18, or 25, and you're such advanced souls that you have not experienced significant suffering, and nevertheless, you're here.

Now, that can have two reasons. Well, maybe more than two. I can only see two at the moment.

That can have two reasons. Either you've already gone through intense suffering in many other lifetimes, you don't need it anymore, or you have some ego image of yourself as a very advanced spiritual being, and therefore, you would like to add it to your self-image. And you can then post to the world that you are now attending a spiritual conference.

Look at me, I'm here. I'm not implying that everybody who has mentioned in their Facebook posts or tweets is necessarily a reflection of that stage. It might just be an innocent fact.

Why not mention the fact that you had a conference? If there's no self-identification with it, it's perfectly fine. But the question is, is there a self-enhancement through it?

Does the conceptual image that you have and want to present to the world enhanced by that? Self-observation is vital because the new consciousness arises only if the individual recognizes that you can only change the world by changing the state of human consciousness. That's why all the communists went wrong, all the people who want to bring in a new government go wrong.

All these things will do nothing if there's not a shift in consciousness. You will only recreate the same thing again and again and again. And that change in consciousness must, there's only one place where it can happen, and that's in you.

And that implies that you practice self-observation. That is an essential part of the change in consciousness. To practice self-observation implies that there is enough presence or awareness in you from where you can self-observe.

And in almost all of you there is. Maybe not all the time, but there is enough to have brought you here. And there's quite a bit.

So is there enough presence in you so that you can self-observe your own motivations, your own thought structures? What are the habitual thoughts that I think? So that you are not drawn continuously into every thought that comes and follow it where it wants to take you.

One little thought comes in about your life, oh, and then another thought and you follow it, oh, oh no. And then before you know it, more thoughts come and then other conflicting thoughts and no, no, that's not how it is. Yes, it is.

No. I can't take anymore. And you believe in that thought too, that you can't take anymore.

So the ability to observe non-judgmentally what goes on inside you. There is awareness. There needs to be awareness.

So that is self-knowledge. Self-knowledge means it's really not so much on knowing on a conceptual level what happened to you in the past and trying to understand the past, the story of me. I need to investigate the story of me.

There is a place for that in certain cases. You may want to understand what happened, why you acted or what your parents did to you and come to an understanding, your limited understanding of that. But ultimately the arising of the new consciousness is not a better conceptual understanding of anything.

It's not a better conceptual understanding of who you are. It goes beyond any concept. Awareness in itself does not necessarily imply immediately that you understand more about yourself.

In fact, as you become more aware in yourself, the need to understand my life and work it out diminishes. So the compulsion to also to understand every other human being that you meet immediately formulate certain judgments and conclusions about that other human being and the urge to immediately form judgments and conclusions about any situation that you encounter and then this is how it is. And then you have a narrative that develops in the mind and then you're telling yourself the narrative about who you are, who they are and how it all is.

You've all met people like that. And once you were like that yourself and perhaps still occasionally that that comes back and you go, it's good to act it out a bit because then you can recognize it. That's not presence, that's absence.

It's called absence. The opposite of presence of course is absence. That means you are not there.

You are not there. All that's there pretending to be you is the egoic mind, the conceptual mind. And the mind says, it's me and my life.

So what arises then is the awareness, which means as it arises, it seems at first that you know less than before because you no longer compulsively immediately interpret everything conceptually, every human being you encounter and your own life. The compulsion to judge continuously isn't there. And so it seems at first and the egoic mind may come in and say, oh, wait a minute.

You don't know what's going on anymore if you don't judge it. Who knows who that person is? If you don't judge it, he could be your enemy.

He could be out to deceive you. Better be careful. You need to judge.

But then, no. And so I understood when I was reading Plato's works, as you may know, I don't know how many people these days read Plato, but he reports in his works what Socrates taught. How faithfully he recorded what Socrates taught, we don't know.

But one, certain things seem to be, because Socrates never wrote anything, certain things, however, seem genuine. And there's especially one statement that Socrates made that's often repeated by Plato. And that is this.

When somebody went to the Oracle at Delphi in ancient Greece, and the Oracle said, who is the wisest man on the planet or in the world? The Oracle said, Socrates is the wisest. Okay, they heard this and they went to Athens where Socrates was and said, oh, listen, the Oracle at Delphi said you are the wisest all men.

Why is that? And Socrates said, I am the wisest because I'm the only one who knows that he knows nothing. I'm the only one who knows that he knows nothing.

On another occasion he said, I am wise because I know that I know nothing. And then people later, they read it over the centuries and most people interpret it as kind of a feigned modesty. And they say, of course he knows what does it, he knows a lot, but he just says it.

It's a feigned modesty. In other words, it's ego. But that's not how it is.

It describes a state of consciousness out of which his enormously creative teaching, his deep insights arose. It describes the very foundation of the state of what ultimately is the state of spacious awareness or presence. And that state is one of actually cessation of mind activity without loss of consciousness.

So every of the so-called dialogues of Socrates, and the way it's reported by Plato is not absolutely correct because I know exactly, maybe I was there, I don't know, but I know how Socrates always started. He started his Socratic dialogues with just not knowing.

And then he begins to ask questions and through questions the knowing gradually arises.

He does not start with already accumulated knowledge. So it starts from the, he was comfortable with a state of not knowing. In other words, he was rooted in the state of pure awareness.

In your pure awareness conceptually, of course you don't know anything when, when your mind stops. For example, now, if I stop speaking now, you're still here too. We can do it together.

I stopped speaking for a few seconds and as I stopped speaking, do you need to fill that space between me stopping to speak and starting to speak again? Do you need to fill that space with thought? Or are you able to simply be present in that space?

In other words, are you able to just simply be, don't suppress thought. It doesn't work. You can't hold your breath and say, I must not think that might work, but, but then thinking will come even up or even more strongly once you start breathing again.

So it's not that you can't hold down thought. It's a pure shift into a more alert state of consciousness. Alert.

Alert means, okay, now acting out alertness. I'm not just acting it out. When I look at you in this weird way, I'm not thinking.

And when you look at me looking at you in this weird way, you also could experiment with that and see whether as I stop speaking now for 10 seconds, you can just be in that space of pure awareness where you take in sense perceptions against the background of awareness. And you might notice that in that space, you don't know anything. You don't even know your name because your name is a thought.

You don't know anything in that space. And yet you are there, conscious, present without any movement in the mind. That's presence.

That was Socrates state. When he said, I know that I don't know anything because in that state, you know that you don't know anything and there are no words in it. Now don't confuse that, which is a state of rising above thinking.

Don't confuse that with falling below thinking, which can be nice too. If you are tortured on a daily and nightly basis by your mind to fall below thinking can be a relief, but that's not why we are here. Otherwise I would be offering you all kinds of substances to help you fall below thinking.

You can drink and smoke and go, ah, ah, feel so good. Don't have to think anymore. Oh, a bit more of that and a bit more of that.

So that's where eventually that takes you. That's a relief. You can experience the same relief when you get tired at night.

There's a moment when you're still conscious, but when you're too tired to think about your problems. So you're not being tortured by your mind as it usually tortures you for most of the day. You're not tortured by your mind and the approach of sleep feels delicious and you are not thinking, I wish I could stay here is the last thought that you have.

Oh, and then you go off and then you wake up in the morning and your eyes open and for a few seconds you go 10 seconds maybe 20 and then the machinery of the mind starts creaking. What time is it? What?

What's my first appointment today? Oh no, no, I have to deal with that. Oh God.

And then I have to meet that obnoxious person at 11 and there you are gone. There was a moment of presence and perhaps in that moment when you woke up, you had risen above thought. When you went to sleep, you were falling below thought.

When you woke up perhaps for 10 seconds, you were on a level above thought and that is a level where you look at the world with that bright eyes and pure innocent perception and everything is alive. You can sense the aliveness in everything and the world is good at this moment and you have no problems. And then that's present moment.

Awareness is present moment. Awareness is always implied. When we use the term awareness, present moment is implied because you can only be aware in the present moment.

Awareness is presence and then you lose the present moment. You lose awareness because your consciousness is being absorbed by thinking. It sucks up all your consciousness like some parasite, psychic parasite living inside you that sucks up all.

I need more. I need to think more. And then you have this monstrous thing in your head and you think it's you and it talks all the time.

It's not necessarily out aloud. It talks in here and you can have discussions in here too and you identified with it. The unconscious state, lack of awareness, complete absence.

You are not there. So the revolutionary incredible thing that is the essence of the new consciousness that arises a new evolutionary stage for humanity, which we are on the way towards it. Even if just to come back to what I said earlier, I might've lost the thread.

Even if we have to go through another episode of intense self created suffering on a huge scale, which is not impossible. Even if humanity has to go through that, the awakening consciousness is not lost. It will then, when humanity regenerates, it will quickly arise again.

The same consciousness that's arising in you now and bring about the collective awakening. Are we going to experience another dark age? Maybe.

But what's a thousand years? Not much. Even 2000 years, not that much.

So I'm very optimistic. Consciousness will prevail because conscience is the purpose of the universe. It, the universe is, there's an impulse, an evolutionary impulse towards consciousness in the universe.

So all is well and now it's up to you. Now we come to the really what really matters to change the world. We've already seen it cannot be done unless there is that shift in consciousness in the individual human.

And that begins with you and it takes place every moment of your life and you use every opportunity and whatever arises in your life as part of that. And sometimes you forget, that's fine. Sometimes you get taken over again by the mind completely.

The ego arises again, that's fine. And then you wake up again. So for many of you, it's you, you wake up and you fall to sleep periodically.

It's the new, you're present. And then the old, you're absent. And then you wake up again.

And that's fine. That's part of the, for most people, that is part of the awakening process. And gradually the periods of time when you're awake, present lengthens, you're awake for longer than before.

And the ability challenges and other unconscious humans, to pull you into unconsciousness decreases. Always there are two ways. Well, maybe more than two, let's just say two.

There are two ways of finding out whether you are making progress on the spiritual paths, because it might be interesting to know because you could be deluding yourself. But there are two ways of finding out. One is how do you deal with challenges?

How do you deal with difficult people and situations that arise on a small scale every day on a larger scale? Occasionally, how do you, do they pull you into reactivity and ego? How do you meet the challenges of life?

How do you meet a difficult person or difficult situation? Do they pull you into unconsciousness into upset negativity? There's a line in the course in miracles that says, I'm never upset for the reason I think.

So when you're upset because you had stuck in a traffic jam, that's not the real reason why you're upset. You're upset because you're disconnected from yourself. You're upset because you're only up in your mind.

You're disconnected from the essence of who you are, which is awareness, which is presence. If you were connected with who you are and your essence, you would not be upset in a traffic jam. And if you were deeply connected with the essence of who you are, you would not be upset.

If you got home and you saw your house had collapsed, Oh, the house is gone. No, that would be a big test. If you pass that and now that life is great because life will not leave you alone.

You might've noticed when you think you have removed, you've solved the problems here. Another one crops up there. And then you deal with that.

And while you deal with that, another thing collapses here. And then why can't I ever, why can't things not always work? The thing, things should work all the time.

To some extent, you can improve your life. Of course, through changing your state of consciousness to living more positively through practicing gratitude, which brings you into the present moment, acknowledgement of beauty. And that will change your life.

There's enormous amount you can do and it works. But even then your life will continue to challenge you because life will say he or she hasn't gone deep enough yet. There needs to be more intense presence.

So I'll give him or her another challenge. And then the moment comes when you might say, I can't take anymore. Why don't you leave me alone?

Whether you call it life or God doesn't matter. God, you've gone too far this time. I can't take anymore.

And of course I can't take him or her is in a, is a thought in your head. And if you believe in it, it feels very bad. And if you don't believe in it, all it is, it's a noise in your head, which says, I can't take anymore.

And of course it's not true. You can take a lot more in the right way. If you're conscious.

So how do you respond to challenges? Observe yourself. What situations cause upset, big or small?

And that's a reflection of your state of consciousness. Are you able to stay present in certain situations? And if you notice that certain situations in the past that caused you to be upset or negative reactions or angry or despondent or whatever, no longer cause you to be in that state.

That is progress on the spiritual path. If you go to Thanksgiving dinner this year and the remarks made by your relatives, parents, uncles, aunts, and so on about politics or about you, no longer upset you as they did for the past 20 years. The same thing they say in here.

Why do they say that? And suddenly you allow them to say whatever they say. It's fine.

That's where they are at. That's fine. What's wrong.

And when your parents can criticize you because you're not living your life that they imagined that you should be living, you no longer go, why can't you understand me? And you realize it matters not at all whether they understand you or not. Why not allow them to be as they are and you should stay present.

That's progress on the spiritual path. How do you deal with challenges and challenges will continue to come. That's the weird thing.

And that's a wonderful thing. Because if life did not give you challenges, you would not evolve. And that not only applies to humans, it applies to every life form on the planet.

Life is challenging for every plant and every tree and every animal on the planet. There's no doubt about that. It presents challenges for every species on the planet.

And that is how consciousness grows through being faced with challenges. And once you see that, you might recognize it in a movie. You wouldn't want to go to see a watch a movie where the characters are not challenged by life.

In other words, let's say you go to a cinema and the movie begins and nothing goes wrong. And then you would say after 15 minutes, this is not an interesting movie. There's nothing going wrong.

Almost any movie, something needs to go wrong. Otherwise there is no movie. Because it's only if things go wrong, the character gets challenged and then something happens.

Either the challenge is resolved on an external level, which is a not so good movie, which means the bad guy is finally eliminated or put away. Or if the challenge is, if it's a good movie, the challenge with which the characters are faced brings about a change in the character. And in a very good movie, then there are not many of those, but some the character becomes more conscious through the challenges.

And then you might even want to see that movie again and again and again. It no longer depends. You already know what's going to happen, but that's secondary.

You just enjoy the process of watching somebody awaken. And as you watch somebody awaken, you somehow participate in that awakening. And it could even be a funny movie in addition to that.

One of my favorite movies, I'm sure most of you know it, Groundhog Day. And I've watched that many times. And that shows somebody deeply unconscious and suffering and suffering and suffering is stuck in the same day again and again and again.

And he can't get out. This is of course, the state of the egoic state. And then until finally something changes in him.

Finally comes to acceptance and surrender and becomes helpful by accepting and surrendering what is becomes helpful to other people. And then in the end, the same day, which is forced to repeat again and again, and he stuck in a place that he hates in a town that he hates doing what he hates, seeing people that he hates. And, and finally he can't stand the suffering anymore.

And then he's not hating anymore. He just accepts. And then suddenly experiences the same day differently.

He begins to awaken. And in the end of the movie, he says, Oh, this place is so nice. Let's stay here.

And then he's free to go. So that kind of more that you want to watch many times because that is a rare thing. It shows the unconsciousness and then how a character by facing challenges, ultimately self created.

And then there's a deepening that happens and that's reflective of life. You would not want to see a movie when nothing goes wrong, but when things go wrong in your own life, implicitly you think this should not be happening. The movie of my life should be such that nothing goes wrong.

I wanted to be totally boring. So people complain when, when what they love to watch in movies, when it happens to them, they complain and think this shouldn't be happening to me. So I'm talking about the challenges that are an inevitable part of your daily existence.

And even as you awaken, you get challenged by the gravitational pull of the unconsciousness within yourself, but also in the form of other people around you. And situations that you encounter, your workplace, family members, relatives, friends, you are challenged by the unconsciousness of the world that you inhabit. And that's how it's meant to be.

Now, you might develop a theory that if only the conditions in my life were more suited for my spiritual growth, all would be well. And then if you could devise a list of things that you need in order to be able to facilitate your spiritual growth, you would say, okay, I have enough money to go to the most exquisite spa places in the world where I will have massages two or three times a day, live in absolute bliss. They're the most pure food imaginable.

My needs are being met so that I can meditate. If I want to, I can exercise my body, clean, pure air, not being disturbed by noises and things around me. Everything will be so beautiful.

I can dedicate myself totally to my, to, to being present. And if that became a reality for a while, you would be happy. And then you, after a while, you would find yourself, you would find your level of presence decreasing after a while.

It can be nice as an interlude in your life for a week. It might be great. It's withdrawal and so on can be great.

But if it's a, if you think that that will facilitate your spiritual growth, the absence of challenges will facilitate your spiritual growth. You would be very much mistaken. You would eventually find yourself, your level of presence decreasing because it is not needed.

Things are going too well. There's no challenge. Everybody's so nice.

Of course they're nice because you pay them. If you lived with them, they wouldn't be nice, but that's, so you have enough money to pay all the people around you so that they can be nice to you. And you're not being challenged by these obnoxious humans anymore.

And it would not ultimately facilitate your spiritual growth. And you may reach a moment after spending two years in this wonderful spa of longing to get back to your challenging life. If you even have enough consciousness, even too long for something at that point.

So the, what I'm really saying is whatever arises in your life is your practice. It is the practice designed for you. It is your spiritual paths and particularly the challenges.

So it's important to see that the importance of challenges, difficulties, so-called problems in the evolution, in your evolutionary paths, the absolute importance of that. So yet it's important to see it so that in your mind, you no longer have the implicit assumption that these things should not be happening. If they are happening, it does not mean that they should not be happening.

Only the mind can formulate that belief that something that is happening should not be happening. The entire history of the universe, since everything is interconnected, the entire history of the universe, since the big bang, if there was a big bang, the entire history of the universe has conspired to bring about the form that this moment takes for you. It's all connected.

It comes out of this vastness of the universe, the vastness that we call past, but it's not really past. It's interconnected. You cannot separate one event and say this event should not be happening, but the universe has brought it forth.

There is an inevitability in anything that happens in the present moment. If you cannot change, if it looks bad or undesirable, the quickest way to dissolve it is by coming into an alignment with the present moment. So you don't fight it.

And this is how the state of presence arises through coming into alignment with the present moment.

Watch your mind. In this podcast, Eckhart discusses the path to awakening. He encourages listeners to detach from the mind instead of being the mind.

He says most of us get so enmeshed in our thinking, we mistake it for reality. He also believes the mind tells us we need a long list of criteria to advance spiritually. But Eckhart says enlightenment is not something we attain in the future.

In truth, full consciousness is closer than we think. We can break through our thinking to awaken right here, right now.

So welcome. I'm glad you made it. And also welcome to all of you, one could say, let's put it very simply, while you're here and hopefully after you leave also, the greatest advice I could give you is watch your mind, which means be aware of your mind instead of being your mind.

Be the awareness behind the mind. And in certain Buddhist monasteries that I visited a long, long, long time ago, the monks use that expression, watch your mind, when they say to another monk, and what it really means there is shut up. But they're too polite to say it.

And of course, watch your mind is a great way of saying it. But here you, of course, instead of saying it to other people here, you might be tempted, who knows, use it as a signpost, an inner signpost. So be there as the silent presence.

And that's already the entire secret, which isn't really a secret, but somehow it still is. To be aware, awareness or presence is a space of just being conscious. Not at some future point, when we've gone through the 12 or 25 steps, or many steps there may be to full consciousness, but right here and now.

Very important. Don't wait to achieve some kind of state. Don't wait to achieve liberation or enlightenment, or some kind of fireworks, or some kind of transcendent experience, which you may have, but that passes too.

The transcendent experience has a beginning and an end. And then you're backed with the, oh, I had such a great experience last year. I want to get back to that.

How do I get back, back to that? Don't try to get back because that's not the way, that's the wrong direction. And don't try to get forward to the expectation of an experience.

One of the great obstacles, especially for those of you who could be considered, or who consider themselves to be spiritual seekers, which this may actually have become part of your identity, because you've attended many talks, retreats, you've been, you've visited the ashrams in India, and the monasteries, and you're extremely knowledgeable, but you are seeking for that high. Am I going to make it in this lifetime? And then you go to some Buddhist or other teachers, and then somebody may say, you need about 15 more lifetimes.

Okay, well, okay, I can live with that. No, you can't. These are all concepts in the mind.

So letting go of any expectation of achieving a particular state, but becoming completely aligned with whatever is here now, whatever is in this moment, and the transcendent depths of this moment, then there's nothing to seek anymore. And your search ends the moment your mind ceases, and some stillness arises. And you know it's there without naming it.

That's the end of the search. Now, you may adopt the search again when the stillness gets covered up again by mental noise, because you have in your mind, there may be the, for some of you, the seeker identity, and that identity wants to carry on seeking. And that identity will tell you after a moment of stillness that that wasn't enough, it wasn't the fireworks, but it is enough, but at this deepens the state.

Now, this is a little paradox because the spiritual life is full of paradoxes and spiritual discourse. The timeless state of consciousness, which is presence, deepens. Now, you can see the slight paradox in that.

So over time, the timeless state of consciousness deepens. It manifests more and more fully through you, and yet it's timeless. So we are here to live this, and this is a protected environment, not without challenges.

Even here, this beautiful place, it's almost a kind of ashram. Even here, some challenges may arise because life is like that. It does that to you.

And some of you on your journey here and arriving here may already have experienced a few challenges. How did you respond to the challenges? Hmm.

It doesn't matter how you responded if you were not present and the challenge made you reactive and mentally, emotionally reactive movement. So that's fine. If you realize it now, it's never too late.

Oh, that was that. I was unconscious. Isn't that interesting?

But you can see it now, so you must be conscious now and then wait for the next challenge. You may have arrived in your room and it was very small and like a monastic cell, and mentally, you compared it to wherever you were on your vacation. It's not the Ritz-Carlton, obviously, but a monastic cell is a lovely place for surrender.

And realizing that very little is needed for presence to arise, it's much more likely to arise when things are taken away from you rather than when things are added to you. The mind doesn't know that. The mind thinks something needs to be added to you in order to awaken an added experience, an added realization, an added, whatever it may be, a vision, angels, whatever.

So the mind expects to be added, by adding something, then I will arrive. Adding a future moment. So it expects that, but the realization is that nothing needs to be added for awakening.

This is not to say that on the level of your personality, the historical person, there are not things for you still, unless you are 95, there are not still things for you to do. There may be interesting things for you to add to who you are as a person. You can add new experiences.

You can travel. You can learn something new, a language, take up a musical instrument, read books, build up a business, whatever it is. Adding, on that level, there's nothing wrong with adding things to you.

And on that level of the personality, you're never really complete. There's always more that you could do. And if you pursue one particular avenue, that excludes many others.

You could add things by becoming a great sports person if you're young enough. So you train hard and you enjoy it. Of course, that excludes, and it's unlikely that you will develop into an intellectual because you don't have the time to read the books.

But if you read the books, then that excludes that you're not physically active for six hours a day. So you choose this particular avenue and you're never complete. There's always more you can do.

And life sometimes demands that you do certain things. It gives you a challenge or you choose a challenge. It's usually better to choose a challenge on the level of a personality, on the level of the person.

The person has its own life and they choose something, have a goal, I want to do this, that or the other, without the expectation that this goal, once you achieve it, will lead you, take you to ultimate satisfaction. It can't do that. Or will reveal to you who you really are, give you your true identity.

So when you're looking in this level of the person, when you're looking to the things of this world through achieving this, that or the other, that this will give you some very satisfying sense of identity, of being you, the sense of having arrived. Because almost everybody who is still trapped in ego has a sense of something that should happen hasn't happened yet in my life. There's something missing.

So this can be very strong in the forefront of your mind or it can be in the background, the sense of lack, the sense of something is not quite right here, but you don't know what it is. You're not at ease in the world. There's an underlying sense of unease.

And for some people, the underlying sense of unease is so all pervasive that they don't even know it because since early, even childhood, it already started. And so they don't know anything else. There's always this underlying sense of unease, this underlying sense of either there's something not right, I'm not right, or something that should be happening hasn't happened yet.

Or even something that did happen should not have happened. Whatever it may be in whatever way you interpret that underlying feeling of unease, but if you're completely trapped in ego, it will be there. Sometimes it may surface very strongly, in which case you become very anxious or very sad or very depressed, or you can manifest in many ways.

You can even get angry, can be part of that. And if it's been there for many years, you don't even know it. It's unlikely that this is the case with anybody that's here, present here, because you would never come here if there hadn't been something that makes you aware, at least, that there is a sense of unease in you.

And you know that you begin to suspect that something else is possible, that there is another way of being in this world. There are still many millions, though, who don't know that. They live with constant unease.

Sometimes it manifests as fear, it can manifest as anxiety, or just a more obscure sense of something not quite right. And another way it manifests is that people see themselves as a problem. So your identity is basically, you're a problem to yourself.

You consider yourself a problem that needs to be solved. And then, of course, you go to a psycho something, and says, please solve the problem of me. I am a problem to myself.

And you are, you are a problem to yourself. It would be a great thing to realize that you're a problem. But if you're really deeply immersed in that, you don't even know that.

If you're really deeply immersed in that pattern, it's always the others who are the problem. So if you're very unconscious, you wouldn't even say, I'm a problem to myself. No, it's he, she, they, they are the problem, not me.

And so perhaps you wouldn't even seek a psychotherapist, because if you seek a psychotherapist, at least there is an admission that change is possible, and change is needed. But there are still millions who don't even know that the inner change is possible and needed. It's all out there.

And these people are very active online. You might have noticed. Because that's an ideal forum for them to externalize their inner mental state.

And a lot of what goes on there is admittedly, I don't know if one can still use that word or whether it has become politically incorrect, but I'll use it anyway. A lot of what goes on there is actually crazy. I think if it's not politically correct yet, it soon will be.

So the, you know how a humming sound that something is like a refrigerator or some noise in the room is going on and on. You no longer know it's there in the background, but when it stops, then you suddenly know, oh, oh, it feels so good. There was this constant humming sound in the background.

I didn't even know it anymore. I didn't know it. And so for some people, the first awakening is to become aware of the humming, so to speak, their mind, the constant chatter, the constant dialogues and monologues that make life so hard.

And so you become aware suddenly, oh, for many humans, that's a moment of awakening. What is my mind doing? And then you begin to be able to differentiate between what is in this moment out there, what is, and your mental interpretation of what is.

If you're very unconscious, the way in which you interpret the phenomena that surround you and that constantly change people, events, situations, places, when you're very unconscious, the way in which you mentally interpret and mentally react and mentally, emotionally react to other people, places, situations, and so on, are perceived as a single phenomenon. You cannot differentiate between what is out there and how you see what is, how you interpret it, what you call it, the narrative that you spin around what is. They have a single thing.

You experience as a single thing. And so the way then in which a very unconscious person interprets the phenomena that happen around you continuously is determined by the conditioning of their mind, the mental, emotional conditioning. So they don't experience almost anything as it is.

They experience it through the veil of their mental conditioning. And a lot of that mental conditioning is verbal. It is, in many cases, an important part of it, is a narrative in your mind.

And so if you become aware of the narrative in your mind, that's a great step forward. It's a great awakening. And when you see that what you're, the way in which you're talking to yourself about something that's happening here and now, that's, and the mind says, this shouldn't be happening.

They should know better. Why do, why can't they do better? Why do I always encounter a situation like, why are people always so obnoxious?

I just can't stand people anymore. Why is this person, look how he pretends, he's pretending to be spiritual and just, you can see he's completely unconscious. What's this place?

Why did I even come here? I'm stuck here in this room and it's, is it even clean? I could be in a much more comfortable, if I hadn't left home, I could be in a much more comfortable place at home.

Why did I do that? Why would I always do things? It's completely pointless coming here.

I mean, this, what is this man even talking about? And so it goes on and on. And you don't, you cannot differentiate between what is and how your mind interprets what is.

It's crazy. So the moment you can separate, you see, here's the is-ness of things. This is what is, here I am, and there's that person talking about whatever politics.

And you can see, and you may find in yourself an urge to say something, but it could happen here, even here, because it's unlikely that you left your mind outside. It came with you, but that's a good thing because then you can become aware of it. And so life suddenly becomes much more simple and you begin to practice here, where you differentiate between the is-ness of things and your interpretation of it.

This includes people too. Every person behaves as they do according to their level of consciousness at this particular moment. In many people, their consciousness varies.

Sometimes they are really unconscious. And at other times, they're fairly present. You might have noticed that could happen to you sometimes still.

Sometimes you're very present and then something is triggered. I got triggered. He triggered me.

He always triggers me. So you got triggered and then you... So what happens when you get triggered?

That something takes you over. It's like you become somebody else for a while. And you might even say things that you later regret when you're a bit more conscious again.

You say, oh, I said something terrible. It's too late, you said it. Of course, then forgiveness has to come in.

Oh, there's another problem. You have to forgive yourself. No, you don't have to forgive yourself.

That's too complicated. You just have to see that neither you nor anybody else can manifest behavior or speech that is beyond their level of consciousness at that particular moment. That's obvious.

So if you get annoyed with people, of course, some things on a practical level can be, you can have changes on a practical level. You can say, don't do this. I don't, this behavior is not acceptable.

And that's a clear statement. It doesn't have to be reactive. But to learn to realize that, and this is a strange way of putting it, when you criticize other humans or you look at them and say, oh, the dreadful person.

I wrote that somewhere, I think in the book, Stillness Speaks. If you had the same personal history as this person and if you had the same level of consciousness as this person, you would behave in exactly the same way. Because that person is determined by his or her past.

But the behavior is determined by the conditioning of this person's mind. Now this, of course, we have to look very carefully. It seems to imply that people are not really, and this is a little problematic, people are not responsible for what they say or do.

Is that true? Is nobody responsible for what they say or do? Well, you can see that a very unconscious person, they cannot help doing what they do.

And even if they do dreadful things, if they were more conscious, they would not. However, the evolution of human consciousness happens gradually. And sometimes right now, faster than, much faster than before.

It happens through suffering. For all those who are very unconscious, they generate suffering for themselves and others. Suffering, when you're very unconscious, you generate an enormous amount of suffering for yourself and anybody who happens to be in your immediate surroundings.

And ultimately, although you're not responsible for what you do, you will suffer the consequences of your unconsciousness. And that's a karmic thing. It's only by suffering the consequences of your unconsciousness, you have an opportunity or a chance of eventually awakening.

So even the seemingly most adverse conditions and states of other humans that make them perpetrate dreadful things, ultimately, there's a larger purpose embedded in this. It's not immediately obvious. And that is the very unconscious humans.

And even if unconscious humans form a collective, an unconscious energy field, it could be a region or sometimes a whole country can become very unconscious. Everybody gets taken over by deep unconsciousness. It's happened even in the 20th century to several countries that suddenly got taken over by an enormous collective unconsciousness that produces enormous suffering.

And yes, what Jesus said on the cross, forgive them for they know not what they do. They know not what they do, of course means they are completely unconscious in modern terminology. So it does not free you from the suffering, the consequences of unconsciousness because that is part of the evolution of human consciousness is up to a certain point, it happens through pain and suffering.

And it's self-generated through the unconscious state of humans. And then at some point, when you have suffered enough, there's a chance of awakening. It might be after 20 years in prison or it could be in some dreadful, totally violent surroundings.

And every day there's shooting and whatever way it manifests. So you see the reflection in the external world of your state of consciousness. And then you suffer and suffer and suffer.

And then suddenly something in you cracks open the hard egoic shell that was in many cases, a collective ego, that perhaps those collective egos are even more insane than individual egos. They can perpetrate it far worse crimes than personal egos. I mean, look at the crimes, the worst crimes of humanity are not perpetrated by the criminals or crazy people who are obviously mentally, totally insane, clinically insane or hardened criminals or they do bad things, but this is nothing compared to what so-called normal people do when they're identified with a collective ego.

Entire countries have destroyed in Russia, in Germany, in China, in the 20th century, normal people have killed millions even of their own people in their own country, not even talking about warfare between countries. So that's a gradual awakening happens through intense pain, intense suffering. You don't even need to, you can observe it just by observing yourself how up to a point you needed your suffering.

If you hadn't suffered, you wouldn't be here. If I hadn't suffered, I wouldn't be here. I know that.

I would be, don't know what I would be doing. Probably drinking beer and watching television. No need to do anything.

What's the point? The challenges come at you continuously, small and large. Up to a point, the challenges, the way in which you respond or rather react to the challenges create suffering to use that term, create unhappiness, misery, anger, many forms of suffering, but I'm using the Buddhist term suffering, unhappiness, you could say, and it's many, many forms.

So when the challenges come up to a certain point, the challenges make you unhappy. The challenges make you miserable, resentful, angry, dejected. All kinds of things happen when the challenges come one after another.

Life never leaves you alone. Oh God, I want out of here. Just when I thought I've sorted out one area of my life, okay, I got the job and a great job and everything is, then something else goes wrong.

There's a relationship problem or then there's a physical problem or there's a problem in somebody close to you or something bad is happening to them or there's some death happening close to you, suddenly some great loss or whatever it is, unpleasant people making your life difficult, not unheard of, it happens. And so up to a certain point, the challenges of life are transformed into unhappiness. And then you reach a point where you recognize the challenges are inevitable.

They continue coming. It's like the waves and the, when you watch the ocean and the big waves come and break, they come and you can see when approaching. And first it doesn't even look that big, but you can see this movement of the water comes.

It's coming, it's coming. And then finally it goes. This is how challenges come at you, they're not always this huge, these huge waves, sometimes they are.

There can be little, little irritating ripples that come at you. Don't like that. And up to a point, you become unhappy, you're not happy and you complain about life.

You don't want it. I've had enough or you get very angry at everybody and everything because it's all their fault. Or you angrily deny the existence of God.

How would God allow a place like this? How, I would be morally superior, I could create a better world than this. How can, how can you allow this to happen?

This is a very common argument. We may address it again at some other point during the, and so you get angry at God. Some God in this case is of course a mental concept that you have of somebody who is in control of everything.

And so you get angry with God. And then you get angry that there is no God. And then up to a point and suddenly when you no longer demand that life should not be difficult, that these things should not be happening to you.

Then suddenly something shifts. Challenges keep coming. But they no longer make you unhappy.

They make you more present. So there comes the wave or the ripple and you perhaps you see it coming or it comes so suddenly that you don't see it coming. There it is and you go, ah, there's another one.

And as they come, they create an alertness in you that would not be there if the challenges were not be happening. In fact, you needed them because without them, you would be half asleep. This is the human condition.

You would be in a somewhat lethargic state because it's fine, it's doing fine.

[Speaker 2] (35:00 - 35:19)

I'm Oprah Winfrey and you've been listening to Eckhart Tolle, Essential Teachings, the podcast. You can follow these Essential Teachings on Spotify or wherever you listen to podcasts. If you haven't yet, go to Spotify and follow this podcast.

Eckhart Tolle We Are Designed to Awaken [4e6c7e4b-ec9c-4791-a9f9-8b2f4d9efe8d]

Designed to Awaken. In this episode, Eckhart answers questions from a live audience on such topics as eliminating depression, dealing with a heavy pain body, and why enlightenment seems to be such a rare phenomenon. Eckhart shares the story of his own pain body and how it finally pushed him into a state of presence.

He says, we are designed to awaken. There is a flowering of consciousness in the universe, and we are part of that.

For many years now, I've kind of been dealing off and on with certain degrees of depression, sometimes more intense, sometimes less intense. Actually, lately, a lot less intense in large part due to discovering you and kind of reading your works and stuff, which has been super helpful. So thanks for that.

But one aspect of this is that my ability to feel things has, I feel, greatly kind of diminished over time. Things that I used to be excited about don't excite me anymore. I don't look forward to things.

When I, you know, kind of hang out with my friends and things like that, which is stuff that I enjoy, the joy kind of goes away very quickly. But what doesn't go away and what I can feel is the kind of negatives in my life, the sadness and the suffering and stuff. And it got to a point where I started to crave it in a certain degree, because feeling those type of emotions almost kind of reminded me of my ability to feel at all and sort of reminded me of my humanness.

So I guess my question is, how do you eliminate suffering when suffering in a certain way is all that you have left?

[Speaker 1] (1:57 - 8:30)

Right. What about your practice of giving attention to the present moment? Now, we give attention to the present moment, you first, you become aware of whatever it is that you feel within.

And then you need to be aware of within and without, that's part of the present moment. So that your attention is not completely absorbed by whatever it is that you feel. Because there's also the vastness of the outside world.

And so to be present means to be present within and without this, you're in both worlds.

So you acknowledge whatever it is you feel inside you at this moment, be also very vigilant to see whether there are any associated thoughts with that feeling. Are there certain thoughts that go through your head that reflect what it is that you feel?

For example, if you feel depressed, do you have thoughts that are telling you that life is after all, not worth living or whatever the thoughts are saying that people suck, life sucks, I suck, we all suck, I don't want to be here, that kind of thought. So you need to observe, be aware on both on the, as far as the inside is concerned, be aware on both on the level of the emotions and feelings, and the level of mind activity, what kind of thoughts, and so it requires vigilance, so that you don't indulge without knowing it in unconscious thinking. And you can't separate the unconscious thinking and the feelings.

So only you can know, I don't even know whether you can answer this question now, because you have to find out in the moment of it happening, what kind of mind activity accompanies those unpleasant feelings. And to see whether this mind activity actually feeds the unpleasantness that you feel, or the suffering that you feel, that's a very important thing. What role does your mind play in all this?

Very important. Is your mind feeding it? Because you have a big pain body there, which is not in itself a bad thing, because the pain body becomes a strong motivating force for you to awaken.

I also had a very heavy pain body, that's why I had to awaken, couldn't stand it anymore. And you at this point too, can't stand it anymore, that's good. So be very careful so that you examine your thinking.

Am I feeding the feeling? And if you are, that means there's enough awareness for you to realize it, then you let go of the thoughts. And one way you can do it by, remember I just mentioned, be present within and without.

You can use, for example, your sense perceptions, directing attention to your sense perceptions, that takes attention away from thinking. And then you experience, the next step would be, you still feel the unpleasantness, but you're also observing sensory perception around you. There's the sky, there's the flower, my hand, the hand.

And you don't have to, I'm labeling it now, but you don't have to label it. It's better not to label it, just to perceive it fully. Come to your senses, look around, there's an entire world there, and your suffering ends here, where your skin is.

The suffering that you experience is inside you, just one step next to you, there's no suffering. Isn't that strange? So the table isn't suffering, I'm suffering.

And this inch on the chair here is not suffering, it's just inside my, this bag of skin, I am the suffering entity, that's me. And then if you don't know that, then you identify with that feeling, then you call, and you still have the conditioned thinking that reflects the suffering, and say, oh, it's all pointless, the trees are pointless, the sky is pointless, what's the point of it all? I don't see any beauty in this, and this flower is going to die soon, of course.

It all, everything dies soon, so what's the point in even living when there's a dog, he doesn't look that healthy. Whatever it is, then you would just look at the world around you through the feelings. So to be present, you have to not label, and just look, and take in auditory, visual perception, breathing.

If you give more attention to your surroundings, especially when you're in nature, but nature is everywhere, even if you're in the middle of Seattle, there's the sky, well, it's usually at this time of year, it'll be gray, but that's fine, too. There's sunlight filtering through the sky, and you have lots of trees, lots of trees, the evergreen state, Washington, as it says on your license plate, so that's good, you have that, and that takes your attention away from, you're not denying what you feel, but you're adding a dimension to it, the external dimension, and then nature has a very healing effect if you truly give attention to nature, and you're no longer fueling the suffering that you feel inside you. Of course, it doesn't go away immediately, or a miracle could happen, and it does, but usually not. It's just the beginning of it gradually dissolving or becoming transmuted.

Now, looking back retrospectively, if you even know the answer to this, what kind of mind activity accompanies the suffering that you feel in your body? What are the typical thoughts that go with that?

[Speaker 3] (8:31 - 8:44)

I guess it kind of depends on the situation, obviously, you know, it comes in kind of phases, but a lot of it is just kind of generalized self-loathing, I guess, I don't know if that's the right term, but...

[Speaker 1] (8:44 - 9:26)

Watch out for what kind of thoughts, it might even be helpful to write them down, if they're repetitive thoughts, see what kind of repetitive thoughts you can catch, because they can obscure your awareness so quickly, especially old thoughts that come again and again and again, they become part of your fictitious identity of the self, the egoic self. So you carry with you then the burden of an unhappy self. I remember that, I had that too, carrying the burden of an unhappy self, and that is what motivates you to awaken.

But there's already been a diminishment of your depression.

[Speaker 3] (9:27 - 9:27)

Absolutely, yeah.

So that's a good sign, that means presence is arising, and it is gradually dissolving this pain body in you. But your work is not to renew the pain body through unconscious thinking, so you need to be really alert and watch your mind, so that you don't create more suffering by unconscious mind activity. And if you no longer feed the pain body, now the pain body, of course, also feeds through drama in relationships, it has the two ways of feeding.

In your case, perhaps more through your mind, but I don't know, could be also enacting and reenacting drama, emotional drama in relationships with your partner, family members, whoever it may be, usually people you're close to or work with, but the closer the better. The intimate partners are the best ways for the pain body to renew itself through. So don't add to the pain body, it wants to feed, it wants your unconsciousness, but don't give it to the pain body.

You're not feeding it with your mind anymore, and you're not feeding it by being drawn into insane drama in relationships, so you're watching it. There it is, it may not be pleasant, but it's not that bad. Your presence is infinitely more powerful, and it doesn't even fight the pain body, it just by shining the light of awareness on it, it gradually dissipates, or a better way of putting it, it gets transmuted, because the energy is not lost, there is enormous life energy in it, but it's trapped, it's trapped energy, so it's felt as negative.

When that's freed, it becomes part of presence, it is fuel for presence. The pain body is fuel for presence, that's amazing, so you have plenty of fuel for presence, that's the good news.

If the body is not experienced, does the world appear?

Can you relate this to something in your experience?

[Speaker 2] (11:52 - 12:18)

Sure, if you don't experience sensations, or sometimes feel a hollowness, it feels like the is not experienced always, does it mean that this is headed where we say the world is not experienced anymore? And I want to know your particular experience right now of the world, in other words, how do you feel, sense perceptions, and what's the state of your consciousness?

[Speaker 1] (12:18 - 15:38)

Okay, I'll tell you, and then I'll ask you about yours. It's hard to find the words to explain it. Somewhat insubstantial, all the things that happen around me, it's a little bit like a light show or something, insubstantial.

I know that everything is continued in the process of disappearing and appearing and disappearing, so the world doesn't have that heaviness for me that it has otherwise in a normal, identified consciousness. A little bit like a dream, and there's something that is untouched by it, that's the timeless consciousness, and from there, I experience the flux of becoming, of being born, dying, forms appearing, disappearing. It's quite pleasant.

Well, there were two philosophers in ancient Greece who had contradictory philosophies. Heraclitus or Heraclitus said the famous saying, you cannot step into the same river twice because everything flows, and his main statement that he's remembered by is everything flows. In ancient Greek, panta brei means everything flows.

So he saw how the Buddha's teaching of impermanence, whatever you see is not going to last, everything flows. That is one truth, and then the next philosopher came, Parmenides, who said, nothing ever changes. They completely didn't like each other.

Nothing ever changes. The reality is unchangeable, the reality. So they were both right.

Parmenides was referring to the timeless realization of consciousness, and nothing changes there, and Heraclitus was referring to the flux of phenomena, the world of form, and so there's a detachment from things. I participate in the world, but there is a space around it, like, yes, I think the dream is the closest that comes, but it's a lucid dream, so I'm in it, and it doesn't mean that everything is, I don't see it as everything is totally illusory. There is something in the dream that is of the essence, and it is important that these dream figures that are sitting here should awaken out of the dream by realizing who they are beyond form.

So that's important. So I value the world in that sense. It's very hard to talk about, but one becomes so used to one state of consciousness, I certainly don't think about it, so it's very hard to verbalize.

What is your relationship with the world?

[Speaker 2] (15:40 - 16:38)

So there was a time where I awakened, and it appeared to be a dream, so illusory, and as you said, and everything had a relative quality, except from the place where I was watching. And over the course of time, there were many events that brought me back to the egoic consciousness and back out of it as well, that I feel like I'm witnessing right now. And sometimes the body not disappears completely, but is not felt and appears again, and I believe that this means that the world is probably on its way out then.

So what does it mean? That means I want to know in terms of sense perceptions how it would appear, and also whether that means I would experience everything as consciousness, and probably no body.

Yes, but don't go into too much mental abstraction, just stay with your immediate experience. And I know that in the unawakened consciousness, the world has an enormous heaviness and an enormous seriousness to it. It is, everything is so serious, it matters.

Every tiny situation draws you in, and you become so serious, and you don't realize how insignificant most situations actually are. This is why I sometimes say, go to cemeteries and look at the gravestones. I love that.

You look at the gravestones, and you see the date of birth and the date of death, and between there's a dash, two inches long on a big gravestone, several inches long, and that was the life that was lived. All the anxieties, and problems, and suffering, and things were so terrible, the drama, and so heavy, and so important. What's left now?

The dash between the date of birth and the date of death. And that, if you contemplate that, it detaches you, and the world, they can bring about awareness. It's really a contemplating impermanence.

As you know, in some Buddhist traditions, the monks go to the morgue, where the dead bodies are kept, to meditate. And that is in order to contemplate, without flinching, to contemplate the fact of impermanence of all forms. And what better place to contemplate the impermanence of all forms than be surrounded by dead bodies?

Now, that would be, in a normal state of consciousness, very scary. You wouldn't want to do that. But it can be a very powerful thing.

In Western civilization, death is a little bit changing. Death is such a fundamental, primordial fact of life. It's the short-lived nature of the form.

It's even now, not as much as before, but even now, death is still a kind of taboo in Western civilization. So it's hard to see a dead body. If you wanted to see a dead body, unless it's a close relative or family member, it's almost impossible.

It's illegal. You can't say, I'd like to see a dead body. No, you can't see a dead body.

You have to travel to India if you want to see dead bodies, because it's not a taboo there. And it can be very shocking to see that a body is being, a few hours after death, the body is being taken to the fire and burned. That teaches you more about the reality of the fact of impermanence than any scripture.

So there's, the world loses its heaviness and its absolute seriousness. The way I put it, things may still matter. They make a difference.

You'd say it matters whether your body is healthy or not, or whether you live in a tent and are cold, you live in a nice place that is warm. Things are still relatively important in this world. I wouldn't say nothing is, some teachers do that.

It's relatively important, but not absolutely important. You have to know the absolute, what is absolutely important, and that is knowing who you are. And then anything in the world of relativity, anything that you experience, you can actually still enjoy sensory experiences.

You can enjoy, I know there are certain teachers in certain traditions that they despise the world. These traditions exist both in India, and they also have existed for many centuries in the West, in Christianity, of despising the world and denying the world completely. This is, I believe, not helpful because you're doing something before it.

There's never a despising of the world. There's can be, there's an appreciation of the world, but without mistaking it for what it is not, fully realizing the impermanence of it, and yet enjoying that also. You don't need it, but you enjoy it.

We can talk about this for a long time, but the important thing is your state of consciousness, how you relate to everyday situations. It always comes back down to how conscious are you in everyday life? Do you still get seduced by circumstances and so on in your life that draw you out completely into reactivity?

Or are you able to deal and interact with situations and people, always having in the background an awareness of these, the spaciousness, the stillness, who you are, know yourself as consciousness? Or do you lose yourself in the world, which is also in your mind? This is the determining factor.

So that's your practice, everyday life.

[Speaker 2] (22:03 - 22:14)

Yeah, I think I'm not lost. I doesn't look like I can be lost easily. I just have a couple questions.

Do you experience your body visually? I mean, do you see it?

[Speaker 1] (22:22 - 23:39)

Yeah, I think it's here. If you go deeply into the body with your attention, then you go beyond the body. Going beyond the body can easily be done by taking your attention into the body, and then realizing the animating presence is far beyond the body.

So you can go into the body, and realizing the animating presence, the consciousness, without which there would be no body, and you've already gone beyond the body. So you could use the body as a doorway. You just, you walk through.

So the body is not who you are. It's a misperception of who you are. It's a sensory misperception.

And that's fine. I know that this will dissolve at some point. And I'm perfectly fine with that.

The visible body is not who I am. So I'm not going to die. The body is going to dissolve.

That's fine. There is no death. There's only life.

And as I said before somewhere, the opposite, that life has no opposite. Death is not the opposite of life. Death is the opposite of birth.

[Speaker 5] (23:46 - 24:03)

I agree. If the purpose of the universe is that form awakens and consciousness becomes aware of itself, why is it such a rare phenomenon? It almost seems like we've been designed to not awaken, and we've been lost in that.

Okay, thank you. Well, as you say, it seems like you've been designed, not you personally, but not to awaken. But the opposite is actually true.

You've been designed to awaken in the same way that the seed that falls into the ground has been designed to become an oak tree. And whatever the little onion bulb that you put into the ground now is designed to become a beautiful flower in the spring. But not right now, because in this realm, where the consciousness that underlies the world of form that expresses itself through countless temporary formations, in this realm, it evolves in time.

It exists in another realm in the timeless. In this realm, however, time applies. The universe evolved from the state of oneness into multiplicity.

And even on this planet, there's an evolution of consciousness. Forms become more complex as consciousness moves into different life forms. And gradually, there's a flowering of consciousness in the universe.

You are part of that. And it all happens just like the seed. It's a process in time.

There's a paradox here. By the way, we need to be able to accept and live with paradoxes. Because if it's not a paradox, it's not the truth.

The mind seeks the truth. This is how it is, or this, but it can't be both. Now, some physicists are beginning to realize that even there in the realm of science, is it a particle or is it a wave?

Well, it depends how you look at it. So you have to live with paradox. And the paradox also applies the moment we talk about finding the timeless dimension in yourself.

We awaken to that. And I sometimes say when I give a talk, we are here for the next two hours to find the timeless within ourselves. So you can see the paradox.

And people say, what do you mean? Why do you need two hours to find the timeless in yourself? But you do.

Not the moment of realization, of course, is timeless. But the realization of the timeless is always present in your life. That takes time.

That's the awakening. It takes time to awaken, but you're like an alarm clock. You have been set, to simplify it a little.

You've been designed to go off eventually. All we know is we don't quite know at what time. And when you go off, you realize time was never real.

And you might even think, well, I didn't really need to go through all that time. But that's how it is. So here, things evolve in time.

And every human is a seed for that, or more than a seed already, designed to awaken. That's why we are here, to express that, to be vehicles for that. And it's happening now, beginning to happen more.

In the past, it's been the privilege of very few individuals here. And there have always been some here and there. And now, many more are going through the awakening process.

And for most people, it is a process. Process means you awaken, and you go back. So back in time.

And that's why it takes time. So you go back, and then you gain something. Ah, great.

No problem. Peace, aliveness, presence, deeper relating beyond form, seeing the essence of life in all life forms. And then something happens, and the density comes back, the dream of form comes back, and you go back to sleep.

So it's a bit like somebody is asleep and dreaming. Even dogs do it. I watch my dog.

And then you're overtaken by the sleep, sleep again.

[Speaker 6] (28:40 - 28:45)

All kinds of things.

I would be wise to know what happens in a dog's dream. But it's probably similar to human dreams, except it consists of other concerns, bones and other dogs. So it's a gradual timeless and back in time.

So rarely does it happen as an individual awakens all at once, and then does not fall back into identification with form, with thought, and so on. It happens occasionally. But for most, it's a process.

So let's enjoy the process. And the more you ask, why is it taking too long? You're focusing on time.

And even the belief it needs to take long, it doesn't need to take long. It doesn't need to take time to realize who you are. That is just now.

But to have it as a continuous knowing in the background of your life may take a little time.

[Speaker 5] (29:54 - 30:01)

The gradual process, that is also fine. Consciousness is fine with the process being so slow.

Yes. Consciousness wants to experience itself as form. The universe, let's say, wants obviously to experience itself as form, because that's what is happening.

It produces forms. It expresses itself through form, as forms. That's the outward movement of the universe.

And it's a dream. It's dreaming that dream. It loves that.

And then there's the awakening. In the middle of the dream, there's a realization of the source where it all came from and comes from. The homeward journey, home to the unmanifested, timeless one before the Big Bang.

The nothingness that no physicist can understand. They don't even go there because you can't. The moment you go there, what was there before the Big Bang?

Nothing. Nothing. So the whole universe came out of nothing.

Yes. And of course, the greatest physicists cannot understand that. So every physicist's mind stops the moment they go to the Big Bang.

They can't go any further beyond that. Their mind must stop, otherwise they go insane. Because there you touch the unmanifested, the timeless, the eternal, the emptiness, the nothingness, which is also the fullness, which cannot be described with any word.

That is what underlies the universe. And that's never gone away. That is still the essence of every life form.

The emptiness, the formlessness that Buddhists talk about. The emptiness at the heart of all things. The form that really means the form.

It doesn't mean emptiness is a misleading term, probably. It is the formlessness, the spirit. But that spirit makes it into something again.

That which absolutely cannot be named. The moment you name it, as the Tao Te Ching says, the moment you name it, you've lost it. That's not it.

That can only be known when the mind stops and they realize that what's left is the light of consciousness. Just that in which all this appears. I am that.

So there's the outward journey of the universe into form, the dream of form. And then there's the awakening of suddenly who I am, because I am the universe, as you are. I speak there's only one I, essentially.

I am the universe. And then suddenly I know myself in my essence. I go home to the origin, my origin, the formless life that I am.

Then the universe changes. Because the way in which I experience the universe, the moment I know myself as the formless, then I'm home. And at the same time, there's still the dream of form happening.

But the dream of form changes when you are no longer totally lost in it. You can then enjoy the dream of form and even become very powerful as a co-creator of the creating process. Humans are going to learn, already they're doing it now, to create form simply by thinking certain forms into being.

But you cannot do that fully unless you're rooted in the formless. And then the ego is no longer operating. And then the formless can use you, the form of you, to express itself through.

And so a time will come when humans can create any form, external form, simply through thought. Thought is creative. Rather than having a destructive mind, you can just use the power of that.

When you're connected to the formless consciousness, it can use that through you. Of course, this irony is there's very little that humans would even want to create. When you're so deeply connected, you don't need much in the world of form.

So when you are able to create any form you like, you're going to just occasionally use it, but it's not that much that you need. Formless awakening to the timeless in you. Awakening to the formless in you.

That's happening now, and it's accelerating on the planet. I have no idea whether the whole of humanity is going to awaken, or only part of humanity, or a certain percentage will awaken, and then that will draw in the rest, or humanity will split into different dimensions or species. We don't need to know all that.

But we are part of a vast unfolding of cosmic proportions, and the more we are open to that and know that, the more quickly it happens in this world of time. So the timeless erupts into the world of time. It may eventually dissolve this entire dimension.

I don't want to speculate too much. Cause and Miracles, for example, seems to point to the possibility that the universe eventually will be, this dreamlike dimension will dissolve entirely. We don't need to speculate about that, because it's much more simple than that.

Awakening, disidentification from form, being the light that you are. What Jesus said, I am the light of the world, can be a very powerful pointer that you can sometimes use. Of course it's only a thought, but it's a thought that points to an underlying reality.

So it's a kind of mantra almost. I am the light of the world. So if you occasionally say it, and after that there's nothing to think, because if more thoughts come, then you're not the light of the world, you are something or somebody.

I am the light of the world, the light in which this room appears, the light in which every thought appears, that arises. So to know who you are, concepts need to disappear from your mind. A concept that you apply to yourself.

So you need to become comfortable with not knowing who you are, conceptually. I am the light of the world doesn't really say anything. It doesn't explain to you who you are.

It's a helpful pointer no more. It's not an explanation. As an explanation, it's not very useful.

But as a pointer, it's very powerful.

I'm Oprah Winfrey, and you've been listening to Eckhart Tolle, Essential Teachings, the podcast. You can follow these essential teachings on Spotify or wherever you listen to podcasts. If you haven't yet, go to Spotify and follow this podcast.

Join us next week for more enlightened teachings from Eckhart Tolle. Thank you for listening.

Eckhart Tolle We Are Not Fully Human Yet [82111c6c-6504-4e9e-8a48-83abac84bf3f]

We are not fully human yet. In this podcast, Eckhart talks about the spiritual evolution of humanity. He says, our development is far from finished.

In fact, he says it coincides with the transformation of all life on earth, because collectively, we are on the way to awakening, but we haven't arrived yet. Eckhart asks, what does it mean to be awake? In spiritual terms, he says, it's reaching the deeper dimension of ourselves that is higher than thinking.

He believes it's the secret behind all spiritual teachings. He notes, both Buddha and Jesus describe the state of heightened awareness. Eckhart says, we will find it when we relinquish our so-called normal state of consciousness, which he described as a relentless stream of compulsive thinking.

[Speaker 1] (0:53 - 44:23)

Let's acknowledge just this moment here and see if we can completely accept the way this moment is. So we are aligning ourselves internally with the present moment. We'll start with that because it's so vital.

Now, becoming aware of the present moment is the portal into a different state of consciousness. One could say the awakened state of consciousness. What does that mean?

Aren't we awake already? Unless you're asleep, what does it mean, the awakened state of consciousness? In spiritual terms, awakened means that a dimension of consciousness has emerged in you or is beginning to emerge in you, a dimension that is deeper, or we could say higher, than the thinking function.

And that is the secret, ultimately, of all spiritual teachings. The spiritual teaching, if it is a true spiritual teaching, is there to help you discover and experience this hitherto hidden or concealed dimension of consciousness. So awakening is actually an old term going back thousands of years.

It is related to the Buddha. To the Buddha is a title. It's not anybody's name.

It is a title that was given to somebody. And Buddha, the root of the word, means awake, to be awake. It comes from Sanskrit.

So Buddha means the one who is awake. But what does it mean to be awake? And what is the opposite of being awake when we use awake in a spiritual context?

The opposite of being awake is the so-called normal state of consciousness, which is a continuous stream of thinking, conceptual thinking, that never stops, that continuously operates in you as, as I sometimes call it, the voice in the head. And this continuous stream of thinking, all those humans who are not yet awakened, or at least awakening, and many of you are awakening, otherwise you wouldn't even be here. All those who are not at least awakening are completely identified with the incessant and, yes, we could say compulsive stream of thinking.

There's a voice in you and you can't stop it. It talks. It may not talk out loud, but sometimes it does.

But it's in your head, like people in the street, they're talking to themselves, and they say, oh, they're a bit crazy. They go on, and then I said to him, but he should have said, what, you should have been more careful. Next time I'm not going to do that anymore.

He's crazy. But most people do that in their heads silently. They're not talking out loud.

So there is this continuous stream of mental noise, a lot of which is actually not all that pleasant. A lot of it is of a negative nature. A lot of the thinking is not constructive thinking, because thought is a wonderful thing and can be a very powerful tool.

I mean, the evolution of thought in humans was an amazing step forward in human evolution. It got linked to language, the development of language. All that has been a wonderful thing, but there's been a heavy price to pay because we live in the world of polarities, so that what you gain here, you lose there.

So if you develop enormous physical strength, you can become a bodybuilder or whatever it is, but then necessarily you're not cultivating your knowledge or whatever. So you gain something here, you lose something there. So the complete identification with the stream of thinking is the unawakened state.

I want to make sure that you know what I mean by that, is whatever thought arises gets a hold of you, and immediately you identify with it, and you have an opinion, whatever it comes up. This is how it is. You have a judgment about somebody, people that you've known in the past.

You have certain thoughts that arise continuously, similar types of thought that never stop. You can experience something in the distant past, 10 years ago, and 10 years later, you're still replaying that event in your mind. This is just one example, and the likelihood is that it is more likely that this is an unpleasant event than a pleasant event.

A pleasant event is not all that memorable, it seems. You see, I saw a beautiful sunset two years ago when I was standing at the top of this mountain, and I'm still thinking about it. Well, maybe, but it's more like if you said, when I was climbing up that mountain, I ran into this awful man who started talking to me about his political views, and he was just the most dreadful person.

Then he started insulting me, and then you're more likely to think about that for a long time than about a wonderful event. This is just the nature of the human mind. So it's important to realize that this is considered normal to be identified with a stream of thinking, but it is not the ultimate possibility of human beings.

The evolution of humans has not come to an end. The evolution of humanity is, the evolution of life on the planet is an ongoing process. So we are not a finished product.

We are a work in progress. Humans have not yet arrived, as Confucius said, the Chinese philosopher 2,500 years ago. Most humans are not fully human yet.

They are on their way towards that. And all the spiritual teachings, if you look at the essence of spiritual teachings, they all agree that there is something in human mind or human consciousness that is highly dysfunctional. There's also wonderful things there, wonderful things humans have created through the application of thought.

Undoubtedly, that is true. But with that came a very serious dysfunction that grew over centuries and millennia, and we need to look briefly at the nature of that dysfunction. The spiritual teachings, they call it by different names.

The Buddha called this dysfunction the state of suffering or unhappiness or misery. The word he used was the word dukkha, and the word dukkha can be translated as either suffering, misery, unhappiness, or unsatisfactoriness. So the Buddha said, wherever you go, whatever you do, whoever you meet, sooner or later, you will find dukkha.

You will find there's a flaw in the situation, there's a flaw in that person. And the person who makes you, just one example, because you were talking about weddings, the person who makes you happy today or this year, the very same person makes you miserably unhappy in two years time, three, four, seven, whatever the magical number is, then it becomes, it gets difficult. It's the very same person, you have the wedding, and a few years later, in many cases, unfortunately, the divorce.

Now that means you have a wedding and a divorce means the very same human being that made you happy, the very same condition makes you very unhappy. Isn't that strange? And this is an example of what Buddha was talking about when he said dukkha is everywhere.

But he didn't say that is the ultimate destiny of humans. What he's really saying is, unless you awaken, but he was describing the so called normal state of consciousness, where misery or unhappiness seems to predominate, not 100%, but a lot of the time. And Jesus talked about the state of sin, a state of sin, what's translated as sin originally in the original Greek in which the New Testament was written.

It means to miss the target, to sin, literally means to miss the target, like an archer who misses the target. So you miss the target, which is the very purpose of a human life. In other words, sin is a dysfunction in human beings.

And just as the Buddha pointed out the possibility of awakening, which he calls the end of suffering, the end of unhappiness, misery, however you want to translate the term dukkha. In the same way, Jesus talks about, he said, you are the slaves of sin. Now, if you if you translate sin as you're missing the target continuously, ultimately, what that means is, there is a dysfunction operating in you.

And this dysfunction makes you miserable and makes others around you miserable, and you spread your misery without knowing it. And so he pointed to that. And he pointed to the possibility of what is sometimes called salvation.

Sometimes he talked about it as kingdom of heaven, and we'll be coming back to that. Or he talked about eternal, finding eternal life. Interesting terms.

You may not know immediately what it is that he's talking about. But salvation, that's a very common term that he used. Salvation, again, means liberation from this dysfunction that we all inherit.

That is in our genes or is in the collective unconsciousness of humanity. Every human being, and there's a Christian term, it's original sin. That's interesting.

And many people say, oh, that's, I don't want to hear about original sin. That can't be true. But the baby hasn't committed any sin.

How can you say original sin? But if you reinterpret the term, it actually means that every human being inherits this dysfunction that is embedded in the human psyche. So Jesus says there is a way beyond it.

They all recognize, the Buddha recognized the basic fact of the dysfunction and the possibility of transcending that ultimately dysfunctional state of consciousness that has resulted in, on a collective level, the madness of human history. The unbelievable insanity, when you look at 20th century, you don't even need to go back very far. Read a history book of the 20th century, and I recommend the first half of the 20th century.

And it is so dreadful, so many millions upon millions, and they can't even agree on how many human beings were killed by other human beings, both in warfare and in countries by their own governments, in Germany, in Russia, in China, in Cambodia, all dreadful. Hundreds of millions killed. How can this not be insane?

So when you look at the collective manifestation of this dysfunction, you can only shake your head and say, well, truly, there is something very wrong. There's also something very right with humans. There is a sanity hiding in them, and with some people, the sanity is more on the surface, and with others, the insanity manifests itself more strongly.

And millions are still in the grip of a very serious manifestation of this basic insanity. And you have similar in India, you have terms also, spiritual terms. We live in a state of delusion.

The Hindu teachings, we live in a state of delusion. We don't see reality as it is. And again, they point to the possibility of liberation from the state of illusion.

So you become free of, in Christian terms, you would say free of sin, which is all free of the dysfunction. So they all agree that there is something that needs to be addressed. The greater amount of human suffering on happiness arises out of the human mind and is created by the human mind.

And you can see that in one's personal life, and you can see it collectively. You can see collectively there's been far more suffering inflicted on humans by other humans than suffering inflicted by natural disasters, and so on. You can't even compare the millions killed by other humans.

Natural disasters is relatively little compared to what humans do to other humans. What they do to their fellow humans. And those are the extreme forms of the dysfunction, the collective manifestations.

And then there is the ultimately unnecessary unhappiness that we experience, well, unless you begin to awaken, on a daily basis that is ultimately unnecessary. So the thinking function, that goes back a long, long time when humans began to use language, and then they began to think. It was an enormous evolutionary step forward.

So at first it was great. It was wonderful. So they were able to speak, to differentiate.

Writing developed. You could gather information and pass it on to the next generations. All wonderful things.

Gradually, though, thinking became more and more overactive. The mind became more and more powerful and strong. And this is a myth in many cultures of the golden age.

This goes in many civilizations. You have a myth that tells the story of, we have it in India, you have it at the beginning of the Bible, paradise, and in other places, the myth of the golden age when life was good. When life was not problematic.

When suffering had not yet begun. And that points to something very real. That points to the state of humans before the arising of the conceptual mind with the thinking mind.

Because then they were still, had still a lot in common with the animals. And the animals do not have the burden of a conceptual mind that makes them unhappy. You can even observe it with your dog.

Your dog is not burdened by a problematic mentally created self. You might have a problem with the way you look. Many people have.

You may have a problem with self-esteem. Your dog doesn't. No matter how the dog looks, the dog does not have an opinion of him or herself.

But you do. You have an opinion about who you are and what is an opinion about who you are. Many people don't have that pleasant of an opinion about themselves.

Some have a totally exaggerated opinion about themselves. They're all deluded. But what is an opinion about yourself?

It is certain thoughts in your mind. These thoughts that you identify with. The thoughts give you a sense of self.

You derive your sense of self from a certain narrative in your mind. And the dog doesn't. So the dog's life is much less problematic than the human life, which is the reason why most dogs are more joyful than humans.

And this is the reason why the tail goes wagging. Sometimes you just look at them and they are so happy to be alive and to be communicating with you that the tail goes. And if your dog would speak, he would say, life is good.

This moment is good. And so animals, yes, there is some physical suffering, but there's no psychological suffering except for a few dogs and cats that have lived for too long with neurotic humans. So that I have met a few, that is true.

And they even, some of them even have an ego that's already developing. But surprisingly, most dogs are still sane. And it's a miracle sometimes when you see who they live with.

So the golden age points to a time when the conceptual mind had not yet taken you over and you were in that state of what we could call rootedness in being. You were like an animal is when the animal rests. Look at a cat and the cat rests.

It's wonderful to see the cat is there. Dog too. And maybe even purring.

Purring is the arm of the cat. It's a wonderful, wonderful sound. And the cat is not thinking, what is going to happen tomorrow?

Or it's not thinking, well, yesterday, he said that. And then why didn't I reply? And I dislike this person so much.

Let me think a bit more about this. It's so, so awful. And I'm so anxious about next week.

No, the cat is rooted in a deep place of alive peace. It's rooted in something deeper. And the tree is even more deeply rooted in being.

And by contemplating an animal or by contemplating a tree, you can sometimes use it as a teaching tool and you can allow the tree to teach you how to be. Because the tree is just, it's totally itself. The tree is even more deeply rooted in, not just physically rooted in the soil.

The tree also has this energy field around it that is an energy field of stillness. And some trees live for hundreds or thousands of years and they just exist in this wonderful beingness. But you have to become a little bit still to be able to sense that when you look at a tree.

You have to become a little bit still for moments and then you can tune into the stillness of the tree. And then the tree is teaching you being. And being, this connectedness with being, to be, I am.

Through the excessive thinking, humans have gradually, they lost it more and more. And then came, of course, the focused application of thought that we call science. And then thinking became even more amplified.

We can now, science is the more focused application of the thinking function. That in itself, it's neutral. But most thinking is overthinking for humans.

And the important thing is identity. Most humans who are identified with their stream of thinking, so they're in the grip of it and they go, or isn't that awful? They simply, they can't even tell the difference between a situation and the interpretation of a situation.

Isn't that amazing? For example, you can say, oh, what an awful day it is again. The weather is awful.

Well, here it's not normally sunny, but we have to go to Seattle or somewhere. The weather is awful, but sunny could be awful too because it's too hot. This is just a little example.

The weather is, it's an awful, awful thing, an awful situation. You can't tell the difference between what is and the narrative that you impose on what is, which is overthinking. So you go into any situation, you become irritated.

For example, there may be one or two of you, probably not, but I'm just saying, who became irritated when we were delayed and we started 15 minutes late. So one or two of you, most were already spiritually awakening, so you wouldn't become irritated, but one or two of you became perhaps irritated. And was it, were you irritated because of the situation?

Yes, you said, yes, I was irritated because you kept us waiting. Don't you respect us? Don't you?

Whatever narrative your mind comes up with, it's a sign of disrespect, isn't it? You kept us waiting. The mind came up with a narrative.

Now, if you were completely identified with the narrative, then that became your reality. Then you looked at the situation through the screen of your narrative without even knowing it, because to you, the screen of the narrative was the reality. So you didn't know that there was a situation and the situation was neutral, which means Eckhart hasn't appeared yet.

He's not here. Well, there's no suffering or unhappiness in that. He's not here yet.

That is the bare fact of the situation. Then the mind comes in and constructs a narrative which is unconscious. So we call that unconscious thinking.

Unconscious thinking happens in the absence of presence or awareness, which is the dimension of consciousness from where you can become aware of what your mind is doing. And so if there is awareness in you, it is possible that your mind may have begun to construct a certain unpleasant narrative about Eckhart not respecting us or me. He's keeping me waiting.

And perhaps if there was some awareness, suddenly you might have become aware and said, oh, there was a narrative that's not necessarily the truth, because who knows? Maybe he's had to go to the bathroom. Maybe we don't know.

It's not necessarily an insult to you. He just had to go to the bathroom. That's an alternative narrative, but he can actually approach a situation without the narrative.

What about that? So the very same situation that makes you unhappy, if you say, what happens if I do not impose a narrative on this moment, my experience of this moment? How would I experience this moment if I did not add a narrative to it?

That's an amazing question, but don't stop there. Then you take the next step and you actually drop the narrative. You can always take it up later because you may want to be unhappy again.

So you drop the narrative and suddenly you sit there and it's perfectly fine. You're not interpreting the present moment. You're allowing it to be as it is and there's no irritation.

There is no unhappiness and it's actually good. Now, what happened in that? This has been a little shift in consciousness, but a very significant shift in consciousness.

You have stepped out of the narrative or you have, another way of putting it, you dropped the narrative and then what happens is you experience this moment through your awareness rather than through the story of you or me. But humans have developed through identification with thinking over centuries and millennia, they have developed a sense of identity that is linked with thinking, is derived from thinking. And this is why they lost their deeper connectedness with being.

So there is something in you, this identity, which is a mental, a conceptual identity, which we call the ego. This identity actually does not want to drop the narrative. It wants to cling to the narrative because by clinging to this narrative, by interpreting a situation in a particular way, by clinging to it, its sense of self, its sense of identity grows stronger.

How does it grow stronger? When you complain about something or about what a person does or is not doing, you are establishing an ultimately fictitious, but to the ego, very real, sense of superiority. It's an unconscious process.

But this unconscious process sustains the ego continuously. The ego wants and needs to be superior. Now what is the ego again?

Let's go there. It's a mind-made sense of self and it's narrative-based. It's a story of me.

The ego always looks for some kind of superiority to others because that strengthens its own ultimately fictitious sense of self. So you feel a little bit stronger. If you can continue to complain that Eckhart isn't here yet, and you can say, and he's supposed to be spiritual, and he's keeping us waiting here, dishonoring me, and all kinds of weird stuff can go through.

And this is only one little example. Some people have one situation after the other that they experience in this dysfunctional way. Crazy.

But for millions, it's still normal. And what has not yet happened in them is the disidentification from this unconscious stream of thinking and the arising of a deeper or higher dimension of consciousness that we could call awareness, or we could call presence. And when you are present, the mind may still be constructing its stories, but increasingly, you become aware of what your mind is doing.

So there's a background. In the background, there's a knowing. And this background knowing is not thinking.

It can look at thinking without even judging it. It just sees what the mind is doing. For some people, it happens in this way.

They suddenly become aware that for the past 10 years, 20 years, 30 years, depending on at what age you begin to wake up or awaken, become suddenly aware that certain thoughts have been going through their minds for years and decades sometimes. Repetitive thoughts about life, about myself, about the world, about certain politicians, whatever it may be. These thoughts are continuously, and they are judgmental thoughts.

They are unhappy thoughts. They are very critical. They are complaining.

Complaining is a wonderful, wonderful tool for the fictitious sense of self that we call the ego. It is always superiority. Discover in yourself whether that pattern still occasionally operates.

And if you see it, you're no longer in the grip of it. Complaining strengthens the ego enormously. I'm not talking about complaining when something can be done about a situation.

Please, remedy this. There's something wrong here. Please, can you get this repaired?

It's not complaining. Or you go back to the store and say, I bought this here, but there's something wrong with it. It might be called the complaints department, but you're not really complaining.

You're just returning it. And that is, but of course, you could be complaining there too by making somebody wrong and makes yourself right. The ego loves that to be right, but somebody else needs to be wrong.

Otherwise, you can't be right. When you're right, you're superior. So what humans lost this rootedness in being, now they are in their mind completely, and their whole sense of identity is derived from mind.

And that is the unhappy state. That is the egoic identity that creates all the suffering in the world that is unnecessary. And so we need to look again a bit more closely at how it operates.

The ego then is an image of who you are. It's in the mind, and it's reinforced and created and upheld through continuous thinking about me and my life. That's what humans like to think about.

And when you start thinking about your life, you will immediately come up with the fact that your life is problematic. There's a certain heaviness to it. With some, it's more heavy than with others.

And every human inhabits, so to speak, a problematic life situation. Because life is so challenging, it's very unlikely that there's anybody here whose life situation does not contain certain problems or challenges. For some, they are big problems.

For some, they're just a series of small problems. But this is something you can think about. Your life situation is problematic.

And when you start talking about your life, you say, okay, well, it's not easy. I imagine my life to have been unfolded very differently. It's gone, something has gone wrong.

And if you think a lot of it, most of it has gone right, then either you have, this has taken you to a spiritual awakening, and then you're right, or you're deluding yourself. You just happen to be in a temporary space of having just achieved something. And then it's the same thing will make you unhappy, makes you happy today.

Think of the wedding. You developed an image of who you are, and that is reinforced through continuous creation of narratives, of stories. That's me and my life.

And this includes things, bad things and good things. Bad things that happen to you, they become part of the conditioning of your mind. What he did to me, what she did to me 10 years ago, oh, my God, I have to think about this every day, what they did to me.

And of course, I'm not denying that bad things are done to people by other people. Developing an identity on the basis of something bad that was done to you years ago, or even last week, but let's say years ago, to develop an identity on the basis of that is strengthening the fictitious sense of self, the ego. So it's important that we recognize the ego, so that when it comes up strongly in us, we can immediately be aware that this is the ego, and then we are no longer in the grip of the ego.

Then what happens is the awareness begins to rise more and more. And the pattern, the conditioned mental patterns begin to no longer have complete power over us. We are no longer completely identified with the fictitious self.

And the fictitious self is a huge troublemaker. It loves trouble, because it gets stronger through creating the other. It needs, it can only define itself through the other, what I am not.

And so it compares itself continuously to others, this mental image. Even a child would start with that already, like a four-year-old or three-year-old. It jumps over something, and then you ask the other child, can you do that?

Will you do that? Look, I can do that, but you can't. Oh, that's the ego.

Or a toy, another child wants to play with the toy. No, that's mine. And of course, as the child grows up, other possessions, then it becomes something else, the car, the house, whatever.

Body identification is one of the very first things that humans create, a mental image of me and my body. And then you see, this can be a source of pride. If you say, my body is better looking than most bodies, I'm better looking.

And then people who are very beautiful or physically very strong, inevitably develop a very strong ego that's associated with their body image, mental created sense of self. There's nothing wrong with being happy if your body is healthy and good looking. Enjoy it while you can.

Why not? Knowing it's not going to last, that's okay. I'll enjoy it.

But the question is, do you derive your sense of self ultimately from that? In which case you are in for a lot of suffering. But if you do not derive your ultimate sense of self from it, you can enjoy it.

Yes, in the same way that you can enjoy a possession, so it's always ultimately a thought that you identified with. My house, my car, my this, my that. In mythology, there's a figure called the fool.

The fool is a human whose mind is undeveloped, and the fool is quite happy because the fool is below ego. The fool exists below the conceptual mind. And so there the fool is.

In more recent literature, for example, the hobbit in Lord of the Rings is a bit, he's a simpleton. He, all the other characters are more developed, but the hobbit has something that is more rooted in being. He doesn't have too much of a mental image of himself.

And in mythology, only the fool can do certain things that the more mentally developed humans cannot do. And that's a very interesting fact because the fool is still more connected with being, hasn't left being completely yet. And that's a very interesting thing.

However, it is not our destiny to return to that state that we have left behind, which is the state that is below thinking. Yes, we would become free of a lot of unhappiness if we did, but it would be an evolutionary regression. And this is not the destiny of humanity to regress.

However, many humans are longing. They don't know it, but there's a deep longing in humans to become free of this Dutch problematic self that they want to get rid of this burden of themselves without knowing it, they wouldn't say it like that. And this is where, of course, the huge drug industry comes in because many kinds of drugs give you a little taste of self-transcendence.

Even a simple thing like a few whiskeys. If you pour yourself a whiskey and you go, I feel so unhappy, I need a drink. I've just so much on my mind or on my plate, they say, but they really mean my mind.

So, okay, you, oh, it's not so bad after all. Let's have another one. Oh, it feels even better.

I can't even remember my problems anymore. Let's sing a song. Well, if two are good, three must be even better.

Yeah, it is. Let's have another. You are moving towards unconsciousness.

You are soon going to join the cabbage, the evolutionary stage of cabbage, which is fine for the cabbage, but not for you. The cabbage fulfills its nature by being a cabbage, but it's not your destiny to return to the cabbage later. So, if humans exist on the level of thinking and derive that sense of self from thinking, and there is no way except drugs take you temporarily below thinking, and it can be a temporary liberation.

But there's a price to pay, as you know, if you indulge in drugs, there is a price to pay, and the deliberation is only temporary, and it does not take you in the direction of human destiny, which is, let's put it like this, rising above thinking, transcending thinking. It doesn't mean you don't think anymore, but a dimension of consciousness has arisen in you that is higher, or we could say deeper, than thinking, and that is awareness, and that is presence. And once presence is there, thinking becomes a wonderful tool.

You can use thinking to create. You can use thinking, or the human mind, for all kinds of wonderful purposes, but you are no longer used by it. Now, for the first time, you are using your mind instead of your mind using you and pretending to be you.

That is the awakening.

[Speaker 2] (44:24 - 44:44)

I'm Oprah Winfrey, and you've been listening to Eckhart Tolle, Essential Teachings, the podcast. You can follow these essential teachings on Spotify or wherever you listen to podcasts. If you haven't yet, go to Spotify and follow this podcast.

Join us next week for more enlightened teachings from Eckhart Tolle. Thank you for listening.

Eckhart Tolle We're Born Connected To Being [d34d9548-4e43-461c-aa75-ca428102bff7]

We're born connected to being. In this podcast, Eckhart talks to a live audience in Hawaii. He says aloha to the crowd and then explains the spiritual meaning of the word.

He also mentions stillness, which he says is the essence of who we are. He defines stillness as the absence of internal noise and the incessant stream of self-centered harmful thinking that keeps us from realizing our being. He says looking into the eyes of a baby is a spiritual experience.

The baby looks back and the light of pure consciousness shines through. He says all who hold the baby are moved and something deeper awakens. Eckhart believes we are born connected to being, but we're not fully aware of it.

Aloha. Although I will probably be talking quite a bit, stillness is the essence of our retreat and also, of course, the essence of who you are. I wrote somewhere, you are never more completely yourself than when you are still.

Stillness is not just the absence of noise. In English, you have the words silence and you have the word stillness. We could say that silence refers to the absence of external noise and stillness refers to the absence of internal noise.

And what is internal noise? The incessant stream of continuous compulsive and to a large extent, not only unnecessary, but very often harmful thinking. Not the creative thinking, empowered thinking, but self-identified thinking.

But if we describe stillness as an absence of something, stillness is also the presence of something. Well, not of something, it is presence itself. So that's the essence of our retreat, which is identical with the essence of who you are in the depth of being, because you are all human beings.

The human is the person, that's how I use the words, the human is the person, the personality, the conditioned entity. Everybody has one and if you are completely identified with it, you don't have it, it has you. The personality, the conditioned entity is there and that's all you know of yourself.

And then you miss the most beautiful potential of human existence and that's the realization of being. And no matter what the person, the personality, the human, no matter what it achieves in this world, it's fairly meaningless, in ultimate terms fairly meaningless and also it won't satisfy you, not for long. As we are here, Aloha is the way in which people greet each other and also say goodbye.

There's more to this word than meets the eye or rather meets the ear. There's a deeply spiritual meaning to it. Aloha also means kindness, compassion, loving kindness.

It describes ultimately a state of consciousness. And then I did some more research, extensive research on the word Aloha, in other words, I googled it. And I found the etymology of the word, the origin of the word is Alo and Ha.

And Alo, it seems, according to reliable sources on Google, Alo means presence and Ha means breath, the presence of breath. Now breath is a term that in many spiritual traditions, many different spiritual traditions, breath is a term that is equivalent to spirit. But Aloha points to what you recognize in the other when you greet the other is the presence of the indwelling spirit or being.

And that's beautiful. And this indwelling being or presence is what I sometimes refer to as the deep I as opposed to the surface I, I the first person, I. The surface I is the human and the deep I is the being.

So you are in the process in this incarnation of becoming a complete human being. You start with a being but you are not conscious of it, you are connected to being before conceptualization arises in your mind. There is a natural connectedness with being which you can see when you look into the eyes of a baby that hasn't learned language yet, hasn't learned concepts yet, and the baby looks at you and you can see the light of being or consciousness shining through it.

Not a thought in the baby's head, no judgment, just... And then when a human looks into the eyes and feels deeply touched, they don't know why, they say, it awakens briefly, it awakens something in them that deeper dimension. They cannot find this when they encounter a grown-up human or even a child that's already learned conceptualization, then it's not quite as easy to connect with a being because something obscures it, the stream of thinking and conceptualization, and an identity that is derived from the stream of thinking and conceptualization obscures that deeper essence.

So you are born with that essence, you are naturally connected to it and then you are destined to lose it, not lose it but become disconnected from it as if it were in the same way that if you were the richest person, it's a stupid analogy but analogies are always limited, if you were one of the richest persons in the world and you had all this, but you didn't know it. You have all these accounts in Switzerland with a billion dollars in it but you don't know that you have an account in Switzerland and so you are a beggar. So can we say that you are poor or you are rich?

In the same way we can say that to become disconnected from being is as if you were disconnected from it, because ultimately you are not disconnected from it ever, but you are completely unaware of it. You have fallen into an unconscious state and then you begin to suffer. And then eventually, because suffering is everybody's spiritual teacher, even if they don't have any other spiritual teacher, suffering is everybody's spiritual teacher and eventually in this lifetime or some other, suffering brings about an awakening.

What the actual spiritual teacher does, on this level here, he, she, whatever, saves time. You don't need to go through this enormous amount of suffering because you begin to realize that, you begin to realize how suffering arises within you. It's the teaching of the Buddha, who summarized his teaching by saying, I teach suffering and the end of suffering.

That's the summary of the Buddha's teaching. I teach suffering means I show you how suffering arises. And then the end of suffering is I show you how suffering can end.

But no human comes to a teacher unless they have already had their share of suffering. And that's why you are here. If you hadn't had your share of suffering, you wouldn't be ready yet and I wouldn't be here certainly, if I had had a fantastic early life, first 20, 30 years of my life and great childhood and happiness and perfect environment, everything going great, great starting a career, nothing going wrong in the career, perfectly healthy, then you have perfectly healthy children and a beautiful, fantastic marriage and everything is wonderful. Anybody who has up to now lived through what I just described, is not going to be here. They may be busy on their couch, binge watching Netflix.

Then they hear about something about awakening, what's the point, I'm awakened already. So again, the Aloha greetings to be used respectfully and with awareness of its deeper meaning. In the same way that you have in India the Namaste greeting, which is also equally beautiful and meaningful and profound.

Namaste literally as far as I know means I bow to you. Now that you does not really refer to the person or the personality because on the level of the personality that you may be an obnoxious jerk. So you cannot bow to an obnoxious jerk.

The you refers to something deeper. I bow to the divinity in you, the essence of who you are, the being that is hiding underneath the surface of the personality, perhaps not able to shine through yet because the personality is too dense. It's a density to it.

And this total identification with the stream of thinking never stops. And the entire identity is derived from the narrative that continuously arises and is continuously reinforced in their minds. Now some of you still have remnants of that.

So as you come here, that conditioned mind-made entity, the self, that conditioned self, you probably haven't left it behind at home. It's hard to leave it. It always tends to come with you wherever you go.

Wherever you go, you find yourself. And sometimes people begin to notice that, for example, in relationships, they tend to encounter similar problems from one relationship to another and another and another. Why do I always meet these obnoxious jerks?

And then they may come to the wrong conclusion. All men are obnoxious jerks. Or the equivalent for women.

Whatever the equivalent of obnoxious jerk is for women, I don't want to go there. You need to be careful in these sensitive times. But I'm sure there is an equivalent term for it for women.

So why are they all like that? And then you draw a conclusion. That's how it is.

And from then on, this conclusion, which is a thought that gets lodged in your mind, this conclusion that this is how they are, becomes the veil through which you perceive every man or every woman. It's just one example. It can happen in many different ways.

Then it becomes a heavy veil that you can no longer perceive or relate to the reality of the other because it's obscured by this very overpowering judgment of a conclusion that you have drawn. This is how it is. This is your expectation.

And once you have decided every man is an obnoxious jerk or the other way around, then you seek that in the other. Every time you meet a man, the obnoxious is going to come out any minute now. And then you might even want to draw it out just to try.

So the conditioned personality, which is fine, everybody has one, as I said, it travels with you on planes and on boats and in cars. It's always there. Sometimes you think for a moment it's gone now and perhaps it is withdrawn.

And then somebody says something, a remark, something, you get triggered. And these personalities are becoming more and more sensitive these days, it seems. That's why young people are particularly sensitive.

Apparently, I read about it, they need trigger warnings. Any moment now something might trigger you is going to come up. They put trigger warnings in literature, in old books, because there's something that might upset you.

Be careful. And the trigger, of course, there's a reactivity. The reactivity strengthens the egoic self, which is the personality, the egoic self.

Now, as I said, everybody, of course, has a personality, but the question is, are you the personality or do you have it? Everybody has one, but are you completely identified with this conditioned entity or is there deeper awareness of something that transcends this conditioned entity? And that can arise in a simple moment of alert stillness.

So, in that simple moment of alert stillness, who are you without any narrative? Because if there's no moment of alert stillness, there's no narrative that says something about me, my life. My life is a heavy thing.

It's what people call my life is a narrative in their mind. The title of it is my life. And people carry this heavy burden.

Many people have a fairly unhappy my life story. Unhappy is the burden of all the things that have happened to me, or maybe even things that I did or shouldn't have done. It's all part of my life, what people did.

My failings, my successes too, yeah, it's great. Some of it might be great, but then I lost it again. My life.

In the moment of stillness, the narrative subsides and there's not what is left of you when the narrative that tells you who you are subsides, even for a moment, like now. Now you cannot say what is left of you, but you know that there's something left. You cannot name it because it's beyond concepts.

However, it's a spiritual teacher's job to point to it, even with concepts. But they're just concepts, like little signposts. And one of these signposts is, for example, what is left in that moment of stillness.

The realization that you are, but not what you are, that you are. In other words, a sense of presence, one could say. Not just an absence of thought, yes, also an absence of thought.

But a presence, but not the presence of something. One could compare it to space. The space in this room allows all the content that is in this room to be here.

The human bodies, furniture, there's the ceiling and the walls and so on, there's this room. But the vital thing about this room is the space in this room. Because otherwise there wouldn't be a room.

So the essence of it, you cannot perceive, it is not something, but it enables everything to be. So in the external world we have this strange thing called space, which is not a thing. Nobody knows really what to do with it, does it ever end.

Outer space, because this space in this room goes on, there's more space than in this room. And then you look up into the sky at night, just vast space, nothing but space except some lights in space. You could reduce the entire universe, or reality so-called, as consists of two things.

The world, let's say, consists of two things, things and space. There are objects everywhere, there's the tiniest objects and the vast objects, the sun, the moon, the stars, planets, galaxies. But they exist in this vast space.

So the world consists of space and things in space, one could say. But space is the essence of this room. And when you look up into the sky at night, and you are overcome by a sense of wonder, and it might stop your mind if you really look into the sky.

That was my first ever meditation when I was an adolescent, maybe 15. I loved looking up into the sky, and it stilled my mind. I didn't know that's what it did.

But I looked up into the sky, and there went a sense of, this English word, awe, is very strange, isn't it? Because it's onomatopoeic, which means it imitates, the word imitates what it signifies. Like the word knock-knock, which is called onomatopoeic.

Oh, A-W-E, for those who don't, English is not your native language. I believe it is, A-W-E. Oh, wow.

Socrates said, philosophy begins in wonder. Wonder is you don't know. And wonder is awe.

So when you look up into this vast space, yes, it is filled with the most amazing things, galaxies, millions and billions of galaxies, and every galaxy is a universe. But even greater than the galaxies is the space, it's the vastness of space itself. And there is an equivalent to what we perceive as outer space within you.

And in the same way that this outer space enables everything to be, there is that inner space that enables every thought and every sense perception to arise. That is consciousness itself. That is the inner space.

And now when we go into that stillness, what is left of you is a sense of inner spaciousness, awareness. All we can say is, you know that you are. This is the I am.

But you don't add anything to it. In that sense of beingness or presence, you have no age. It doesn't matter whether you are 20 or 90, that in itself you have no race.

You have no gender. Sorry about people who are so interested in gender, but at the deepest level, the essence of who you are has no gender. No age, no gender, no...

And that is what the Buddha referred to as emptiness, sunyata, which I would prefer the translation of spaciousness. And of course Jesus refers to it as the kingdom of heaven, which is within you. And as you might know in my translation of this term, kingdom of heaven, my translation of it is different.

For contemporary humans, I re-translated it. Kingdom is dimension. And of heaven, heaven is the sky.

In most languages, sky and heaven are the same word. The dimension of the sky. But what is the sky?

Spaciousness, vast spaciousness. So he very cleverly or wisely used this thing in the so-called outer world. He used that which is closest to that inner realm of consciousness itself.

And that is the vast spaciousness of the sky. So dimension of spaciousness is kingdom of heaven. And it is within you.

And that's all. That is the essence of our retreat. In case you are in a hurry and want to get back home.

More important things to do. One thing after another. And everything demands your attention.

And you sort something out here. And then something goes wrong there. So, in the ordinary state of consciousness, which is a state of unconsciousness, the human is obsessed with objects.

Not only external objects, but objects of consciousness, of thoughts. Every thought is an object of form that arises. So the human mind in its unconscious state is cluttered with stuff.

One damn thing after another. That was Churchill's definition of history, human history. But it's also the definition of the human mind.

The unobserved human mind. And so that could be part of what travels with you. That could have come with you here.

So, something to look out for while you are here on this retreat. Your mind. Watch your mind.

That's a saying that I learned when I was many, many, many years ago. Visited a Buddhist monastery a few times. And the monks, when they get upset with another monk who talks too much, when they would like to say, What did you shut up?

They don't say that. You are not allowed to say that. But they say, watch your mind.

And if the person that they speak to is extremely unconscious, the person will of course reply, You watch yours. So here, a few practical considerations connected with this. Don't feed your mind with things that amplify the clutter, that add to the clutter in your mind that to some extent is already there.

And one of the things that adds to the clutter of your mind is the thing that everybody carries. Some people, their hand is beginning to adopt this shape, even when they are not holding it. I believe in a couple of hundred years, most hands will look like this.

And my suggestion or my recommendation is, because this adds unnecessarily to the clutter of your mind, I'm not talking about helpful text messages that convey some interesting or useful information that you need. That's fine. But people get this thing out when there is no particular reason for getting it out, simply because they need to fill this moment with something.

You see people waiting for the elevator. Why can't they stand there for one minute in a state of peaceful beingness? No, they have to get out.

And if you are not getting out yours, somebody next to you is getting out theirs, and somebody there is there, then you get out yours too. And then randomly you go on something. Oh.

And more clutter, clutter. This is an amplification of the clutter that was already there, because before the clever human mind came up with these devices, the human mind was already cluttered. And now it's cluttered even more.

So I recommend that you refrain from useless use of the device, or use it as little as possible while you are here. Certainly not randomly get it out and go swiping. Another recommendation I have in order not to add to the clutter of your mind is please refrain from turning on your television.

Okay, I'll try. So if you substantially reduce the amount of time you spend with your device, that's a big gain, do not be afraid of nothingness, no thingness in your life here. Do not be afraid of sitting or standing somewhere, just contemplating the environment, or being in your room without the need to fill this moment with something.

The compulsion to continuously fill this moment with something. It is amazingly wonderful to be able to sit in your room, not for hours on end, you don't have to overdo the beingness, because life is a dance between doing and being. Now, I don't teach doing, because everybody is already great at doing.

They are overdoing and overthinking, because thinking is doing also, the thinking is doing, not just external doing. So everybody is great at doing. There are some workshops and teachings you can go to that teach you how to do more or better, that's fine.

But here the emphasis is on the being dimension. The human needs to find the balance between being and doing. This is the teaching of being, because being has largely been lost, the awareness of being, and that's a huge loss.

It's a critical loss. It makes the individual human unhappy, and it leads to the breakdown ultimately of civilization, because with the loss of the being dimension, no civilization can survive for very long if there is not at least some connection to being. Even though we are all aware that the established religions to a large extent have traditionally been taken over by the human ego in the search for power and control, we all know that, and yet that is all true, but there has always remained a remnant of, a little bit of an opening into the spiritual dimension, just a remnant that there was still a possibility.

Maybe you go to church, and you hear the teachings of Jesus, and at some level something seeps in, and you go for a moment. Take no thought for the moral, for the moral will take no thought for the things of itself. The old translation is, look at the flowers of the field, how they live.

They are not anxious or worried about tomorrow, and yet look at all their glory, and so why do you? So perhaps they hear something like that in the church, for a moment, or in that beautiful space of a temple or church, for a moment they experience something. So religion, yes, it provided also some structure in the human psyche, that is on a more superficial level, that is not necessarily a bad thing either, but the connectedness with the transcendent.

In Buddhist countries you have still a little bit of familiarity with the southern Buddhists, the Theravada school of Buddhism. You have the monks, and not every monk is enlightened, and in fact most of them are not, but that's fine. They practice, some are.

Some criminals become monks to escape from the police, but that's another story. But they still practice the teaching of the Buddha, they chant the teachings every day, and they receive their sustenance by going on alms rounds every day with their bowls, begging bowls, and then to the people who live in the village or the town, they put a little bit of food, so there's a connection, and they have great respect still for the monks, and there's a connection to this, some opening into the transcendent dimension.

Eckhart Tolle What Is Essential Is Invisible To The Eye [9036c9d4-274b-4266-91bb-ad5e015953f6]

What is essential is invisible to the eye. In this episode, Eckhart jokes with a live audience about a video game that's been reviewed in the New York Times. He wonders if his work could be having an impact on mainstream culture after all because the name of the game is stillness.

That's really funny. He goes on to answer questions about such topics as trusting our feelings and how to eliminate conflict in our lives, especially when the opinions of others differ from our own. His answers may surprise you.

[Speaker 1] (0:35 - 53:32)

I get the newspaper delivered to my hotel room and when I looked at the front page of the New York Times this morning, I thought something weird happening. It's not about fake news. Has our gathering manifested an alternate reality line, stream?

That's just a speculative thought. An article on the front page of the New York Times about a video game, the object of which is stillness. On the front page of the New York Times, why would they...

We must have had an effect on the collective consciousness to make this happen. I'll just read a few lines to you. The game is called Walden.

The video game based on Thoreau's 19th century retreat in Massachusetts will urge players to collect arrowheads, cast their fishing poles in the tranquil pond, perhaps even jot notes in the journal, all while listening to music, natural sounds, and excerpts from the author's meditations. The lead designer came up with the idea as a way to reinforce our connection to the natural world and to challenge our hurried culture. The object of the game is simple, stillness.

Thoreau was sitting in a moment when life was beginning to speed up and he identified that asking, are our lives better because we now live on railroad time? We have to ask ourselves the same question today. Are our lives better because we live on internet time?

Good, things are changing. Some questions that people have sent in. Can we trust our feelings?

Are you able to say something about intuition, which is not the same but interests me as well? Can we trust our feelings? Now often you hear people say, trust your feelings.

I would suggest, however, that that's not necessarily true. Acknowledge your feelings, yes. Be there as the observing presence for your feelings, yes.

Be aware of your feelings, accept that they are there. Trust, which means to take them to be the truth or the truth for you or using them as a guide to correct or skillful action that may be doubtful because it depends where these feelings arise in you. A little anecdote from my life to illustrate that, when I lived in England in the country in that alternative town Glastonbury for three years, I lived in a cottage and once a month I would travel to London or other cities in my beloved Russian made Lada car to do a workshop.

And usually a weekend workshop called things like transcending time or be here now. Nothing much has changed except that the average number of people I had was about 10. And since my income was not enough, I had to rent out a room upstairs in my cottage.

I advertised in the local paper, several people came to apply and finally chose a young woman who had just been offered a job in that town. She came, she moved in, and after the first night in her room, she came down for breakfast into the kitchen, which was a shared kitchen, and she said, I can't stay here. I said, what's wrong?

It's just a feeling. I always listen to my feelings. I just can't stay here.

There's something not right. So I was very nervous. And I said, okay, that's fine.

And she found that very disconcerting because she had expected a more conventional response, which would have been, what? I've interviewed all these people. I've chosen you.

And now what? You're doing this to me. You're not getting your rent money back that you paid in advance.

But I said, okay, I'll give you your money back. It's fine. So she was even more confused after that.

And he said, I'll spend one more night or two more nights. She spent the second night. And then in the morning she said, no, I think I'll stay.

I have a different feeling now. And I said, oh, that's fine. That's good.

And again, she was a little disconcerted because the conventional response would have been, which I did do, I just put another ad in the paper. And now you're telling me this? The conventional responses are how to make life complicated for yourself and others.

But it's normal. It's how the ego responds. And so whenever somebody does not respond in that way, life becomes simple.

But when life becomes simple, people who expect the conventional responses become confused. This is a weird person. And so she decided to stay.

And a few weeks later, when I got to know her better, she explained to me that that first night she was in her bedroom and she said, I found you so weird that I thought you might creep in in the middle of the night and murder me. And later she said, living in the same house with you is like living in a float tank. I think she learned a lot, not so much through me explaining things to her, just by being there.

So feelings. Now, where did her initial feelings that she experienced, that she then believed that they were a correct guide for action? Of course they were not, because they originated in fear.

And they also originated in a misinterpretation of reality, which is so easy to do for the mind, to misinterpret another person, to misinterpret a situation. You misinterpret because you see it through the conditioning of your mind. You see it through your beliefs, your prior experiences in childhood.

You see it through even other things that have conditioned your mind. Maybe even scary movies about weird people who don't say much. And then just when you're having a shower, they creep in.

Therefore, it's not that easy often to say, where does this feeling that I have arise? Where does this feeling originate? Now, does it come from a deeper, the intuitive place?

Intuition comes out of being present. Intuition does not come out of the conditioning of your mind. So if you have an intuition, also it is usually not tainted by negativity, such as anger or fear.

So there is something certain about it. There is a quiet strength behind your feeling, a quiet strength. There's not a nervous energy behind your feeling.

You just know this is right. You may not be able to explain to yourself or others why, as a different quality. There's a more peaceful quality to it.

Through life experience, you have to find out for yourself what a deeper feeling that comes out of presence and is a true intuition, how it is different from something that arises from the conditioning of your mind. Now, a lot of the time, people misinterpret reality because they look at reality through the veil of their conditioning. And that contributes to a huge amount of conflict in life, in relationships, and so on.

And not only they misinterpret, they add this what I call unnecessary baggage to situations through their reactivity, which is an ego device in order to strengthen the ego's always deficient sense of identity. So coming back again to that story, what had happened, if I had reacted in the normal way, becoming angry and accusing her when she said after one night she couldn't stay, and that would have strengthened, it would have come from my ego, it would have strengthened my sense of self, the separate sense of self. And again, if the reaction had been when she finally decided to, after the second night, decided to stay, I could have again said, now I've just spent, I mean, it wasn't that much, an ad in the local paper is relatively cheap, but the ego would have dwelt on that and said, now I've spent that, and all these people that I already said they couldn't come, now they have already found accommodation, I would have again made somebody wrong.

And the ego loves that, to make somebody wrong, because when you make somebody wrong, and you would be, the ego could even explain, you're totally justified because that's not fair, the person shouldn't just change like that. But instead of saying how people should be, if you just, this is what is, you can either accept it or you cannot. I could have said also in practical terms, when after the second night she said, I've decided to stay, maybe I could have said, oh, it's too late, I've already found somebody else, or I'd said, no, maybe it's better if you do go, because tomorrow night you might again, after tomorrow you might again not want to stay.

All these things are possible, but the situation remained simple, because of non-reactivity. And this applies to so many cases, whenever things do not go smoothly, because a person does not do what they're supposed to do. And then immediately the ego constructs a narrative.

And you know it when you start telling other people about it, that strengthens it. So I could have picked up the phone and said, you know, this girl, I rejected five other people for her, know what she's done to me? And then listen and tell the story.

So satisfying to the ego. And then the person on the other end says, oh my God, you're so sorry. And then of course, I could have gone into thinking, oh, maybe she's totally neurotic, maybe she's a psycho.

All spinning tails in the head, all kinds of things. There's a whole fictitious narratives that are taken for reality. How simple things can actually be, if you don't add unnecessary reactivity to it.

But in order to do that, it requires you to be present, not to be there as a person, because a person feels easily offended. Vigilance is required in your interactions with people. Always the question, am I adding something to the interaction that is unnecessary, that is just there to strengthen my fictitious sense of self, to justify something, to make somebody wrong, big thing for the ego.

Because if I can make something wrong, there's always an element of victimhood. When I make somebody wrong, in relation to myself, there's always an element of, it may not be the main focal point, but there's an element of me being the victim, if I make you wrong. And the ego loves that, because it strengthens itself through that.

And if I make somebody wrong, you know what he said and what he did then? Let me tell you about this. Oh, how can somebody do something like that?

And this means unconsciously, I'm always superior to the other when this happens. When you're telling the story about what somebody did and said to you, you do it because the ego, when you're telling, when you're making somebody wrong, because when you are right. Now you probably all know people in your life, when they tell you things, it's always others who are wrong.

It's never them. It's very strange. Why is it that I'm always right and others are always wrong?

They never ask that question. But it's a mystery of human existence. One of the great mysteries of life is why I'm always right and others are always wrong.

I think philosophers haven't explored yet in detail enough and nobody has resolved this mystery and everybody should ask themselves, how is that? I must be really superior to everybody. Weird.

So if you think back, the last year or two or three in your life, well, I'm actually talking to a group of people here who are much more conscious than the average human. But nevertheless, even here, some of you may find, if you look back the last few years, that whenever there was some kind of argument or conflict, perhaps it was, was it always the others who were wrong? It's very easy to deny somebody's perspective if it conflicts with your own and make them totally wrong.

You can also make a group of people totally wrong. An entire group, an entire nation, an entire religion can make everybody wrong. It's great.

You feel stronger and morally superior. Now, does that mean there are not people who are deeply wrong because they might be, there may be people out to deceive you. You might go and buy a secondhand car and the person is so friendly and kind and he sells you something that just breaks down the next day and it's clearly lied to you.

What do you do then? And even then it's important not to amplify what has happened by going into your mind and creating a whole string of narratives in your mind of what an awful person that is and coming to all kinds of conclusions about that and tell the story to yourself and to others and amplify it in that way. And then you go back to him and then you tell him really what you think of him.

Rather than keep it simple, what action can I take to remedy this? Even if you go to court, you can do it in a detached way. I'm not necessarily saying never do anything, just put up with anything and anybody.

It's just, that's not what it means. Even if you go to court in order to rectify a situation that is obviously wrong, you can do it in a way that is detached and just keeps it to the, just the essentials of the situation, practical without the whole superstructure of you are the evil one, you are wrong. So you can practice that in many, many situations in your life.

Refrain from calling up people or telling people what other people, and tell them about what other people did wrong or how they failed, how they were deficient, how somebody lied to you, was dishonest or expressed an objectionable opinion. And then conflict becomes almost eliminated from your life or 90% of it. We have some related questions, so I'll answer them as one.

How do you suggest one find balance and maintain presence regarding current political issues and situations that seem so dangerous to freedom and humane policies, both for our presence and when interfacing with others? How to deal with that within ourselves and when relating to others? And one or two similar questions, for example, any tips for how I can be a good citizen who does her part to stand against social and environmental injustice while simultaneously staying true to my own awakening and my need for tranquility?

What I've been talking about just now, and this, there's a relationship. When you communicate with others, let's say about political situation or whatever it may be, we communicate verbally or in writing or just have a monologue in your head. People have monologues in their head.

This is normal. The important thing to avoid so that ego doesn't come in is again to make other human beings wrong. To make wrong who they are.

I'm not talking about what they do, but to make wrong who they are. There is a difference. You can criticize what a person says or does, but if you then use whatever this person says or does and say that is his or her identity, then you've created an enemy in your mind and that is a dangerous thing to do because it strengthens the unconsciousness in the collective energy field and produces a corresponding reactive effect in the other, and then there's a mutual strengthening of that and that leads to huge conflict and you get more and more trapped in your ego and in being right. So if you can take action and communicate, take action, without having your sense of self invested in it so that you point out your perspective, you explain it, you substantiate it, you illustrate it. This is how I see it.

This is how the situation is. This is what we need to do or be careful of. All this is fine.

You can attack another person's point of view or perspective without attacking who that person is. You attack it by showing that it is not right and presenting an alternative so that your communication is not just pointing out what in your view is wrong, but also suggesting an alternative so that there is the positive and negative both coming in. It's extremely satisfying to the ego to make people wrong and entire groups of people wrong.

So you have to be careful with that. The prerequisite for being able to do that is that you need to, and here we come again to the foundation for it all or conscious living and conscious doing. The foundation is that you derive your sense of identity from that deeper place of consciousness, of presence.

You are the awareness. You are not the thought. The thought is fine, but if there is self-seeking in the thought structures, that means you are identified with your thoughts, which being identified with your thoughts means seeking your sense of self in those thoughts.

So then when you present your opinion or your viewpoint, you are so identified with it that anybody who even questions, not even attack, anybody who questions your viewpoint or perspective, and this is unconscious, deeply unconscious ego, anybody who questions your perspective or viewpoint, which you don't know is a perspective or viewpoint, to you it is the absolute truth because you're identified with the thought.

Anybody who questions it will be regarded as somebody who is attacking who you are. He is actually an enemy, your enemy. And this is the essence of unconsciousness, to be identified completely with your mental positions.

But how can you not be identified with your mental positions if you have never known the deeper place within yourself where your true identity resides? So if you tell somebody, don't be identified with your mental positions and your thoughts, your perspectives, your viewpoint, don't mistake them for the absolute truth, they don't know what you're talking about and they can't do, what do you mean? That's all there is.

So the foundation for being able to use your mind consciously instead of being used by your mind, which is the essence of unconsciousness, the foundation for that is find out who you are in the essence of your being. And that is here and now, the consciousness that you are, the awareness, the presence. That's what's left when right now you don't remember your history.

Right now, you don't remember even your name, unless I ask you, you're not thinking your name, no, okay. So you can be yourself without remembering your name. And if I don't ask you about your history, right at this moment, you probably don't remember any of your personal history unless you go there, you have to retrieve it in your mind, but you don't need it now.

Now does it mean you cannot be yourself now? Does it mean if you don't remember your telephone number and your email address and your personal history, you can't be yourself? No.

These are just things that are added onto you. But even without remembering any of these things, I don't remember my email address. I don't remember my name.

I don't remember my history even, but in here I am sitting and perceiving, can you feel yourself? Can you feel the essence of you right now without the memory of you? Yes, in fact, you can feel it more strongly, but you cannot define what exactly that is.

You can sense this inherent presence that you are, and you can sense it and that inherent presence is the same whether you are a huge success story in the eyes of the world, you are a big VIP and a celebrity, there may be one or two here, not that it makes much difference here, or you may be somebody who has failed in everything that he or she has done, a failed career, three failed marriages, many other failed relationships, bankruptcy, gone to prison, then come out of prison, then come back into prison, made a mess of the whole thing, total failure, and yet in the moment of not remembering your history, that sense of presence is exactly the same as that sense of presence of the VIP who has a big success story.

That is the unconditioned consciousness, the presence that frees you from your personality and your person, and also connects you to a much vaster intelligence, the intelligence that underlies the entire creation that is behind everything, the organizing principle behind the physical universe, the intelligence that gradually expresses itself more and more into this world. The light, I call it the light of the source, like the sun, the sun shines its light into this world, the sun is the source of the light. Now the source of the world, we could call, if God means anything, then God is the source of all life.

And of course, the source of all life has no location in space or time, obviously, it's not somewhere in the universe God lives. God is transcendent to the universe. It is the source.

God is the source of all life in the same way that the sun is the source of all light. And so the relationship between your consciousness, which is not your consciousness, it is universal consciousness expressing itself through you, the relationship between that consciousness that you are and the source is the same as the sun and the sunlight. So the consciousness in you is the light of the source or God's shine.

The source itself, you cannot know, it is totally beyond anything that you could possibly even understand or think about. And yet you are inseparable part of it in the same way that this ray of sunlight is an inseparable part still of the sun. And yet the ray of sunlight would be both right and not right in saying, I am the sun.

If the ray of sunlight says, I am the sun, in one way it is true, but in another way, it is not true because the sun is so much vaster than the ray of sunlight. And yet it is a emanation of the sun and it is eternally connected to the sun. It is always one with the sun.

So as you know, there have been mystics in various traditions, in Sufism, for example, it's not uncommon, mystics have said, suddenly they realized after they went through their dancing, the mind stopped completely and presence arose. And of course they lived very simply. And they came to that realization of their essence identity.

And then they said to others who did not have the realization of their essence identity, they said, I am God. I realized it now. I'm God.

This was not well received. And many of them did not survive for long after that. So I don't recommend it either.

Although you probably won't get killed, but they will send you to see someone and be given some pills. So that is the foundation is to know who you are. Then you can use your mind in a way that is, that is actually very effective, but it's no longer egoic, no longer in the service of ego.

It no longer becomes the ego. The unobserved mind is the ego, the human ego. There's just the mind.

It does what it does and you think you are it. So the foundation for it all is consciousness becoming conscious here and now. Conscious of what?

Usually when you read about consciousness in normal discourse, it's always raising consciousness. You read about it in newspapers and so on. They talk about raising consciousness, but it's always raising consciousness about what?

So it could be raising consciousness about the environment. It's a good thing to raise consciousness. Yes.

Raising consciousness about certain political situations, raising consciousness about certain injustices here and there. It's all very good, but more fundamental is raising consciousness, period. I'm not talking about raising consciousness of something that comes secondary, secondary.

Raising consciousness of consciousness. Be aware that you are aware. Be aware of awareness.

And that is the light of God. If you're comfortable with that terminology, that is the light of God in you. And that is exactly what Jesus meant when he said, you are the light of the world.

The difference between a person like Jesus and the people he was talking to was he fully realized his essence identity and the others didn't yet fully realize their essence identity.

And yet their destiny is to also realize their essence identity. Now, in our mainstream culture and science, of course, they will tell you, well, first of all, we have examined the brain.

We know quite a bit about the brain, but in reality, we know very, very little. Scientists don't even know what a thought, what is a thought? What is the material, physical representation of a thought in the brain?

Nobody knows. What is the relationship between thought, between the physical brain and consciousness? Mainstream science will tell you that most of them, there are a few who are beginning to doubt that the mainstream narrative, it will tell you that consciousness, if they even mention the word, most of the time they don't even talk about it because they have no idea what it is and you can't examine it under a microscope.

And when you cut open the brain, you will not find consciousness. In fact, when you cut open the brain, you will not find nothing of you. 99% of who you are is invisible.

It does not exist in the physical realm. Only your physical body, but who you are, your thoughts, your emotions, and the underlying consciousness, it's all invisible. There's a lovely, I believe it is a little work of literature.

There's a beautiful phrase, what is essential is invisible to the eye. What is essential is invisible to the eye. Beautiful and very, very true.

But that means all the things that are essential in human life, of course, love, joy, a sense of aliveness, all your emotions, all your thoughts, they are invisible to the eye. Consciousness is invisible to the eye, which means you cannot find it with your senses. You can't see it or touch it.

So the big question about consciousness is what is the relationship between the physical brain and consciousness? Undoubtedly, there is a relationship. There's no doubt about that.

If you hurt the physical brain, you will lose consciousness. That's a conventional expression. As I often say, if a brick falls on my head, hopefully by saying it, I'm not manifesting it right now.

If a brick falls on my head, I will not be able to continue to speak. Is that proof that consciousness is produced by the brain? Many people will tell you that that is proof that consciousness is produced by the brain and the conventional expression is consciousness is a by-product or an epiphenomenon of the chemical soup in the brain.

Many scientists actually deny that consciousness even exists. I don't know where they're going with that because to be denied, to deny that consciousness exists, you need to have consciousness. And they don't want to go there because it's so unknown.

They realize they cannot dissect it. So it's better to leave it alone and to say only we live, still live in a materialistic age. Materialism in its philosophical and deeper meaning doesn't mean that you're interested in money.

Materialism in the deeper meaning means that you believe that physical matter, that everything in this world can be explained with reference to physical matter, atoms, molecules, and basically matter. Of course, if you go more deeply into physics, materialism disappears because you realize that matter is a kind of illusion. There is no matter.

If you go deep into the atomic structure and beyond, you realize there's nothing. This is what I perceive as matter. It's just rapid movements of atoms and molecules giving me the illusion that this is matter and the same in my body.

Ultimately, there is no matter. And yet there's still within conventional science the belief that the universe is matter. It can be explained with reference to matter.

So does the brain produce consciousness? The other possibility is that the brain receives consciousness and channels consciousness into a particular form that then creates your experience of the world and creates you. That consciousness is the organizing principle behind the formation of the brain.

In the same way that a radio or a television does not produce the program that you watch, I can destroy the television set that happens to be showing an orchestra playing the Ninth Symphony. And then I destroy it. Have I destroyed the Ninth Symphony?

No. It's no longer transmitting. It's no longer functioning as a receiver.

Science will come to that realization and there are already some scientists who have enough courage to question conventional interpretations. And it's usually scientists who are approaching retirement age because before reaching retirement age, it would be too destructive for their career to go outside the mainstream interpretation. But once you reach retirement, you've got nothing to lose.

You can speak out. And so that's a good thing. So the greatest mystery in the entire universe is not the infinity of space, or magnificent as that is, or the infinity of subatomic space, the macrocosm and the microcosm.

That's mysterious enough and we know little about it. But the greatest mystery of all is the fact that the universe is conscious. That is so incredible.

The universe is conscious. How do I know that? Well, it's self-evident.

I'm conscious. If I'm conscious, it means the universe is conscious. So that is the self-evident thing.

The one thing that you cannot question, the one thing is beyond doubt about you and me is that you are conscious. All the rest could be an illusion or a dream that you are having right now, that we are actually in this room. Somebody is talking and saying, maybe you're dreaming.

That could be a dream. You could be dreaming your whole life. And there's a way one could even say that you are being dreamt by the universal consciousness, that the entire universe that we experience is a dream that happens within the universal consciousness.

You might be dreaming, but even if you're dreaming, there's a consciousness needed for the dream to happen in. And so that's the very foundation for who you are is conscious. Your essence identity is timeless and you cannot analyze it.

You cannot know it in the same way that you know an object. Jesus used the word kingdom of heaven or kingdom of God to refer to it. What that is is consciousness, kingdom of heaven.

Heaven is sky and sky is an analogy for vast spaciousness. So it's a wonderfully adequate and suitable analogy for spaciousness, formless consciousness itself. So that's why Jesus used sky.

The dimension, the kingdom of heaven is the dimension of spaciousness, formless consciousness, timeless consciousness. And where is it? The kingdom of heaven is within you, in the midst of you.

There are various translations. Now, what does that mean when he says you cannot say, oh, there it is, or oh, it's over there. It means the kingdom of heaven cannot become an object to your consciousness.

You can't say there it is because if you're looking for the kingdom of heaven, as people have, they've projected mentally what kingdom of heaven is, although he said, don't look for it. He said, oh, it's going to come when we die or it's up there somewhere because he used the analogy of sky. So traditionally, people who have misunderstood, it's kingdom of heaven must be up there somewhere.

That's for sure. And since it's not here now, probably when we die, we go there and up there. If you're looking for the kingdom of heaven or you're looking for God, it's like you're shining a light and you say, where is it?

I'm looking for myself. I'm looking for God. I'm looking for the kingdom of heaven.

It's not here. Okay, let's look somewhere else. No.

And you can look in time. Maybe it's in the future. It's in the past.

No, it's not there. It seems to be nowhere. But where you haven't looked is that beam of light with which you are looking emanates from the kingdom of heaven.

It emanates from the source. It is an emanation of the source. And you were looking for the source and you were using the emanation of the source to look for the source out there.

But you have to, what you have to do is then stop looking and place your attention back in, go back where the emanation comes from. Oh, oh, that's it. There it is.

I am it. I was looking for it. And now I realize that I am it.

I was looking for myself, but in all the wrong places. So truly people who are looking for God, they're really looking for themselves and they're looking for themselves in the wrong places. If we say kingdom of heaven, that sounds a bit more inspiring.

Wow, kingdom of heaven on the other hand, it's very easy for you to project and completely misunderstand what that means. So it's so inspiring that it creates a mental concept or mental image, whereas kingdom of heaven is totally beyond any mental concept or mental image. So the very thing that was meant to point you beyond any mental images, that's why you used heavens, spaciousness, formlessness.

The very thing that was meant to point beyond it is then misused by your mind in its attempt to form mental concepts and images. So you use the signpost that says there and say, oh, I have it. So on the signpost it says kingdom of heaven that way.

Well, that way, kingdom of heaven that way. And then you pick up the signpost and says, I got it. I got it.

I completely believe in this signpost. But this is just to be aware of this, the light of consciousness in you, that's a foundation for sanity in this world and for bringing about a different world here. And only then can you be free of the egoic mind.

And instead of being used by your mind and mistaking it for who you are, your mind can be in the service of that greater consciousness that can flow through you. And that's called inspiration. You can be inspired.

You can speak in an inspired way. You can produce something in an inspired way. You're inspired to come up with a new idea for new creativity.

It is also an emanation that comes through you that affects people around you, even if you don't say anything, consciousness. There's a perennial question that comes up again and again and again. And it seems to be important to many people and it seems to present a dilemma to people.

You talk about being present and trying to quiet our thinking and stories we attach to what is in front of us. I want to know how do we do this and still plan for the future? That's the perennial question.

How to be present and still plan for the future? Well, quite simply, you plan for the future in the present moment. You say, what do I want to do next year?

Okay, you take a calendar, a schedule and say, I have to do this. People come and say, what do you want to do next? Where do you want to go?

We've got an invitation to go there and there and there next year. Then I look at the calendar and look where are these places? How many places can I go to on this trip?

And then look, but it's all in the present moment. So that does not mean that I'm losing the present moment. But if I put this aside then, and then go into seeing myself traveling to this new country, let's say I'm going to Russia for the first time in September, and that's great.

But if I spend days thinking about me in Russia, and what will happen there, and seeking some kind of thing, oh, that'll be really great. Or, oh, I don't know what's going to happen to me. Are they going to like me there?

Am I going to get a good translator while I talk? What if they completely misunderstand me? What about the political situation in Russia?

I'm not sure about that. Or projecting some kind of fulfillment. When I get there, that'll be really great.

Who knows it'll be great or not great. That is losing yourself, going off, but making plans is fine. Projecting, there's an interesting thing that people are very interested in.

I don't know if there's enough time to address it now, but how to manifest things. Let's say when you are present, it may be that a vision comes to you, something you want to create or achieve. I'm going to set up a, whatever, or if you're here, perhaps, I'm going to set up a healing center.

Okay, this is just, it came to me. And then you can, the essence of manifestation, which I don't often talk about, because I talk about more fundamental things, but there is a, manifestation is a wonderful thing. If it comes not as an ego need to find some kind of pseudo fulfillment, but from a deeper place, and then you can actually visualize having a healing center in some detail and feel, but in a controlled setting for 10 minutes, I can feel that it's already there and it feels wonderful.

But really what feels wonderful is your presence now. And if you bring a mental image into the presence now that feels wonderful, and you bring the two together, that's the power behind manifestation. It doesn't mean that you need to achieve this image in order to be fulfilled or happy, because you're already fulfilled and happy now in that presence.

Presence is the foundation for your fulfillment and happiness. And if you hold that presence and then you bring an image into it, and mix the two together, then that is the play of manifestation. You do not desperately need something to happen so that you can finally find some kind of fulfillment in this life.

When I have this healing center, then I'll really, I feel I will have achieved something. No, that's postponing and thinking something in the future is going to do something for you and make you feel more complete. You need to come from completeness already.

Then manifestation is a game, a beautiful game that the universe plays. It's the game of form. So you are present.

Then you have a mental image and it won't be egoic because when you are present, the ego subsides. If you then have an image, it's something that the universe wants to create through you. And that's a beautiful thing.

And then you bring the image and the presence that you sense together. That means, as Jesus put it, he only made one or two comments about how to manifest. He says, when you pray for something, feel that you already have it, and then it'll be given to you.

That's the secret of manifestation, but you can only feel that you have it through presence. Presence is already the fulfillment of everything that you could possibly want. But it doesn't mean you no longer manifest or create anything.

The universe delights in creation and creativity and it will delight in creation and creativity through you. It can also create without you, but there are certain things that you are required for. So you bring the mental image and the sense of intense presence together and that will produce the feeling that it's already there.

Whatever it is you want to create is already there and you feel the same satisfaction that you would feel as if it were already. In fact, when you do get it, you will feel exactly the same as you do now. And that's the secret behind manifestation.

And then you just hold that image. In addition, you may have to take some action. You cannot just sit in your room and not move.

No, that time may come when humans are more advanced as a species. It may well be that you can manifest instantly. Of course, you won't need a healing center anymore then.

You can manifest instantly the few things that you might still need. They pop up. In the meantime, however, you just create whatever wants to be created through you by bringing presence and the mental image together and sense the intense aliveness that's there.

And then you take action. If you hold that image several times, then you will also find yourself taking action towards it, inspired action, without thinking, without ever going into stress about it. Never stress.

The moment stress arises, ego has crept in. Intensity, yes, but no stress. Huge difference between intensity, which is very joyful, and stress, which is not joyful.

So that's the secret. Thank you.

Eckhart Tolle What The World Needs Is Wisdom [1ba331fe-2804-4d7d-9cfd-589afcb17327]

What the world needs is wisdom. In this podcast, Eckhart talks about the life-changing wisdom we acquired when we stop compulsive thinking. He says wisdom is very different from intelligence and that true wisdom arises from a place beyond the kind of intelligence that's generated by the mind.

Eckhart explains that even though thinking is a necessary function, we're too dependent on it. He says most of us learn at an early age to memorize, dissect, and label everything. Eckhart explains that this fragmented sense of knowing robs us of a more profound understanding of the world and stops us from honoring what is sacred.

He says wisdom cannot be measured by IQ tests and that the world will not be saved by more knowledge. Instead, he reveals that what the world truly needs is wisdom.

So you experience the world either through the conditioned mind or through the awareness behind it. And this is why I need to mention another important spiritual practice, especially while you're here, but hopefully also when you leave here after the retreat for the rest of your life, the spiritual practice of perceiving the world around you directly through awareness instead of through the mental faculty of compulsive naming, interpreting, and so on, which is quite normal for many people. The moment they perceive something, they call it something, classify it, name it.

But the spiritual practice is to perceive something visually, through visual perception, auditory perception, or other perceptions, and be so present that the perception arises in the space of awareness, the light of consciousness. In the light of consciousness, whatever it is that you see or hear or feel or touch or taste or smell, that you are the awareness for the perception. For example, you look at a flower, let go of needing to name it, relate it to something, wanting something from it, remembering something that reminds you of something, this or that.

And what is it called? I must know. All these things can be helpful and are sometimes necessary, of course, to be able to manipulate concepts.

It's necessary in this world, but I'm not teaching the manipulation of concepts because you're already, everyone is a master of manipulation of concepts already. That's not what I need to teach about here. The teaching is, we want to even call it that, is not to be trapped in conceptualization.

To transcend also means you no longer use it. The ability to use it is actually enhanced when there is a deeper dimension. So you're not trapped in conceptualization, and when you don't want it, you let it go.

And there's a deeper connectedness to whatever it is that you are perceiving. For example, the flower, or many other beautiful things in nature, it's a kind of desert, but the desert is intensely alive. And so you're looking at something and you hold the perception, let go of the compulsive naming, and then there's a deeper knowing.

You can know this flower without calling it anything, but at a deep non-conceptual level, that's awareness. You become the light of consciousness rather than a person. There's a shift.

So you can either look at one thing like a flower, a tree, a cactus, incredible formations here, or you can take in the totality of wherever you are and take it all in and be the aware presence behind the perception. Stillness, again, we can use that word, you become, you're still. Then whatever it is being perceived arises in the light of consciousness.

You are the light of the world, as it's a quote from Jesus in the New Testament. You are the light of the world. You, in other words, you are the consciousness in which this world appears.

You're not really a person. You're not really a person. You are consciousness, a manifestation of the one consciousness.

That's an incredible liberation, the liberation from yourself. But you can still operate as a person. You still, all these things still happen.

Even, as I said before, your opinions, everything, you still have your opinions, et cetera, et cetera. You're not entrapped in them anymore. You even have likes and dislikes, but they're not all consuming.

You're not trapped in them. They don't have a hold on you. You're not the prisoner of your mind anymore.

So as a practice here, come to your senses, perceive through the light of consciousness. Let go of the naming. If a name arises, you don't give it any importance.

You drop it. And you bring your attention back to the perception. Something lovely you can do here at nighttime.

The temperature goes down a bit, not a lot. And you can, you sit outside and you can, the warm air surrounds your body like velvet. You can feel it like velvet on your skin.

Ah, sometimes there's a slight warm breeze. There's a wonderful opportunity for sense perception through tactile sense perception. Feel that, that air, be the presence for it.

Or certain noises that you might hear at the same time at night, in the night. There's an alert presence. You are there as an alert presence, not as a person.

The person is still there somewhere in the background, but it has receded. The person has receded and something else has arisen. Another of my favorite ways of describing it is to say, when you're only a person, the conditioned self, the conditioned entity, you operate exclusively on the human level.

You are a human. They're all you. Of course you're human.

They're all humans, but you're not a human being. The being is the transcendent dimension that needs to awaken. When the human has suffered enough, the being begins to awaken through the human.

That's basically how it is. When the human has suffered enough, something begins to awake. I use words to describe it.

Your destiny is to become a human being and you already, you are here because the beingness, the transcendent presence that says, I am without attaching anything to it, the bare, naked beingness, you can sense that, and that is the fulfillment of your life here, which is brief for everyone, the realization of being. The connectedness with the being dimension that humans most likely had before the arising of thinking was there, but not in a fully conscious way. When something is your natural state and has always been your natural state, then you have nothing to compare it to, but it was probably the natural state of humans, and then the thinking began to happen.

It was necessary, a necessary stage in the evolution. Our destiny, though, is not to continue to be trapped in thinking, but to transcend thinking and then actually be able to use thought as a helpful, wonderful, creative tool, but it doesn't give you your identity anymore. So the observation of phenomena without naming, sense perception without naming, it's a wonderful practice.

You can do it when you're, whether you're in your room or outside, be an alert presence. So what happens then, let's again do it here, you perceive the totality of this room without naming. Now, what is there?

You perceive the totality of this room, the people in it, lights, but you're also aware, you're not just aware of what's arising in the light of consciousness, what manifests in the light of consciousness. You're aware of yourself as the consciousness that is perceiving, and that you cannot define it. It's very hard to describe it.

I'm trying to use words as pointers, silent presence. So there's not only what you perceive, there's also awareness of the awareness that is perceiving, the consciousness that is perceiving. So you have these two worlds, the manifested world of things and the world of no thing.

And I sometimes call that space consciousness is the awareness itself, awareness of awareness. I am, that's another way of saying it. All you know is there is a beingness there.

There is a presence there. At first it may seem like not important, it's what is there, something. At first it may seem just like an absence of something.

But then you begin to realize in this absence, there is a presence. And there's a power that is, there's a silent power that is in you that far transcends who or what you are as a person. And when you sense that silent power that underlies everything, then you suddenly have what is conventionally called self-confidence.

Now conventionally that means you have confidence in your person, that your person is good enough or knows enough or is beautiful enough or is strong enough. Whatever it is, you have that self, I am self-confident. No, this is something, this is the Buddha would say, that's the no self confidence, the confidence in the no self or the confidence in the transcendent self.

So when you sense as habitual thinking subsides for a moment and what's left is at first an absence. And some people become uncomfortable because the first they notice it as an absence and then they immediately say, oh, I don't want that. And then immediately they go back into thinking.

But if you stay with that, what seems like an absence, it seems like you have disappeared. It seems like you don't know anything anymore because when you're not naming anything, what do you know? When there's no concept in your mind, what do you know?

On the level of concept, you don't know anything. And so the habitual egoic mind is afraid of that. And so many people jump immediately, jump back into the habitual mind.

And yet if you stay with that, what seems like an absence, there's a subtleness to it. It takes a while to notice that fully, for the awareness to fully arise. Whenever one talks about it, one creates a duality.

And then you begin to notice it's not just what the Buddha described as emptiness. This is one way of looking at it, which is the very secret of life is that the emptiness that underlies everything. But emptiness really, a better translation would be spaciousness.

And Jesus talked about it as he called it fullness, the fullness of life. I want you to have the fullness of life. Same thing, seems the opposite, but that is life prior to manifestation.

You can become still. It's not really becoming still, it's discovering the stillness that's always already there. So it's nothing to achieve.

It's not an achievement. It's a discovery. And somehow the state transmits itself to some extent.

And that is why it's helpful to be here. There's a transmission of that consciousness beyond words, especially in between the words. And it arises in many of you.

And that is very helpful in this as an energy field of arising presence. And we don't even need, don't need to call it meditation because meditation is fine. If you have a meditation practice, it's a good thing.

But this is the arising of a natural state without necessarily going to say, okay, now let's meditate. Let's do a meditation. But meditation can be very helpful as long as you have, do not have in your mind the thought that is something that you're doing because the moment you believe meditation is something that you do, you've created time because all doing requires time.

So if you're doing a meditation, you require time. You require a future. You will have a state that you want to achieve through time in future.

And that's, that's the obstacle to the realization. So there's nothing to achieve. There's only a discovery of what already is there within you.

So the realization of being cannot really come with doing because it's already there. This wonderful, the liberation from the person that you thought you were, this is why the word liberation is in spiritual traditions. They use that word liberation and it's inherently even joyful to know yourself as consciousness is joyful.

It does not depend on your life circumstances. If you're say happiness depends on life circumstances, then you're dependent on what's happening around you. You're at the mercy of what happens or fails to happen.

So we have the, while you're here, the practice of as much as possible, not naming sense perceptions, but just being. Easy awareness, one practice. Refrain from complaining internally and externally.

And another, I would add, notice that you're breathing. Breathing is always a very powerful portal into awakening. Just notice that you're breathing as much as possible.

Well, no matter where you are. Why is that important? You cannot notice that you're breathing and think at the same time.

The Buddha never said, stop thinking. He said, be aware of your breath. That's a cunning way of saying stop thinking, but it's an easy approach.

So there's only one thing that's the essence of this retreat, well, the essence of everything. There's only one secret. Well, it can't be a secret, I'm talking about it.

And that is the arising of awareness, cessation of thinking, arising of awareness. Then you drift back into thinking. Now, if you are able voluntarily to step out of thinking, that's an enormous achievement.

The achievement is to stop thinking. The realization in itself is not an achievement. People sometimes, I have been asked, what's your greatest achievement in life?

And I said, I don't have to think when I don't want to think. Is that all? Now, fortunately, I will never have to apply for another job again.

Not that anybody would, somebody who says, I don't need to think. You could add, though, if you add, and it would be true, I'm quite good at thinking, but I don't need to think. Maybe then you would get a job, I don't know.

But that is the transcendence of compulsive thinking. And only then can thinking become a wonderful tool. But you have to free yourself from your mind and discover who, or we could say, what you are beyond the mind.

And in some meditations, people ask the question, who am I? It's a, some recommend this as a meditation to ask yourself, who am I? But then not look for an answer on the level of concepts.

It might even be better to ask yourself, what am I? Because whose probably implies that you're still a person. Who is inquiry after a person?

Now, what you might say, well, that, what would be a thing? Well, it's not a thing, but it's not a person either. What am I?

Who or what am I? The answer is in the silence after the question. So there's no conceptual answer to the question, who or what am I?

So that's all the, if you, maybe some of you get it completely now, that what the secret is. Now it's only a question of living it. Everything changes with that.

The way in which you deal with things, with situations changes. When you're no longer trapped in the egoic self, it's a reactive mode of the egoic self that amplifies every problem that arises, gets amplified through the reactivity of the egoic self. This is why the world is full of drama continuously in people's personal lives and collectively.

Every reaction to an arising challenge just usually makes it worse. You amplify it. And then drama arises, which the ego loves.

It loves its drama and talks about it. So the way in which you deal with situations changes because you no longer oppose reality. You no longer internally and externally oppose the isness of things.

You're aligned with what is. That's why this practice of not complaining is also very important. To become aligned with the experience of this moment, the way in which you experience this moment.

You're aligned with that. Even if it's far too hot during the daytime, it's just so hot. Well, that's your experience of this moment.

You don't need to just be with it. We go in the shade or in the air-conditioned environment until nighttime. And then you go out and, ah, your experience of this moment.

You don't resist your experience of this moment. So the way in which you deal with things becomes more effective. But the key word here is what arises is wisdom, which is different from intelligence.

Wisdom arises from awareness. Intelligence can be the conceptual mind has been trained to classify, to memorize, to dissect, and to talk about things. This is the intelligence.

This thing you perhaps you can measure in IQ tests or whatever. But the much more important, a deeper faculty is the wisdom that arises, can only arise in those humans who have become human beings and thereby have accessed the dimension of awareness. That's where wisdom arises.

Wisdom doesn't attack one problem. It sees the totality of the situation. And then whatever solution it comes up with will take into account the totality.

Intelligence is a focus. It attacks the problem here. This is what we need to do.

But it disregards all the things around it that will be affected by whatever action you take. Wisdom always sees the totality of things. And wisdom is inseparable from presence or awareness.

It's not conditioned. The world is not going to be saved by humans becoming more knowledgeable in more information. Aren't you drowning in information?

So it's not, we don't need to become more intelligent. The world is full of intelligent people who are creating havoc. They're probably of all university degrees and they're crazy.

But what is needed is the arising of wisdom. It is inseparable from the awakening to who or what you are beyond the person, the conditioned entity. And because that is where intuition arises, where insights arise, where creativity arises, all from that deeper level.

Every creative person has some access to it, usually only in the area of their creativity. They have some access to that transcendent dimension. And usually most of them in the rest of their lives, they are just as crazy as everybody else and sometimes even more crazy.

So there, for any creative thing to arise, you need to have some access, whether it doesn't matter what your activity is, whether you're an artist, or a musician, or even a scientist, to have a creative insight, a really creative insight that comes from a deeper place. It's a realization. You go, ah, that's how Einstein's theory of relativity came to him.

Yes, he was thinking, thinking, thinking, thinking. But he also had the ability to be still. He was famous for kind of drifting off into stillness.

He already did it as a child. He was always very slow, but there was stillness. Nowadays at schools, they want a quick reaction.

The people will say, I know, I know, yeah, yeah. What's the, I know the answer. And Einstein was not like that.

He was always, hmm, well, hmm. Any creative endeavor comes from there. So an important thing, what use this time that you're here, not just the sessions that we are having, but every moment, make it part of the retreat practice.

Every moment, bring awareness into whatever it is that goes on within you and around you. Step out as much as you can out of the habitual mind. Be the alert presence.

And when you go to sleep tonight, hopefully you're not going to look at your, and then you drift off from there. And then you wake up in the morning and you still have it in your hand. And then you need to know what's the latest thing that's happened.

So when you go to sleep, let go of your devices. Lie in bed, breathe, bring consciousness into the body, which begins with your breath. And then inhabit the body with your consciousness.

This is what I call, as you may know, inner body awareness takes attention away from thinking. And every cell is filled with life and aliveness. But what you sense is inner body is beyond the physical body.

That's a good practice of going into sleep without thinking. You're going to, and if you wake up in the night, which is problematic for many people, because that's where often despair arises and fear arises, anxiety arises. You wake up at three or four in the morning.

Oh my God, what am I doing here? What's going to happen to me? What was going to happen when I get home?

All that's all the bad things that happened last month and the last two years, that was horrible. It's all going to end. Are we going to have a nuclear holocaust?

It's all happening. It may happen, but it's not happening right now. It's not happening now, okay?

And my problematic situation, am I going to get another job? I lost mine. Is that a problem now?

Or do I really need to think about this now? Is there anything I can solve now by thinking about it? No, but I can't stop thinking about it because you can.

Don't believe your mind when it says you cannot stop thinking about it. Just choose to take your attention away from thinking. Become aware of your breathing.

Then the inner body. Hold your attention in the totality of the inner body. Many years ago, this inner body, I liked it so much.

I don't recommend it. I'm just saying what I did. Before in the past, when I woke up in bed with the moon, some of those terrible depressions and feelings of alienation arose whenever I woke up in the middle of the night and I could see the surrounding room and it all seemed alien to me.

It's this horrible feeling described, by the way, in a not very well-known novel anymore by the famous French philosopher Jean-Paul Sartre. And the novel is called Nausea. And it's about how you experience life from an alienated consciousness.

Everything is horrible, alien. And that was for many years until one night I woke up. I mean, really.

And then it was so lovely to feel the inner body. It was new to me to feel the inner body instead of thinking. I wanted to feel it longer.

So I had two cups of coffee before going to bed so that I could stay in this beautiful inner body for longer. Not to be recommended. So this is our first evening, but I have already conveyed to you the secret of life.

So if you want to go home, that's okay. Or we go again into it in tomorrow, which doesn't exist, but you just call it that. And so we return to it in the present moment tomorrow.

That's a contradiction. But it is true, of course, that tomorrow does not exist, that future does not exist, obviously. It only exists as thought in your mind.

If it existed, you would have experienced it at some point. But nobody has ever experienced the future because it becomes the present. It's a mental protection necessary for our practical purposes.

But ultimately, illusory. There's only the present moment. There's only this ever.

Only this, only this, only this. That's not so bad. If there's only this.

I thought there was so much more. There's all that stuff. No, there's only this.

There only ever was this. Only ever will be this. And usually, this is not problematic.

Occasionally, an emergency may happen, yes, but an emergency is not a problem. If it's an emergency, you do something. You deal with it.

But life is not as heavy when you are present. You realize it's actually not that bad at all. Because it's this moment.

And then there's a book. I think it's a novel called The Unbearable Lightness of Being. So it's only unbearable to the ego.

So the lightness of being suddenly is there. You can enjoy life without the heaviness of being just a person. The heaviness of this personality.

The burden of yourself. You can enjoy life without that. That's the secret.

The rest now, of course, is it needs to be lived. And before we finish, just one more thing. It seems that life is full of obstacles to this realization.

Life is full of hindrances and limitations that suddenly arise. Problems of one kind or another. Losses.

Difficult people. That's one of the worst. They're everywhere.

They're everywhere. Difficult. And it seems that life is kind of sabotaging.

It seems some people have this feeling that life is attempting to sabotage your life. Or God, maybe. God isn't doing it.

And you feel, if only life left me alone and I could really practice. No, it doesn't work like that. But the thing is, you need the obstacles because without them, consciousness would not awaken.

It awakens through that which seems to prevent its awakening. A sudden loss. An accident.

An illness. A breakup. Mental problems.

Whatever it may be. Pandemic. Why is life doing this to me?

And consciousness evolves when confronted with difficulties. Even the simple thing of wanting a stronger body. You need to practice weightlifting and jogging, etc.

Which is very difficult for the body. I haven't done this in a long time. You might have guessed.

But weightlifting is hard. What are you doing to your body? You're making life difficult for your body.

Yes, but it's only when life gets difficult for the body, there is an influx of energy. On a physical, that kind of energy, different vibrational frequencies, not necessarily consciousness itself. Well, consciousness in a lower vibrational frequency, which is physical energy.

The body cries out, says, I need more. And then suddenly energy comes. Muscles develop.

And suddenly you feel what before was hard and difficult is now wonderful. But life had to become difficult first for the body. If you had stayed on the sofa watching Netflix with a beer, nothing would have happened.

The body would not have become stronger, but it would have been your comfort zone. Great. So if little things, this is a final thought for tonight.

If little things here take you out of your comfort zone, welcome them. Welcome them. They're all important.

But know the difference between little thing that arises externally and other things arise only internally. So often your mind takes you out of your comfort zone, but there's nothing much happening, but it's thinking that something might be happening. So be the awareness.

Know what's going on in your mind and in your emotional field. What else could be the purpose of your life? But this evolution, this awakening, people are looking for their life purpose.

This is it. Everything else is secondary. What you do, but how conscious are you in the doing?

That's the question. Doesn't matter so much what you do, how conscious are you while you do what you do? Only this matters.

Thank you. Thank you. Thank you for sharing presence.

Eckhart Tolle When The Mind Stops, Awareness Remains [9b9dc941-a939-4f3e-ab92-b71c7a19b51d]

When the mind stops, awareness remains. In this episode, Eckhart talks to a live audience in Arizona. He begins by saying the mind can be a wonderful thing, that we have ability to think, speak languages and engage in creativity.

But Eckhart explains when we get too caught up in the mind, we lose touch with awareness. Eckhart cites moments in history like Nazi Germany, for example, when what he calls a virus of the mind took over and resulted in destruction on a mass scale. Eckhart warns when we create mind made concepts about others as different from ourselves, we become desensitized to their inherent aliveness and we cannot see that in our deepest essence, we are all the same.

Eckhart encourages that by learning from history, we don't have to make the same mistakes going forward. He says looking back at yesterday, he is the perfect catalyst to help us awaken today.

[Speaker 1] (1:07 - 39:03)

My script for today's talk, ladies and gentlemen, people who are joining us remotely have submitted questions. Another beautiful day. I've had an idea for a young person perhaps who is looking for a career, an easy one.

I would recommend study of meteorology. And then upon completion, apply for a job as a weatherman or weatherwoman at a local Arizona TV station. The least stressful job you could imagine.

The weather today will be about the same as yesterday, clear skies. And tomorrow will be the same as today, possibly one degree lower. And the long range weather forecast is very similar.

On a slightly more serious note, modern technology, which in many cases amplifies human unconsciousness is in itself neutral. So it can also be used to help in the shift to a higher level of consciousness. So if you feel a contribution may be happening through you, you may want to consider using a platform and disseminate in whatever form, spiritual teaching or consciousness, the infinite possibilities.

If you're too afraid to speak, maybe you should feel a little inhibited in front of a camera or your phone. You could just do meditations, gazing meditations. Make sure though you're free of thought, otherwise it doesn't work.

There's no predicting how many subscribers you will get on YouTube. Or if that doesn't appeal to you, you could become what is known as an ASMR artist. Some of you may not know what that is.

It started a few years ago. I've spoken about it a few times. It's a phenomenon on YouTube whereby people often don't say anything, but they engage in seemingly pointless activities that make certain noises and that require the viewer's presence.

It's happened spontaneously. It developed. Somebody must have started it 10 years ago or whenever, and then it caught on.

Now there are hundreds or thousands of people doing it, some very successfully. The good ones have a spiritual dimension to it. And there's a need for it in humans, perhaps don't realize it, that there is a spiritual dimension and that need is to get out of themselves, to transcend temporarily the person or the personality by the act of giving fullest attention to certain sense perceptions, which in this case is also visual and the auditory.

People are encouraged to put headphones on while they watch these videos, and then you have people, the people who produce them, they may just have something here that they have usually very sensitive microphones, and they may, for example, be shuffling papers for 15 minutes that make certain noises, or they have a hairbrush, and they go shh, shh, or they make strange sounds with their mouth. It seems very weird. If it's done well, it puts the viewer into the state of presence.

Although some are actually designed to put people to sleep, so that would be the opposite. The whole phenomenon is called ASMR. People claim that it produces a certain tingling sensation in their head and back, and their back, and that is one phenomenon that happens, but the other that's not really recognized is that people become still while they listen and watch, and they have a state of attention. There's a cessation of thinking while they watch and listen somebody produce these noises.

So that was just a suggestion for you. Do you remember the story I recounted in, I believe, in A New Earth? The story of a Zen master who is on a pilgrimage, that's the ancient word for a hike.

He's on a pilgrimage somewhere with a disciple, and so they're walking in silence, of course, except of course a disciple hasn't quite arrived yet at the realization that Zen aims at, so the disciple is walking, but obviously thinking while he's walking. Finally, they sit down somewhere for a little picnic, a break, and then disciple says to the master, master, I've been thinking. I don't quite, still don't get it.

I've been here for five years, and I still don't get what is the essence of what you teach? What is that essence? I just can't get it.

I've been trying to figure it out, but I can't. And the master said, can you hear the sound of that mountain stream? And the disciple said, what mountain stream?

I don't hear anything. The master said, listen carefully. And so the disciple goes, and then in a very far distance, the disciple hears the sound of water of a little mountain stream, very distant.

And then the disciple says, yeah, I can hear it now, master. And the master says, that is something like, that is the portal into Zen, or there is the beginning of Zen. That's it.

That's it. And for a moment, I don't know how long, the disciple actually gets it. Wow.

Wow. And he gets it because his mind stops and awareness remains. And why did that happen?

Because all his consciousness, conscious attention was required for the, in this case, auditory perception. There wasn't enough left, so to speak, to be consumed by thinking. So there was a cessation of thinking and the arising of presence.

The master very cleverly arranged it for him in that way, rather than saying, stop thinking, which wouldn't work. So the disciple got it. In some versions, there's a continuation of the story.

So they finished their picnic, they walk on, and an hour later, by then the disciple has fallen back into stream of useless thinking, of course. And the disciple says, I have another question, master. If I hadn't been able to hear that mountain stream, what would you have said then?

Okay, slight correction in how I told the story before I finish it. When the disciple originally says, yes, I can hear the mountain stream, yes, I can hear it. The master says, enter Zen from there, or from here, enter Zen from there, enter Zen from here.

In other words, that's the entry point into Zen, this one. And then hours later, when the disciple has been thinking again, they're walking again, what would you have said if I had said to you, I can't hear the mountain stream, what would you have said then? The mind is so weird, it never stops ruminations.

And the master raised his finger and said, enter Zen from there, from here. Every point is, these things cannot be explained, you spoil them if you explain them. I just explained it, unfortunately.

The mind, it doesn't stop. You have the mind, such a wonderful tool, such a wonderful instrument for creation, the ability to think that's inseparable from the arising of language, ability to use language. And thinking is a kind of inner talk.

And it grew and grew. And gradually it took over. And so humans lost their connectedness with being, which before the arising of thinking was unconscious, but they have felt that deep.

They did not live in a state of, in a problem making state of anxiety, or if there was fear, it was short lived because there was immediate danger. But there was no anxiety or fear generated by the thinking process, because there was no thinking process. There was no identities that were before the time that Narcissus saw his image in the pool of water and became obsessed with it.

The first selfie, the world's first selfie, me, that's me. And then people began to have a relationship with themselves. I hate myself, I love myself.

Sometimes I hate myself and sometimes I love myself. Loving yourself is certainly preferable to hating yourself, I would recommend it. But it's not the last step.

It's an intermediate step. Beyond loving yourself is no longer having a relationship with yourself. I'm ending the relationship with myself.

Goodbye. This is it. After loving yourself, the next step is simply being yourself.

Oh, then you know that you don't hate yourself, you don't, you can't really say I love myself, because the moment you say I love myself, you have created a duality, I and myself. So who is that self that you either love or hate? And who are you?

And that's a very liberating to be yourself, to not have relationship with yourself anymore. It's just wonderful. And that also means you have let go of any conceptualization of who or what you are, deriving a sense of self from some kind of story you tell yourself, conceptual sense of self.

That's a wonderful liberation because the stories are never that great. Some people have a very sad story of what they call my life. Others have a more pleasant story, but it's still a story and an image in your mind, that's me.

And then you look for your self-worth, sense of worthiness, look for many things there, self-confidence, worthiness, and you try to bring it about. I'm good enough, and so on. And a time comes when you are connected to the being of yourself.

You don't need to affirm anymore that you are good enough, because you are in touch directly with the goodness of life, which is there. The ancient Greek philosophers called it the good, and many academic philosophers, of course, don't know actually what they're talking about. They cannot know what they're talking about because it was based on experience rather than manipulating concepts.

The good. It's strange that in the English language, by some weird coincidence, good and God seem to be very closely related. So awareness frees you from all that, and then the awareness becomes what it always was, but you didn't know it, becomes who you are.

The consciousness is who or what, and there's no duality in it. You can't have a relationship with your consciousness. Without the awareness, you're at the mercy of whatever goes on in your mind, including you have little or no immunity, depending on your degree of presence or awareness.

If there's little or no awareness, in other words, total identification with a stream of thinking, then you are very susceptible to mental illnesses and dysfunctions and even mental pandemics that affect large numbers of people. You may have noticed on a personal level, sometimes it happens that certain thoughts, usually there's a stream of useless thinking for many people, and it goes on and on. There's certain recurring patterns in it, yes, according to the particular conditioning of this person's mind.

And occasionally it happens that one thought or a couple of, a bundle of related thoughts get stuck in your mind, and they refuse to go away. They begin to influence and affect other thoughts, and they spread in your mind. Every thought that arises in your mind is in some way contaminated by one original faulty thought that may be totally irrational, but it has taken possession of your mind in a very minor and held relatively harmless way.

It happens that you say, I just can't stop thinking about this. It just goes, I can't get rid of it. And then you have certain ideas in your mind that are a complete distortion of reality.

And then you look at reality through the lens of, that distorted lens of your thoughts. Any kind of prejudice, for example, is of that kind. Let's say you have a racial prejudice.

Prejudice means prejudice, pre-judgment. So before you know the reality, the judgment has already occurred. For example, in the case of racism, you have a judgment that a certain race has particular qualities that are regarded as negative in some way.

And then that becomes a lens through which you can no longer meet any human being belonging to that race because the conceptualization in your mind has already deadened your perception to the aliveness of that human being. You're totally blinded by the concepts in your mind through which you look at reality. It could also be political.

You can have a certain political views of certain groups of people, as happened, for example, in communism, where suddenly the belief arose and millions of people got infected by it that reality or humanity can be divided into two groups, the oppressor and the oppressed. Now, oppression, of course, existed in humanity and exists to some extent in some places more than others, but it's only one of many factors that determine societies and how they function together. So if you take one and say, this is the only one, the only valid one, that means a huge section of humanity through conceptualization, conceptualizing that section of humanity, you say they are no longer human to you.

The moment you do that, you conceptualize other humans, you are completely desensitized to their inherent aliveness, let alone the ability to relate to them and to relate to them and recognize the essence of who they are, that is the same as your essence. Then this belief takes a hold of your mind and you look, you classify immediately every human being that you come into contact with, is he or she oppressor or oppressed? Once you have deadened yourself to the aliveness of other humans, the next step is very easy and often happens, and that's violence and even killing them, because to you, they are no longer human.

And there is a dysfunction inherent in the human mind which can manifest itself collectively, and then it gets really bad, and it manifests itself, of course, on a personal level. And there are times in human history when this dysfunction becomes magnified. So there are times of collective mental illness that can last a few decades, that can last a few years, and then finally, just like a physical illness, finally it exhausts itself and comes to an end.

So the basic dysfunction that's already built into the egoic consciousness, then in a collective group setting, which could be a country or tribe or religion or a sect, it suddenly becomes amplified. And in a country, for example, millions of people can suddenly be trapped in exactly the same dysfunctional mindset. And usually violence happens then, as it happened, for example, under Soviet communism in Russia, national socialism in Germany, Mao's Cultural Revolution in China.

Millions upon millions killed and if you want to learn about human dysfunction, I recommend reading history books about that. Millions upon millions killed because they were regarded as not human anymore. They had been conceptualized as the enemy.

In a small country like Cambodia, it happened in the, I believe it was the 70s, under the dictator Pol Pot, and the army was called the Khmer Rouge Army. They killed one third of the population, exterminated, totally tortured, put in prison camps. Everybody who lived in cities had to leave the city.

If you had the slightest education, you were part of the oppressors. If you wore glasses, because it means you could read, you were part of the oppressors. If your hand did not show sign of manual labor, you were part of the oppressors.

Immediately sent to labor camps or out to the countryside to work in the fields and starve there, and they did. One third of the population starved to death or was killed, and that was regarded as necessary to bring about a more just world, all in service of the future. So you transform the present into hell in order to create a better future.

The means justifies the end. That's the belief. But unfortunately, that is not the case.

The means corrupts the end, and the end becomes meaningless if you create hell in order to reach it. So it's easily recognized as insane, completely insane. And then at some point, it subsides.

It can't sustain itself for that long. It's an illness. So there are mental illnesses that can affect millions of people, and then they subside.

And sometimes it's smaller groups of people that get affected. You might be aware in Massachusetts in the around 1700, late 1600s, the famous witch persecutions and witch trials in Salem, Massachusetts, and so on. If you look at that, again, there's a group of people there being affected by an absurd and totally irrational beliefs, and then look at reality through these completely absurd beliefs.

And so violence then happened. Many women got killed there. It was obviously a mental illness that affected thousands of people in those communities.

And I believe it was Voltaire, the French philosopher, who said something like, if you can make people believe in absurdities, you can make them commit atrocities. In other words, the belief in absurdities can easily lead to atrocities. That's how he put it.

And the belief in absurdities is a mental illness that distorts your vision of reality. And you're very susceptible to this if there's not sufficient awareness in you to know what's going on in your mind, so that thoughts no longer have the power to completely occupy your mental space. The awareness is that which provides you with immunity against the mental viruses.

And these days, mental viruses can spread very quickly through the media that we have. They can spread around the world within a few hours or a few days. And all kinds of weirdest things happen.

I can see certain things affecting the collective consciousness, which is the unconsciousness, even in our societies here. And you can say, this is crazy. But the people who hold those beliefs don't know that.

In fact, the moment you question it, you become their enemy. I'm not telling you what it is. You have to know for yourself.

I'm here to deepen, intensify the awareness in you, not to convince you that some things that people believe, some beliefs are crazy. You have to see that for yourself. The famous book, 1984, by Orwell, shows how this insanity can, it's a slight, perhaps exaggeration, but maybe not that much, how an entire country and structure of governmental structure can be run by that kind of mental dysfunction and create a kind of hell.

So we have some questions, quite a few submitted from various places around the world. Well, where do we start? Huge choice.

Susan from New Mexico. Hello, Susan, if you're there. I'm so glad to be here.

Oh, I thought you were there. No matter, you are there. My question is about rumination.

Daily, I keep having the same thought loop in my mind. Oh, we've just been talking about similar things. I keep having the same thought loop in my mind.

The theme is one of feeling betrayed, being mistreated, basically being a victim. With the thoughts and images, there's usually resentment and or anger. This thought loop has been occurring over a year now.

I'm having challenges with being the observer. The story seems to be so mesmerizing. I'm feeling frustrated that I'm continuing to have these thoughts about the past.

As I understand, holding on to the past is preventing a higher energy field to come through me. What recommendations do you have for working this issue? Any suggestions on forgiveness and letting go of the victim role so that I can express more of the deep I?

The deep I is the... I don't know if I actually use this term during our sessions here. I sometimes use it.

The deep I is the awareness deriving your sense of self from the awareness rather than from the surface I, which is the personality. So we have the surface I or the deep I. So the thought loop here that you are experiencing is to do with feeling betrayed, being mistreated, and being a victim.

I assume these thoughts and emotions that are recurring again and again refer to actual events that took place. I assume that here. So there is a reliving of the events in the mind and the feeling of being mistreated, betrayed, being a victim.

And there's resentment and anger with it. Been occurring over a year now, so I assume something happened a little bit before that, perhaps. And people did something to you or somebody, one person.

Now, some people have that not only for a year, as in this case, but some people have that kind of thinking, compulsive thinking going on for years and decades, sometimes going back to childhood, being badly treated in childhood or abused in childhood. So you have continuing to think about that. And the more you think about that, of course, the more you feel yourself being a victim of events or usually people, other people, who did something to you.

And you dwell on it and you can't stop it because the mind has a momentum. These thoughts refuse to go away. And if there's not sufficient awareness because of the continuously recurring thoughts, they become part of your identity, your sense of self, and so then you become a victim.

To see the necessity and the possibility of going beyond a victim identity does not deny in any way that something painful happened to you in the past, that something was done to you, that some people did something to you. To see how important it is to go beyond victim identity has nothing to do with denial of what happened. You fully see what happened.

You know that and you know the emotions that it created. But the first thing is, how does a human being, how is a human being capable of inflicting suffering, for example, on a child or on another human? It happens all the time.

It happens on an individual level and it happens even more on a collective level. The ego, the human ego, is dysfunctional enough in the individual, but it's infinitely more dysfunctional and dangerous and lethal when it operates as a collective ego in a group. And the humans who participate in these dreadful things, the perpetrators, when they operate as a collective ego, not a personal, they are capable of far worse atrocities and acts than they would be as an individual.

So in other words, the collective ego is even more unconscious and violent and dangerous than the individual ego. Sometimes when you identify with a collective, my country, for example, fighting for my country, or the collective might be a political party or it might be a religious group. And so people who belong to these entities, sometimes it seems that they become free of ego because they live completely in the service of these collective entities.

I want to sacrifice myself for my country or my religion or whatever. It seems that they are completely free of the personal ego. And same thing happens in sects and cults.

Often people who live in cults, they're totally selfless. They don't want anything. They give everything of themselves.

They want nothing for themselves. They have identified with the group, but of course their ego has actually not diminished. Their ego has become enormously amplified because they now have adopted a group ego and the group ego can only survive and subsist when it has a sufficient number of enemies out there.

The group ego needs for its survival and its expansion because it wants to expand and survive, but it needs the other. In other words, the other is the enemy. So that is how humans are drawn into a deep unconsciousness by identifying with the collective.

You can belong to a religious group. You can even love your country without being identified with and then needing other countries to be the enemy. With awareness, you can appreciate your country and you appreciate other countries too.

They are different. So first you see the need to be a victim identity also unfortunately is a form of ego because any conceptual identity is a form of ego. And even though you seem to be amply justified in having a victim identity because of the things that other humans did to you, you yourself are finding yourself in a kind of prison created by your mind.

So there's no denial of that bad things happen to you. Yes. Now the question is, how do you exit this mental prison?

The first step is perhaps to see that unconscious human beings, unconscious human beings in the grip of their own conditioning, their own ego, they have virtually no free will. When you are unconscious, you are controlled by the mind patterns that are lodged in your psyche. You cannot really speak of free will by somebody who has zero awareness and yet their entire makeup is conditioning from the past.

The famous sentence phrase used by Jesus in connection with forgiveness on the cross, he said, forgive them for they know not what they do. Now these points put together, forgive them. Why forgive them?

They know not what they do. In other words, if he had spoken these days using our terminology, he probably would have said, they are completely unconscious. Because that's what it means.

They know not what they do. They are completely unconscious. So when you see nobody can act beyond their level of consciousness, then you see that it becomes almost like the evil that was perpetrated becomes almost like a natural phenomenon.

That is like you've been hit by lightning or something or lived in very unpleasant climatic conditions that injured you.

[Speaker 2] (39:05 - 39:25)

I'm Oprah Winfrey and you've been listening to Eckhart Tolle, Essential Teachings, the podcast. You can follow these essential teachings on Spotify or wherever you listen to podcasts. If you haven't yet, go to Spotify and follow this podcast.

Eckhart Tolle Why Awakening Leads to Freedom [f231b75d-21ee-47e9-a22d-749259f6dabd]

Why awakening leads to freedom. In this podcast, Eckhart answers questions about why it's important to seek awakening. He also addresses how we can learn to function in a world that seems often insane.

Eckhart says we must awaken in order to free ourselves of suffering. He explains why it's part of our legacy to realize a sense of peaceful aliveness that is independent of our external circumstances. He believes when challenges arise, we shouldn't spiral into unconscious reactivity.

He believes that only amplifies the problem. Instead, he encourages listeners to release their ego and move towards transcendence.

It's so good to see you. Thank you very much for this wonderful gathering. And the big thank you to all of you because that's really wonderful being there.

My question relates to the reasons of awakening. And can you comment a little bit on why actually being awakened is better as emotional state than something that is actually the most popular, which is the state based on thoughts. And when we are half asleep, a bit like this, the way I ask this question is, first of all, I love your teachings and it always brings me an important level of peace and it changes for the better my emotional state.

But I found myself in a difficult situation when the level of fear was very, very important. And at that moment, I was scared about being awakened. I mean, yeah, that was maybe just a moment.

Then it's just, it's not like this anymore. But I have to say that staying with my awareness was kind of too hard for a while.

[Speaker 1] (2:24 - 10:02)

Well, in a way, you have already answered your question because you mentioned that you experience more peace through this, more stability, perhaps emotional stability, not both. But of course, there are still fluctuations. There are still times when you experience fear that rises from time to time.

But the reason, of course, why anybody should be engaged in this, you already realize for yourself, because peace and a sense of aliveness and joyful aliveness, the sense of not being totally dependent on external conditions for your inner state to have a certain degree of autonomy internally so that when you're no longer so reactive, when something challenging happens around you, it does not automatically create huge unconscious reactivity in you, thereby amplifying the problem that's happening.

All those things are part of the transformation of consciousness from the egoic state to the transcendent state, whatever you want to call it. And really, it is an escape from the unhappiness that is inseparable from the egoic state of consciousness. And that, of course, the egoic state of consciousness is still the predominant state in the world.

And so people are trapped in that. The Buddha said that even your happiness is part of dukkha, which is suffering, because the happiness cannot exist without, the high cannot exist without the low. So you experience elation, one day something good happens.

And then, as I said before, every condition, every person eventually lets you down. And so you experience this letdown, this disappointment in other people and the world and relationships and any kind of achievement or possession that you can have that for a while people think the answer is there. Oh no, the answer is there.

It's nowhere to be found. And so the reason why it's very simple, and you know it already, you've experienced in yourself, it's freedom from unhappiness, freedom from the burden of an extremely problematic sense of self, so that you become a problem to yourself. You're a walking dilemma.

When there's no awareness of the transcendent dimension. So it's an escape from suffering. It's an escape from a very limited existence, a kind of bad dream.

And for many people, the dream needs to deteriorate before they become interested in the possibility of something else. As long as the dream is relatively pleasant, you're still okay in the dream. But then the dream changes.

And so the one dream, you have the honeymoon, and then you have suddenly you have another dream that comes out of that one, and that's called the drama and the divorce, or whatever it is, and that it's terrible. And then some people go through that several times. I've met people who've been gone through it five or six times.

Marriage, honeymoon, loving, getting married, a year later, two years later, divorce, and somebody else getting married. Oh, big reception every time. And then everybody lets them down.

Isn't that strange? There must be something wrong with people. They all let me down.

So all this unconscious living, and this is only on the personal level, then you have the unconscious, the collective aspect of unconscious living, which is even more destructive, even more dangerous, and then even more insane than the personal level of ego, the collective ego that people have, that is the ego of groups of people, entities, nations, political parties, religious groups, and so on. Not all, but many. The manifestations of this dysfunction that you have on the personal level, on a collective level, the way it manifests is extremely destructive.

It has manifested the history of the 20th century, just to take one century, look at the first 50 years of the 20th century, a nightmare, a collective nightmare, a collective hell for millions and millions of people. If an extraterrestrial came, maybe there were some observing us. Of course, they don't want to come in contact with the crazy humans.

If they had been observing the first part of the 20th century, they would have to say something has gone wrong there, the extreme collective psychosis. So definitely there's a deep dysfunction in the human mind, but that is part of the evolutionary process. The dysfunction has become more pronounced now because we are approaching, or we have actually reached the possibility of going beyond it to another level.

So that's why we are here. So it's wonderful, and you are part of this process of transformation. So the answer, of course, you already knew it, but now I just reaffirmed that that is how it is.

That's the correct answer, and you know why you're doing it. Sometimes the mind comes up with all kinds of questions. It questions something that you already know, but then it brings up some doubt, because the ability of the conceptual mind to understand the spiritual dimension is very limited.

It cannot really understand. It tries, but it can't. So it begins to question.

This is one of the hindrances that can come in. The questioning mind often attempts to take you out of presence, and it comes up with some kind of thought that questions it all. Maybe I shouldn't be doing all this.

Maybe I should be concerned with something more realistic, whatever the mind says. So don't believe in every thought that arises in your mind. Sometimes the egoic self wants to take you out of presence.

It doesn't like it. The egoic self being a pattern in your mind. So that's how it is.

[Speaker 2] (10:03 - 10:07)

It sounds true. Thank you very much.

[Speaker 1] (10:07 - 10:12)

Yes, it sounds true. That's why we're here. Thank you.

Thank you.

[Speaker 3] (10:14 - 11:14)

Hello. Hello, Eckhart. Thank you so much for everything you do to help us awaken.

My question sort of goes along with the last question. The world is insane, and I understand it's always been insane in an attempt to awaken us. But the issues are so serious today that to not do something feels like I'm spiritually bypassing, or I'm cold-hearted not to feel or take action.

The deeper part of me, though, really wants to be able to watch the insanity and know that everything is happening as it should, that I, Course in Miracles term, need do nothing. Can you help give me some guidance in how to function in this insane world?

[Speaker 1] (11:15 - 20:47)

Very good question. So this question is, instead of to be or not to be, the question is to do or not to do. What is primary is the state of consciousness that gives rise to the doing.

The doing can come out of a state of egoic sense of insufficiency, or anger, or many different egoic states are possible that give rise to doing. And often it looks good, but any doing that arises out of a state of ego usually creates more problems than it solves. It often looks as if the action that you're doing is a good one.

The intention is a word that comes to mind. The intention is often good in people, but they cannot see the wider implications and repercussions of what they do in this world. And the reason for this is the deeper dimension where wisdom arises.

Wisdom is the key word. Where wisdom arises, they'd have no access to it. So all the doing arises out of a limited egoic sense of self.

But even within the egoic sense of self, it may at first appear that this is a good thing to do. Like look at communism, for example. It looked like many people thought it was a really good idea to bring about when communism came into Russia and China.

Many people thought it was a wonderful idea to bring about more, get rid of the destructive system of government, the suppression of most of the populace. It all sounds absolutely wonderful. More equality, distribute, the people own everything, not the capitalists anymore.

All sounded great. Many people in the West, too many intellectuals, thought it was really a very good idea. And initially it seemed like a very good idea because anybody could see how destructive the previous system was that they were fighting against, both in Russia and China, just to take the two examples.

And then they finally came to power and it was great. And then something happened. The egoic sense of self, all the people who were in a position of power or most of them experienced an amplification, an enormous amplification of their ego.

And so I believe that for many of them, probably their intentions were good. They truly wanted to bring about a better world. And then they achieved power.

And power is one thing that will show you something about your ego. Another thing is, of course, also to be challenged by great suffering. But let's talk about power for a moment.

When power comes, when someone is given power, the ego, the latent ego is suddenly blown up, becomes amplified to an enormous degree. And then you get rulers, as you did in communist Russia, who are actually quite insane. And the structures that they create, the Communist Party, for example, becomes an egoic entity.

It's an extremely ruthless and destructive ego. It's an amplification of the personal ego. And so you got this, the Russian Soviet government, they created famines, there were prison camps, millions were killed as part of the communist revolution in Russia and China.

Extremely destructive entities, the collective entities were created, started with a good intention, probably. I'm not saying this to say that no action should be taken, but you need to be aware of the state of consciousness out of which the action arises. If there's a lack of wisdom, then you would probably create more suffering and havoc than before.

So the state of consciousness is that I call presence, is the state of which wisdom arises. Wisdom enables you to see the totality of a situation, not just one particular aspect. And you see, if I do this, it will affect this and this and this.

Wisdom sees that it's not analytical. Wisdom is not analytical if you focus on one little thing, that's intelligence. Intelligence is analytical, you focus on one area that you want to change, but you don't see all the other areas that would be affected by that change and how it would affect the change.

So intelligence is focused, it attacks a problem. Wisdom sees the totality and then, if action is possible, it can take action that does not make things worse than they were before. So this is the challenge, then, to have the state of consciousness in you that is not egoic, so that you can look at a situation and then see what kind of action is possible or desirable.

There are many situations that you may not be able to do anything about in the world. So it's not possible, there are so many areas in the world that are extremely problematic. So if you take any kind of action, you'd already have to choose what area do I want to look at?

And you look at one, but if you take action in one area, it may affect others to other problems, because everything's interconnected. So you'd have to choose, first of all, where you want to be active, and then how do you want to be active? What action can I take?

Or what words can I speak? Because that's action also, sometimes words can change things. So you'd have to see what it is that is possible to do.

And very important consideration, because you have to be extremely alert so that your ego does not come back in. You might start with egolessness, and as you become more involved in some kind of action, at some point, ego can creep back in. I've observed this many times, people start with a wonderful thing, a wonderful, maybe a new movement or something, and it's going, it's working well.

Then at some point, ego starts creeping in, and you know that ego is crept in when you have enemies. So you consider a certain group of people as enemies. That's already a danger.

The ego actually is looking for that. So whenever you see that there's enemies that I need to fight, there's already ego in there. The ego needs its enemies.

You can see how countries too, the entities of collective ego, a country is a huge collective form of ego. If they can't find an enemy outside the country, they will look for an enemy inside, and then this country splits into different groups, and each one considers the other as enemy. It might sound familiar.

The media participates in that, the politicians participate in that, wanting external enemies, demonizing other countries. If that's not enough, have internal enemies too, those that want to overthrow us or whatever it is. So you have to be very careful that you don't create the mental idea of fighting enemies.

And again, when intense negativity arises as you take action, if intense negativity arises, you also know that there's ego involved. The secret is, well, it's not a secret, but the answer is don't lose connectedness with the awareness, the transcendent dimension. From there, you can know what is necessary or possible for you to do.

If there's nothing to be done, how can I hang on to presence watching the suffering?

[Speaker 1] (20:56 - 33:43)

Right. Now, that's again, a good question, because quite often there are situations where you just have to allow the situation to unfold. You can see, and only wisdom can know that.

Through wisdom, you can look at a situation, then you know whether anything that you could do possibly would change the situation for the better. And you can see this has a momentum of its own now, and anything that I do would only make it worse, or it would not be helpful at all. Then you have to allow it to play itself out.

The world still is in the grip of very heavy unconsciousness in many areas, many forms of suffering also through that. I'm talking about suffering that is created by the human ego on a personal level and the collective level. And so, this is not something that you can change as such.

It has to play itself out. All you can do is bring more consciousness into your world, because the world starts with you. It starts here.

But through technology, we can very quickly, we can reach out from our world through computer, media, social media, whatever. You can perhaps be in communication with many people in the world, and perhaps do some good by having a certain type of communication with people, perhaps help them that way. But on one extreme, you have, I don't know if you have, there was a French philosopher called Voltaire, and he wrote a book, Candide, which is a kind of novel.

He didn't write, I think it might be the only novel he wrote. Candide, it's a satirical novel. It's about a man who travels through the world, and the world is totally insane.

It's kind of exaggerated insane, but basically, he shows wherever he goes, it goes from country to country, and every country people are completely insane, and cruel, and malignant, and horrible. And finally, he comes to the end of his journey, and he's in Turkey, I think, and he meets a man who seems quite wise, and he asks him, what about the situation of the rebellion that is here, that's happening here? And he says, oh, I don't know anything about that.

And the man says, all you can do is cultivate, the man has a garden, all you can do is cultivate your garden. That's the famous phrase, cultivate your garden, which is make sure that there's sanity in your immediate surroundings. You can take the garden either literally, because of course, it's good to be in touch with nature, or you can take it metaphorically as the garden, meaning have an area of sanity around you that also affects the world to some extent.

So cultivate your garden is one way that would mean don't worry about the rest of the world, that is one extreme. The other extreme would be, I need to save the world. And then you can active, perhaps the answer lies in between the two extremes.

But not forgetting to cultivate your garden, even while you take, if you do take action one way or another, it's still very important how you conduct your life, your immediate surroundings, how you, your relationships, your close relationships, and then other relationships, all that spreads out from you. That's what you create. In a way, you have two kinds of worlds.

You have the world, your personal world, people you know, what you do, where you move your surroundings. Then there's another world that you mostly have access to through the media. Then you watch the news, then you get communication on social media, whatever.

This is a world that is the secondary world to you, that is happening elsewhere. So here you have your world, which is immediate sensory perception, not through screens, TV screens or other screens or phones. It's just your immediate surroundings, that's your garden.

And that's very important, is not to be neglected. Because there are people who want to make the world a better place, and they have horrible relationships. All their relationships are full of conflict and antagonism, and they want to create a better world.

So you have your garden, and then you have the other dimension of the world, which is what you see when you watch the news, and so on. Sometimes the two come together, because there could be something happening that you see on TV, like the virus, and then perhaps you may catch the virus. So if suddenly something that you only saw on TV suddenly comes into your garden, that can happen.

So they can intersect also. But it's important to be aware of the two dimensions, the world that you have mostly access to through the screens that you look at, and in the past for people that the only world they had was their personal surroundings. They didn't even know, in many cases, what was happening 50 miles away before modern communications.

So all that, and most people spend their life in their town or village their whole life. So we have a very complicated world, because we have all the troubles of millions of other people, we're aware of them through the screen. So it's an interesting situation.

And again, be aware of your garden, make sure that's the same place, and then if that's the same place, then most of the insanity you see on the screen, and sometimes you meet it, it comes into your garden too, that's possible. So you see what is possible to do, but wisdom is to not be reactive, not act out of anger or fear or any egoic motives. Only then can you do some good.

Some situations have a lot of momentum, and the momentum is sometimes so crazy that there's absolutely nothing you can do. It has to play itself out. In the same ways, you might have met some people who you're trying to help them, and you're trying again to help them, and they go through the same destructive patterns again and again, and you're trying to help again.

Sometimes it happens with people's children as they grow up and they do stupid things, and they're trying to help and support them and help, but nothing seems to work. At some point, you have to say they have to experience the bitterness of suffering that they create for themselves. That may be the only possibility for their evolution of their consciousness and coming to the end of their insanity.

But that's perhaps a possibility if they experience... Some people are drug addicted, they reach a point where they can see that either they'll die soon or something needs to change. Some are put in prison, and in prison they begin to wake up and see this cannot go on.

And if you hadn't put them in prison, they would still be on the street. It's interesting. My father was in Germany as a young man.

He spoke up against the Hitler regime, and they put him in prison. Now, he was not... He didn't do it out of some kind of desire to change anything, but he was always very impulsive and got angry very easily.

And then he lost it. He lost... He didn't want to say it, but he had to say it, and then the next day they arrested him.

And at that point, nothing you could have done would have made any difference because the momentum of the unconsciousness was so vast and enormous. A few conscious people were able to leave the country. They removed themselves.

Some others were able to completely focus on their garden, and they survived in that way. And the majority of them got to get drawn into this huge unconsciousness, and then they had to experience the suffering that comes with it. Huge collective karma, collective ego.

And again, same thing in China and in Russia, the Maoist cultural revolution, completely crazy if you read history books about it. Millions were killed. Absolutely, absolute craziness.

And there was millions of people in the grip of psychosis, basically. It's an extreme form of ego, extreme mass psychosis. It can last for several decades or a few years.

And when that happens, there's nothing you can do except cultivate your garden. You cannot fight that huge wave of unconsciousness. But there may be other situations where you see perhaps something can be done here or there or there.

So you have to see how vast this movement is of unconsciousness. And it's happening in the US now, of course. As you see, there's a lot of craziness.

So what to do? Only wisdom can tell you what to do or whether to do anything. And in the meantime, always come back to your garden.

The garden is also your inner being at the deepest level. The garden is your inner state of being, where you can be free. That's the important thing.

The craziness exists out here. But the awakening can only happen ultimately in the individual. You cannot awaken the world.

The awakening happens in every individual. When enough individuals transcend the ego, then the world changes. So my work is mostly concerned with a causal level, not the level of effect.

So the causal level is human consciousness, human unconsciousness, human consciousness. That's the level of cause. And that should also be your primary consideration, is the level of cause.

The next is the level of effect. The level of effect is dependent upon the consciousness that underlies whatever you do. So the world is the level of effect.

Consciousness is a level of cause. So at the deepest level, what Voltaire calls the cultivate your garden, at the deepest level, the garden is your innermost being. And that's primary.

When that is sane, that emanates from you also. Even if you took no action specifically to change anything, it does emanate from you into this world, because all humans are connected in consciousness. There is a collective human consciousness.

And whatever change you undergo in your consciousness is part of the collective human consciousness. So even if you didn't take any action, if you lived consciously in all your dealings in your world, that affects the world. Not only the people you come into contact with, it even affects people you don't come into contact with.

[Speaker 3] (33:45 - 33:49)

Thank you so much. You helped me so much. Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (33:49 - 34:10)

Oh, thank you. Thank you. So let's become still again before we finish.

In fact, not so much become still, but become aware of the stillness that's already there in you.

Eckhart Tolle Wisdom And Stillness [63013faa-292c-485c-9b8b-ad960138dbc8]

[Speaker 4] (0:00 - 0:35)

Wisdom and stillness. In this podcast, Eckhart talks with a live audience about the importance of wisdom. He says the first step is acknowledging the magnitude of what we don't know.

He encourages us to step out of our thinking mind with its relentless judgments and interpretations and step into what he calls aware stillness. It's there that we have access to a deeper intelligence, one connected to our higher purpose to realize our oneness with the totality of the universe.

[Speaker 1] (0:37 - 14:08)

I don't know if you remember reading about Socrates, a Greek philosopher who never wrote anything, he just talked. And Plato, who was one of his disciples, wrote about what Socrates said when he was asked, why does the Oracle of Delphi call you the wisest of all men? He said, the reason why I'm the wisest of all men is that I'm the only one who knows that he knows nothing.

Not many people actually have understood over the centuries what I see as the deeper meaning of those words. Mostly it's interpreted as pretending not to know, feigning modesty, which is a disguised form of ego. It's like saying, I'm the most egoless person of all.

I'm the most egoless person of all. Nobody is more egoless than me, that's for sure. I'm the only one who knows that he knows nothing.

I suggest it's not feigned modesty, there's a deeper meaning, and the deeper meaning is that all his extremely creative teachings, you might know that the teachings all are, he used to teach in the form of dialogues with people. So they would ask him questions and he would ask them questions and finally the teaching emerged out of the dialogue and often he showed that the original premise that somebody started with is erroneous, but it gradually emerges. So I'm the only one who knows that he knows nothing means, as I see it, that he started every talk in stillness.

He did not begin his teachings with accumulated knowledge in his mind, which he then regurgitated. He was able to be so creative in his thinking, very creative thinking. In fact, many people say that we learned, Western civilization, at least, learned how to think through the ancient Greek philosophers and especially Socrates.

He taught us how to think. So he was able to think creatively, use of his mind, he had access to the creativity within him. And the only way you can do that is by not starting from knowledge, but starting from ignorance.

Now, the ignorance, the way I use the term, is not the conventional meaning of ignorance. It's to step out of the thinking mind into just aware stillness. And in that moment, you don't know anything.

That's how I start every talk. It always starts with thoughtless awareness. In other words, I have no idea what I'm going to say.

That's another way of putting it. Thoughtless awareness sounds better, but the truth is, I have no idea what I'm going to say before I start. That is the most vital state for you to become familiar and comfortable with, that state of not knowing, which is there the moment you step out of the thinking mind with its continuous interpretations and judgments, then you're in a state of not knowing when you look at a sky or a tree or another person.

And there's just a background of awareness to your sense perception. At that moment, you don't know anything, not conceptually, you know nothing. Because without thought, you don't know anything, there's no knowledge.

And that is something that could hold you back, because the ego is afraid of that state. It feels, I become as nothing. I become stupid.

I no longer, I'm at the mercy of other people if I can't judge them anymore, and all kinds of things that are obstacles that can arise unconsciously. And they very quickly take you out again of that state of aware, spacious presence. So it's good to look out for that.

There is something in you that's not comfortable with it, is even afraid of it, feels diminished by it. And that's the ego. The ego feels diminished, of course, by not knowing.

The ego has to say, I know. Even to utter the words, I don't know, the ego, it feels like a diminishment to the ego. That space where there's no conceptual knowledge feels, of course, I'm disappearing, and in a way you are.

You're disappearing as a person, and where the person was, something else has emerged. The unconditioned consciousness has emerged. So as you practice with what I suggested here, when you sense perception without labeling, looking at another human being or listening to another human being without any judgment in your mind, in that space of open, alert presence, that's the state of not knowing.

And yet, that's where true knowing actually arises. The creative knowing arises out of there. And the moment may come when you suddenly, out of that not knowing, you say something.

Or out of that state of not knowing, a thought arises. And it'll be a creative, a new thought, an insight. Any creative thought or any creative insight or anything new and creative that comes through you into your mind needs at least a tiny space of not knowing.

And there are many people who are creative in a certain area of their lives, and they don't even know that in that moment of creativity, they are able to be alert and still. It might only be for a few seconds, and then it comes. And anybody who has no access to it, and that is still the majority of human beings on the planet, they have no access to creativity.

Their mind is repetitive. All their thoughts are acquired from the collective mind. There's no creative thought.

They think, these are my opinions, this is what I think. But they're just repeating what they have read, what they have heard, how their minds have been conditioned by the environment, by the media, whichever media it is, doesn't matter. So becoming comfortable with that state of not knowing.

And that's the only place where what we call wisdom arises. Wisdom arises from that deeper place, and wisdom is what the world needs most now. Not more intelligence, because intelligence itself does not solve the problems.

Intelligence itself, without the deeper dimension of awareness, actually becomes quite destructive, self-destructive and destructive of others. So intelligence, you can have a highly intelligent person who does very crazy things with his or her intelligence. I call that intelligence in the service of madness, which is often the case.

You need to be very intelligent to manufacture atom bombs, you need to be intelligent to manufacture chemical weapons, you need to be intelligent to many, many things. There are probably quite a few people here with high IQs, and that's good, because you also have access now to awareness. Then intelligence can be a very fruitful and wonderful thing.

And there are many intelligent people who are tortured by their minds, year after year after year. A highly developed mind, totally tortured by their minds, always totally absorbed in their mind. And in one small area perhaps they achieve certain things, the mad, so-called the mad scientists from the movies.

So become comfortable with not knowing, and in that not knowing, you get access to a deeper intelligence that cannot be measured with IQ tests. Now this not knowing, of course, is a not knowing that has transcended thinking. You have risen above thinking in that state of alert presence.

There's another state of not knowing which is below thinking, and that's interesting too, and that is a simple, very, very simple person whose mind is relatively undeveloped, could be at that state of below thought. That person traditionally is called the fool in mythology, many figures call it the fool. In more recent mythologies it's the hobbit.

The hobbit is a simpleton who, all the people that are with him, they are more intelligent than he is, they know so much more. And yet the hobbit is the only one who can perform this important task. So the fool in mythology has access to something that the more developed mind does not have access to, but the fool is below thinking, and yet the fool has access to that which also when you rise above thinking you have access to, but in a more conscious way.

Now you cannot, even if you wanted to, you cannot return to that state and become a fool. Your task is to dwell above thinking, where you transcend thinking, where you're able to use thinking, of course, but you're not used by thinking, you're able to use the mind. When I say you, it is the deeper you, the consciousness that you are, can then use this mind. Now there are stories from Zen and also in Sufism of spiritual teachers in disguise, a group of people, or a Zen teacher who is working in the garden, and there's several examples of this actually happened, the spiritual teacher by outside observers or visitors being mistaken as fool, because there are certain similarities, so those who do not have that insight will think, who is this fool, they were not told that he's a famous teacher. One person was visiting a Zen master and there was a guy working in the garden, he came in, he wanted to see the famous Zen master, there was this guy working in the garden, and yeah, where is the master, where is, where does, just go through there, through that corridor, and then you come around, and then you'll find him. So he walked into the house, and when he entered that room, the gardener was sitting on the chair of the master, and to his dismay, he realized that the gardener was the master.

There's another story of a band of Sufis traveling, and the Sufi teacher said, when we visit this next town and next person, let's pretend that you are the teacher and I'm just one of the servants, and so they went into the next town and they were received by a wealthiest man in the town, but this man had insight, and he looked around and said, well you may be the teacher, the one who was pretending to be the teacher, but this is the person who is at the deepest level, who is connected to God at the deepest level, and he chose the one, the actual master who was pretending to be just a servant, so he had, he could see immediately. All others would have said, yes, so very interesting. I've also occasionally been mistaken for a fool, and I'm very flattered.

If not a fool, a simple person. So let's see if there are any questions left, probably not.

Good to see you, Erkert. I was sitting there thinking that if I spoke with you, it would be much quicker to get out of my head. I want to ask you, because the thing that I've always struggled with since I was a little kid was who is God, what is God, and what's my relationship with God, and obviously you've addressed that throughout this whole event, but one of the things that I miss is not having a relationship with that experience with God.

I'm almost thinking that there is no God other than who we are. So anyway, maybe if you could bring a little clarity to me on that, that would be great.

[Speaker 1] (15:00 - 23:16)

Right, thank you. It's comforting, of course, to feel that one has a relationship with God, and for a long time, until a human goes deep enough into the source of his or her own being, it can be a helpful and comforting thing, and you can even sometimes access wisdom through it. There's me, and there's God.

Now, how do they come together? And that duality has been around for a very long time, and only the mystics in all various traditions, the mystics in Christianity, Christianity was very careful to have you and God as separate. Its heresy, it has been in conventional Christianity to say that you and God are one, and only the mystics, the Christian mystics, said that, and they were condemned for it.

For you, it is like growing out of childhood, and you feel a little bit nostalgic, because you're leaving this idea that you have a relationship with God, which is a childlike thing. It's a wonderful thing for a child to feel that, but as you move out of childhood, so to speak, spiritually speaking, there is a nostalgia around this. You feel that you have lost something when you no longer have a relationship with God, but that is only the ego self that feels comfortable with having a relationship with God.

What we are doing here is deeper than having a relationship with God. It actually is realizing your oneness with God, and then gradually you move into that, and it's a little death almost, because what dies is your mental concept of God. Many people who worship God, I would say most in all the traditions, they actually worship a mental idol, because they have a concept of God, and then they worship, they speak to that and worship that.

They haven't gone beyond concept, and that is the fate of many, the majority of religious people, have concepts. Now, if you have a concept, then you become very defensive about your concept, because you cannot then tolerate, because a concept is a thought or a group of thoughts. A concept that you identify with becomes ego, so it gives you your sense of identity.

You identify with a thought or a group of conceptual thought, and then you feel immediately, because you've identified with it, you feel threatened by other concepts of God, and so you tend to make the other into an enemy, because their concept of God is somehow different from your concept of God, and because you're identified with the thoughts, you feel threatened by anybody who questions that or who is different, and that's the dark side of a conventional religion, often, that all the others, and not only one religion and the other, even different schools and traditions in the same religion, even in Christianity, there are many churches who claim that they are in sole possession of the truth or true relationship with God.

All the others do not have a true relationship with God, so often these religious people seem quite egoless on a personal level, but they have given up their personal ego, but they have taken on a huge collective ego, which is their church, and as this collective ego, they regard all the others as inferior, if not enemies, so that's interesting. These people often look so spiritual or just very meek and egoless, and yet you realize very quickly that there is a huge ego there that they carry, and it is a collective ego of their group, so our destiny is to let go of a conceptual God that you have a relationship with, because a God that you have a relationship with is a concept in your mind. There are people who feel that they have a relationship with God, and yet, at times, they are able to drop deeper, and then they have this feeling of deep, deep inner peace and aliveness, and even perhaps some insights, and when they come out again, they still come back to having a relationship with God.

They still interpret it in terms of relationship. They don't realize that they're going deeper within themselves. There's no other.

It's the recognition of the oneness of all life, so I realize that you feel a bit sad of leaving that stage behind, and perhaps not even having a conversation anymore with God. You can have a conversation with yourself, but you don't really need that. It's going into stillness deep within yourself, and then whatever wants to emerge from there, then you become an instrument of God, so to speak, and what God, I don't use that word that often, what God does through you, which is the light of consciousness, not God itself, but the emanation of God that reaches you, what that does depends on where you are in your life, whether you become creative, whether you speak, whether you just emanate loving kindness towards other human beings and change the world in that way.

We don't know whether you write or create a structure that does something, even a business that actually brings consciousness into the world, even though you might sell something, but somehow it's associated with consciousness. I don't want to go into this too much. How it manifests varies from person to person.

It's the experience of something that transcends the person, the personality, something transcendent, the transcendent dimension, which is an alternative way of speaking about God, because when you use the word God, it is a closed concept, God. If I say, you can see the difference between using the word God, which is closed, and the transcendent dimension to the universe, the transcendent. Transcendent is an open concept, whereas God is a closed concept.

In that sense, the transcendent is a bit more helpful and less misleading than to say God. But of course, if you've grown up with the term God, then there is an attachment to that, and there is a reluctance to let go. It doesn't mean that you cannot use the term God anymore if you realize the deeper meaning behind the word.

So that's a transition for you to the dimension of depth within yourself. And then you grow out of a more childlike way of relating to God. And that's good.

[Speaker 3] (23:16 - 23:22)

In a more knowing way, correct? Yes. Yeah.

You know it. It's not a belief.

[Speaker 1] (23:22 - 24:46)

That's an important point. Traditionally, God is associated with belief. And the mystics of all the religions in Buddhism, the mystics would be mostly Zen.

But the Zen people came in when Buddhism had already become very much a mental phenomenon, and they wanted to get back to the essence. So when Zen arose, first in China and then Japan, they rejected everything. They rejected the scriptures.

They rejected all mental formations around the transcendent. And it worked. It was a very powerful thing.

And then, of course, when a movement like that is around for centuries, it itself becomes formalized again and mental. So the belief is a transition from belief to actual realization and experience. That is the important thing.

And the moment you experience, you no longer have a conflict with anybody else who has also experienced. And you recognize the truth in other traditions. You can see, oh, there it is, there it is, there it is.

As long as you only have belief, you're in conflict with anybody who has a different belief. Because a belief ultimately is ideology. Thank you.

[Speaker 6] (24:53 - 25:11)

Good evening. My first question is about NDEs, near-death experiences, and what your perspective on that is. And my second question is your perspective on the consciousness of a human being while in the womb.

[Speaker 1] (25:11 - 25:18)

So you're interested in the beginning and the end. Yeah. I didn't think there were.

[Speaker 6] (25:19 - 25:20)

Yes, I am in the beginning.

[Speaker 1] (25:23 - 36:20)

What's at the beginning? And what's the end like? Every human being is consciousness manifesting as a temporary form, taking form as what we perceive as a human being.

So the human being itself is a manifestation of consciousness, and ultimately no other than consciousness. The death experience, when you die, what happens? There's a question here that I might as well answer at the same time about death.

I laughed a little when I saw it. Why is it that we need to awaken? We all die anyway.

That seems to make sense. Is it that you are still awakened after death and the next lifetimes in eternity? Now, if you have experienced, I don't know if you have sat with somebody who died, who is dying, I don't know if you have experienced it, then you will have experienced if you're able to surrender to that moment.

It's a very sacred thing, a very sacred moment. And there's the moment when the transition happens between this body being inhabited by this field of consciousness. And then suddenly, the body is just a body.

And there's a huge difference. And you immediately see this body was never that being. It just looked like that being.

So that being, as I said earlier, we're all ultimately invisible. And what you see of another person is relatively insignificant, and not destined to survive. The person does not survive, the personal sense of self does not survive.

But that which is deeper than the person in you, as let's call it a spark of consciousness, that form, first you are the physical form, deeper than the physical form, you are the consciousness that inhabits the form. And that consciousness is inseparable from the one consciousness, there is no separate consciousness, consciousness does not have a plural, there are no consciousnesses. Consciousness is a singular, there's only one consciousness that manifests as we could call it a ray of consciousness, you are this ray of consciousness.

As a ray of consciousness, consciousness is not subject to birth and death, so it is timeless. This ray of consciousness that you appear as this particular person, does not necessarily immediately dissolve into total anonymity. It remains in most cases, as a particular ray, but it's not the person anymore.

What happens then, it returns briefly to the source, in the same way that a bee returns, goes to the beehive and deposits what it has collected. And every human is the one consciousness experiencing and learning and evolving in some way, even the most insignificant life form is the one consciousness evolving and learning. And what it has learned, not the details, but the essence, it contributes something to the whole, that is an intuition that came to me some time ago, and I believe it, there's some truth in it, but we can only speak of it in terms of analogies.

So your growth in consciousness becomes part of the one consciousness. The one consciousness, which is the consciousness of God, we're talking about things that you can't talk about, I'll do it anyway. The transcendent of God is totally beyond time and does not evolve, because evolution would mean time.

So the transcendent does not exist in our dimension, it is in a transcendent dimension, so you can't even conceive of it or talk of it, and that is God. Then God, the emanation of God, shines into our dimension and creates our dimension. And then God is an evolving being when God enters this dimension.

And there's no doubt that there is an evolutionary process of consciousness happening in our universe. The ultimate, I cannot explain the ultimate purpose of it all, I don't know it, but the ultimate purpose of it all, you can only have little glimpses of it. You can never fully comprehend it with your limited mind or talk about it.

So who you are in your essence, survives, ultimately there is no death. And when you die as an ego, in this lifetime, which is called die before you die, then you already know that as a living experience, that you, in your essence, are beyond death. And that's a beautiful thing, when the ego goes, then you die before you die, and you can sense the essence that you are.

So I'm never going to die, and you are not either. But of course, the body dissolves, the body will dissolve. What is your level of consciousness throughout your life?

And as you die, that is an important factor in what happens after that. There are people who tell me that I don't want to reincarnate again. I don't want to come back.

It's so hard. Please, don't let me come back. And then there are others who say, I hope I'm going to come back because I don't want to disappear into nothingness.

I really hope I'm going to come back. Reincarnation, is reincarnation a fact? Yes.

But I would like to bring reincarnation into something that you can actually experience at first hand here and now. The deeper meaning of reincarnation, as I see it, is you identify with form, then you reincarnate. Carnate comes from flesh, flesh means form.

Carnate, silicon carnate, it's flesh. So you reincarnate, which means you identify with form, then you reincarnate into a form. So the Buddhists striving towards the end of reincarnation so that you no longer are compelled, the consciousness that you are is no longer compelled to reincarnate into another form and have to go through another lifetime of problems and suffering.

So the Buddhists are striving, they want to come to the end of this cycle of reincarnation, where perhaps you're conscious enough to choose whether you want to reincarnate or not. You can say, no, I've had enough, thank you. Reincarnation is identification with form.

How do I go beyond reincarnation? You have to do that here and now, and that means, that is what we are doing here, do not identify with thought forms in your head. That is the most basic reincarnation that happens continually to human beings, is the complete identification with every thought form that comes into their heads, and then they become it.

But if you have gone beyond the compulsion to reincarnate in this lifetime, which means identify with every thought and every emotion that comes up, when you have recognized the essence of who you are beyond form, that realization does not leave you. When you die, there is a freedom that comes, but a freedom you have already found in this lifetime, because you have died to this identification with form. So it's very important how you experience the so-called afterlife is intimately connected with your state of consciousness in this lifetime.

So if you reincarnate, then another form comes into being, and then you enter the womb and start all over again. Buddhists say that if they are doing good things in this lifetime, they will have a better incarnation next time, but they're still compelled to reincarnate. But the important thing is for us, what we are talking about, to keep it practical and immediately verifiable in your own experience.

So your question really, the essence of this answer is, it is possible for you to stop the cycle of reincarnation in this lifetime, in a way that's what we're doing here. And then you will already experience yourself as that which is beyond form, and that takes away the fear of death, and that's a big relief. And then you can go on, and when death comes, you will almost welcome it.

And then the rest you will see. I can't predict what you experience after that, and what you're going to do with your enlightened consciousness. So liberation from death is the realization that the essence of you does not die.

And that's why we are here. And so I wish you well on your journey into the infinite.

[Speaker 2] (36:31 - 36:36)

I just wanted to start with a compliment that I find you very adorable.

[Speaker 1] (36:37 - 36:39)

Oh, thank you.

[Speaker 2] (36:44 - 37:13)

I've been in a situation where my own 16-year-old child has not spoken to me almost one year now. So when it comes to that intimate relationship, it's very easy, like I go into that pain body. Like sometimes I visualize that I'm back with my daughter, and we're having a beautiful, you know, we had a wonderful relationship.

And you said the answer for everything is in the present moment. I just wanted to, if you could more elaborate on that.

[Speaker 1] (37:14 - 37:17)

And she has not spoken to you in a year?

[Speaker 2] (37:18 - 37:34)

So it was a very complicated divorce we went through. And it was a custody thing. And so we shared like 50-50 custody.

And so I think whenever she's with the father, like you know, the child is used to get back, in my case.

[Speaker 1] (37:34 - 37:38)

So how do you, what do you experience? What emotion do you experience?

[Speaker 2] (37:40 - 38:05)

Emotions I experience is obviously, there is a lot of pain. And then again, I feel this, it's the attachment to her form. Like, you know, we used to be together.

She used to be in front of me. And so again, I feel that the connection is deeper, not at the level of the form, it's much more deeper than that. But there are times when I miss that attachment.

[Speaker 1] (38:06 - 42:17)

Okay, there's a sense of lack that is understandable, that you don't have that contact anymore. And that sense of lack, I'm just going to amplify it a little because there could be other things also that cause, I mean, not in your case, but for other people present here, who have this sense of lack, there could be a sense of lack, because you don't have a partner, you don't have a relationship with her, and you feel something vital is missing in you, or a child in your case that you don't have contact with, and you sense like a hole almost inside you, it leaves that eventually that will heal. So all you can do right now is to acknowledge that that's there, not fuel it too much with memories and thinking.

But stay in touch with your daughter at a deeper level of pure love. Because the attachment is an emotional thing, that's fine. But love is not an emotion.

I mean, love often pretends emotion is interpreted often as love. But true love is deeper than an emotion. And so that true love is there in you towards her.

And although this sense of lack will continue for a while until either the situation changes, or some kind of healing happens, time can heal too. But more importantly, to focus on the love that you feel for your daughter, so that you can virtually feel her presence within you. You can virtually feel that she is here because in that love you are connected.

Love is the realization of oneness. So you feel at a deeper level, you feel one with her, and then the fact that she is not physically there becomes less painful. There's still some pain there, but you're no longer consumed by it.

So you have to go deeper where you feel that love. And then you can live with the sense of lack that still exists there. And that also applies to those who feel the sense of lack because of an absence of close relationship.

You feel, I need somebody, I feel this, the loneliness, I feel the something so important missing. And it is natural if you're to feel that. The secret then is connect with your daughter at the deepest level.

I would suggest to you that it's not just something that you do for yourself, you actually do reach her at the deepest level when you do that. Whether she knows it or not, she might not know it in her conscious mind, but she will feel that because space becomes irrelevant at that deepest level. It doesn't matter where she is, she could be on another planet, and she would feel that.

So you have to go there, feel that love. And that love is already, it's no longer the form, it goes deeper than the form. Because the form, of course, is not there, the form of her.

But the love takes you beyond form, within yourself, and you reach the essence of her beyond the form that she is. And there will be a connection, and you may find that in time, even on the surface level, there will be a reconnection. So that's the practice and the way beyond.

I'm not saying there will not be some pain anymore, but you will be able to live with it. Thank you.

[Speaker 5] (42:24 - 42:51)

Thank you. I'm actually on a journey to find peace of mind and deep connection. But when I fired from a contract, or when I deal with the death of someone I love, I shut down.

And then it's more like, okay, how am I going to survive this day? I just want to get through it. But how do you get to that next level of mastery?

Where, you know what I'm saying? So yeah.

I would suggest you can use the present moment as a portal into the next stage. And it works like this. There are situations that when you're not absolutely present, you suffer.

This could happen, for example, if you go to the doctor's office, and he tells you, you only have a few months to live. Or it could be that you've lost all your money, no more security, no more investments, nothing left. And I call that allow the life situation, whatever it is, to force you into absolute presence.

And absolute presence is, if you ask yourself, if you think your life is problematic, your life situation and failure, problem, dreadful, to help you focus on the present moment, which after all is all there ever is, you ask yourself, what's the problem now? And now means now. What's the problem now?

This forces your attention. But you can only do it if you're really fed up with suffering. You don't want suffering anymore.

No matter what it is, you need to be fed up enough with suffering, that you go there to that place, which is total presence, where you say, what's the problem now? There is no problem now. I am breathing.

You're not denying anything. You're bringing yourself to reality. It does not diminish your ability to deal with situations and take whatever action is possible or necessary to deal with it.

That's fine. But right now, what's the problem now? You're breathing.

You're looking around. There's energy in your body. And you have to come to the conclusion that actually right now, I'm alive and I'm conscious.

And you can sense your own consciousness, which is one with that sense of aliveness. There's only this. And then you're walking somewhere, you're taking one step at a time.

Can you single out this moment so that you experience your life, so that your life experience, which is now, is not obscured by your life situation. You have the two dimensions. You have your life situation.

Everybody here has a life situation. And for many, many people in this world, the majority still, their life situation is problematic. For some, more problematic than others.

For you, sometimes you feel it's particularly problematic now. And others, there may be people in this room whose life situation is more problematic than yours. But everybody, there's not a single person whose life situation does not have its set of problems and challenges to do with relationships, with your feelings, your job situation, your health situation, your financial situation.

All these things make up your life situation. And you can never escape the problematic nature of a life situation. The spiritual practice is, you deal with your life situation, you do what you can, but you don't allow yourself, your attention, your consciousness to be consumed by your life situation.

And for you not to be consumed by your life situation, you need to make it your practice to single out the present moment and realize that in this moment, you feel alive. You go into your within and you can sense that you are aware and conscious at this moment. You can feel your own presence and then you can look around and you can see the sky or the lights and the flowers and the floor and any objects that's everything is as it is.

And it is not problematic. It is there in its bare, simple existence in the present moment. The world, that's sense perceptions that surround you.

You're breathing, you're perceiving what you're perceiving. And you're aware that there is a presence that is perceiving the world around you. And that presence you can sense as yourself.

That you have exited your life situation and you have gone to a deeper level within yourself. You have access and a new dimension within yourself where your life situation becomes secondary. And the more you do that, miraculously, your ability to actually deal with your life situation also improves when you do that.

Because you're no longer consumed by it. You have, so to speak, risen above it. You have risen above your life situation.

It is no longer sucking up all your energy, all your consciousness, which ultimately is your mind. That is where your life situation lives. Your mind is no longer sucking up all your consciousness.

And then it sucks the life out of you. It's like a parasite. So, you have to practice.

Ask yourself as a little pointer, a little signpost. Ask yourself, what problem do I have at this moment? And invariably, you will find that in this moment you have no problem.

If you're really in this moment. And that's the place that you become more comfortable with and you go more deeply into that. And just reminding you one more time, this moment consists of your sense perception right now because everything is present in the moment.

Whatever you see or hear or perceive is present right now. And then the deeper part of presence is sensing the fact that you are conscious. Sensing your own presence.

And that requires, when you are in suffering, it requires a certain intensity. And therefore, this is why I'm saying you need to be fed up with suffering because only if you're fed up with suffering can you have that intensity that says, no more. I haven't used that expression in a while, but I used to call it the sword of presence.

It's like in martial arts, like you have a sword, you pull this sword and this sword, you hold this sword and you cut through time. And you say, now, what's the problem now? Nothing.

I have no problem now. That requires an intensity. It's not a denial.

You are accessing a deeper dimension within yourself. There's no problem now. And then when, let's say, let's come back to the example I gave, you're traveling to see your attorney to sort out the mess.

And then finally you arrive at the attorney's office and you're still, you're going into the elevator and you're still, you press the button and you're still in the present moment. There's no problem. And then you arrive at the floor of the attorney and then you open the door and then you sit down and then you start speaking.

Then you, of course, you have to enter, you have to address at that moment, you have to address your life situation. But this energy of presence will be still there in the background. So the way in which you deal with things will be different from the way in which you would have dealt with it in the absence of presence.

So whenever anybody who perceives they have a very difficult life situation, allow it to force you into the present moment. However, if you want to suffer a bit more, that's fine. Then you don't have to do it.

Do I want to be free of suffering? That's the question. Thank you.

Just a moment of silence, of stillness.

[Speaker 4] (52:00 - 52:27)

Thank you. Thank you.

Eckhart Tolle Without Consciousness There Would Be No World [495fb179-ca37-4722-bc64-9e9cf3cf5d4d]

[Speaker 2] (0:00 - 0:45)

Without consciousness, there would be no world. In this episode, Eckhart discusses excessive thinking as the source of enormous unhappiness for millions of people. He goes on to explain that it's not the circumstances of one's life that makes people miserable.

It's the overthinking that causes their suffering. Eckhart shares a story from his own life just after he experienced this awakening. He was homeless and spent many days on a park bench.

He admits he would have been justified if he were filled with anger and resentment, but he wasn't. Instead, he was deeply aware of the aliveness and beauty everywhere. He says it's possible to awaken even in the midst of extreme difficulties.

He says what illuminates the world without which there would be no world is consciousness.

[Speaker 1] (0:48 - 26:25)

So the present moment is a doorway that opens up out of complete identification with what has become excessive thinking, unnecessary thinking, because you think you need to think continuously in order to sustain your sense of identity. And so at night you wake up and you think about your life. There's no action you can take right there and then, but you're thinking about it, and usually it's not pleasant.

All the things that went wrong or could go wrong, and it hasn't worked out the way it should have worked. And you go, oh, it's so difficult, my life. And then the next day you say, let me tell you about my life.

You say to someone you meet, you think you had a difficult life? Now listen to my story. And then you tell and retell the story sustained by thought.

And so this overthinking, this excessive thinking is a source of enormous unhappiness for millions of people on the planet. They are not made unhappy ultimately by the circumstances of their lives. They are made unhappy by overthinking.

There was a time when I was homeless. Now one would have said, well, if a homeless person is fully justified in being unhappy, you might have thought, well, not so. I was not unhappy as a homeless person.

In fact, I was very happy being totally present. I'm not saying you should become homeless to experience it. You don't need to experience it.

But if it should ever happen to you, it can be an opportunity for being totally present, totally in the present moment. I would sit on park benches, just looking around. Everything was so alive and beautiful.

And then my hand would go into my pocket. I would see how much money I'd left. Oh, I was in England at the time.

£3.50. That's just enough for whatever I could buy, a sandwich or something. What's going to happen after that? My mind didn't even go there because I had gone through this shift in consciousness.

So there was just an aliveness. And always at the last moment, something came to help. And then occasionally people would come and sit next to me on the bench and say, who is this strange person?

And they asked questions. That was the beginning of a spiritual teaching, a person asking me a question on the park bench. And I said, well, I didn't have any answers.

Well, occasionally an answer came, but it wasn't prepared. And I always surprised myself what answer came. Oh, I didn't know I knew that.

So even in extreme circumstances, nowadays there are many, millions of people are refugees these days. They lose their home. And of course, one would think, are they not fully justified in being unhappy?

I would suggest that even in limit situations like this, there is the possibility of spiritual awakening. In fact, particularly in limit situations, this is a term from existentialist philosophy, limit situation, especially in limit situations, when life challenges you in such a severe way that it removes many things from you that you had identified with, that gave you a sense of security, your home, your relationships, perhaps even your health, all your money. And sometimes life takes away several of these things at once.

And that's usually regarded as something terrible. And on one level it is, but potentially it is a way, and it has happened to many people, not the majority of people who suffer this, but certain percentage who experience an awakening through this. Because if life removes things that you had identified with, who are you?

Who am I without this? Who am I without my job, without my house, without my possessions, perhaps even without my relationships? Everything is gone.

Who am I now? Now the ego is extremely fearful of this moment and this enormous suffering there, but potentially there's also an opening into who or what you are beyond the mind created self, because there's nothing left. And then suddenly after going through suffering, you may suddenly wake up and say, I don't know what happened and I don't know why, but I feel this deep peace and I have nothing.

Jesus called it the peace that passes all understanding, which means you cannot explain, although I'm trying to explain it, you cannot explain why this person should suddenly be so peaceful. So I believe that no matter whether you are a Christian or whether you are not a Christian, there is a deep truth embodied in the central image of Christianity. And the central image of Christianity is a man who is on the cross, an extreme form of suffering.

And ultimately that means every human being. One could say Jesus is the archetype for every human. Every human being is crucified by life.

Every human being goes through the suffering and with the suffering comes the possibility of transcending the ego by entering a state of complete surrender and acceptance. Ultimately you step out of your thinking mind and what's left when you're no longer thinking about yourself and your life and what went wrong. In fact, thinking subsides and what's left of you when you're not thinking about yourself or about anything?

Is that even possible? Is that even possible? For example, at this moment, are you able to experience as you sit there being in that space of not needing to add any thought to this moment?

Can you allow this moment to be as it is so completely that you do not add any interpretation to it? Just be it. So what is left of you right now?

You're not remembering your story because you are still completely yourself without the story. Isn't that surprising? Even without remembering all your past suffering, there is a sense of being.

In fact, it's stronger. You don't remember all the things that went wrong in your life. Okay, it's gone.

You don't even remember your email address. It's gone. Or your telephone number.

You don't need it right now. When you need it, it'll be there. You don't need it.

It's gone. So instead of I am this, and I am that, and I am that, what remains is a sense of beingness, which is I am. But nothing is added to the I am.

This is what's left of you right now. There's a stillness. When thinking subsides, you have not lost consciousness.

You have not fallen below thinking. You have risen above thinking. There are two ways of becoming free of compulsive thinking, which is how the ego arises.

There are two ways of becoming free of compulsive thinking, the compulsive thinking that makes your life miserable, not the thinking that is useful, not the thinking that is a useful tool for creating and manifesting and inventing things and so on. There's a beautiful thing. Thinking is an enormous advance for humans, evolution of human consciousness.

But the way it has developed now, humans are possessed by thinking. They do not think. The language you use, you say, I think.

You don't think. Thinking happens to you. And the thoughts that happen to you are thoughts that you absorb from the surrounding culture.

You watch the media, the mainstream media, and you take that in, and then you regurgitate it. This is what I think. Or you're against it.

This is what I think. Thinking happens to you. You don't think unless you are aware.

And awareness or presence is a dimension of consciousness that is deeper, or we could say higher than thinking. Awareness is when thinking stops and you have not gone to sleep. In fact, you are more alert than before.

And you can look around wherever you are. For example, here and now in this room, you can look around this room and perceive everything visually and listen to everything without adding any thought to it. Just be still and perceive.

There's still a knowing there, but it's not conceptual knowing. There's a deeper knowing there. Become familiar with the state of being free of thinking and just aware.

But that requires a certain alertness. Without the alertness, you drift back into thinking. The true spiritual teaching shows you the way of rising above thinking so that you can begin to use thinking, not you as the ego, but you as the higher consciousness that you are, can use thinking as a tool instead of being used by thinking, by thought.

So there are two ways of being free of thinking. One is rising above, which is why we're here. The other is falling below.

If you want to fall below, you have to walk out of here, go to the bar next door and order a few whiskeys. And then you can experience becoming free of thinking also gradually. But you're falling below thinking.

Oh, it feels so good. I can't even remember my problems anymore. It feels good.

You start singing now. And there's a joy of life. No need to think.

Just be. Have another one. And then, of course, you're moving towards unconsciousness.

And this is not the way we are going. It is not the destiny of humanity to regress to a pre-thinking stage just because you want to be as happy as your dog. You say, well, the dog isn't thinking and so I'm going to go there too.

The dog hasn't arrived. The dog is a beautiful manifestation of consciousness, but it's not a thinking consciousness. So you need to discover in yourself the ability to be free of thinking initially for brief moments.

And this is a good moment. When you perceive the world around you without mental labels, just an alert presence in the background of your sense perceptions. And this is an amazing thing.

What happens? At first, well, what's so great about that? It's the greatest thing that could happen to you because you begin to access a deeper dimension of who you are.

And that sense of I am, of presence, begins to be your source of identity. Now, this is what I call your essence identity. Your form identity is the physical body.

Your form identity is the conditioning of your mind, your mental emotional conditioning. That is your form identity. Then most humans only know themselves as their form identity.

And that is the greatest deprivation in life. The greatest poverty in life is not to know yourself as who or what you are in your essence. If you only know yourself as form identity, your life is really continuous unhappiness and frustration with a brief interludes when you're okay for a while because something good has just happened, but it never lasts.

There's a possibility of living from a deeper place within yourself. And that is essence identity. And there is no thought in it.

There's only a sense of intense, aware presence. And so you can, in your daily life, you can invite this space, the inner space of essence identity into your life as much as you can. For example, simply by consciously perceiving something without imposing a mental label on it.

You look at a flower and you look at it for 15 seconds, 20 seconds, perceive it completely against the background of stillness. So to use an analogy, if you were a painting, it's a strange analogy, but let's use it anyway. If you were a painting, most people think they are whatever the painting, you are the figures on the canvas, the painting.

Now, if you are the painting and you suddenly realize there is more to me than whatever the painting shows, more essentially, I am the canvas on which this is painted. So you become aware of yourself as the canvas essentially, and whatever is on it is an addition. Another analogy we could use, another weird analogy.

Let's say you are this room. If I asked yourself to describe who or what you are, you would describe yourself in terms of floor, walls, ceilings, lights, maybe the furniture in the room. That's me, this, that, that.

Okay, you can talk about it for a long time. And then after a while you stop talking. And then I say, there's must be, is there not more to you than what you've been speaking about?

And you would say, well, maybe there is, but I need a few years of psychoanalysis to find out what that is. Okay. You do a few years of psychoanalysis, and then you come back and I say, okay, what have you found out?

Well, in my childhood, I found this, and it's a long story. It's very helpful. It's useful.

It can be useful to know. But, and then I ask again, is there not something else that you have neglected? You have not mentioned.

And suddenly the room, which is you, becomes aware and says, oh, I forgot about this wonderful space that has no form, but that is the essence of who I am. Without this space, there would be no room. I am essentially the space.

And this applies to you. Let's let go of the analogy. Essentially you are the space of consciousness, the unconditioned consciousness.

You are conscious. Are you not at this moment? The one thing that is beyond doubt in your life, everything can be doubted.

You can doubt whether this is real. Am I dreaming this? Maybe you are.

But even if you were dreaming this, in life it's a little bit like a dream because things come and go very quickly. They disappear. Even if it is a dream, what is it that you cannot doubt?

You cannot doubt that there is a consciousness in which the dream appears. You cannot doubt, and you can sense it within yourself at this moment that you are conscious, that you are aware of your consciousness. So I'm asking you now a strange question.

Can you be aware or conscious right now of the fact that you are conscious? Can you sense at this moment that you are conscious? Can you, another way of putting it, can you sense your own beingness that you are?

Can you sense the I am without any addition? Not this or that or that. I am.

And that is ancient wisdom already at the, in ancient Greece, there was an inscription on the temple of Apollo and that said, know yourself, know thyself. And this is what we are talking about at the deepest level. Knowing yourself is not knowing your story.

It's fine. There's a place for that too. But knowing yourself is knowing yourself in your essence.

Now, many people did not understand this inscription on the temple of Apollo. They were interested in other things, but next to it, there was another little inscription that gave the key to what it means to know thyself. And most people had overlooked that.

It was just one letter. And that letter that was inscribed also in that temple was A. And people thought it must be meaningless or maybe the sculptor forgot to complete the word.

And it was pointed out later, much later by Plutarch, the philosopher, that he said quite clearly, this letter is the second person singular, which by the way, happens to be the same as in French, tu es, you are. It said in ancient Greek, you are, second person singular. Also on one side, it said, know thyself.

And then a little bit away from there, it said, you are. So you would look at that, know thyself, you are, and then you go, I am. And then the key to knowing thyself is the I am, the I am realization, which somewhere in the Old Testament, this is one of the great highlights of the Bible.

There are some highlights there, undoubtedly, also other things. God is asked, who are you? I am that I am.

So God defines him, her, itself through the word, I am. And Jesus said, I am the truth, the way, and something else. I'm not good at quoting the Bible.

I am the truth, the way, and the light, maybe. And people have interpreted this as meaning, I am the one. In mind, if you allow me my interpretation of it, I believe they've omitted one word.

And that is the word, is. And then the line would read, I am is the way, and the life, and the truth. The I am realization is the way, the life, the truth.

Another wonderful pointer in the New Testament is two sayings. Jesus said, talking to his disciples, presumably, you are the light of the world. He also said it about himself.

I am the light of the world. It's in two different gospels. You are the light of the world.

This is a very powerful pointer towards self-realization. You are the light of the world. What does that mean?

Does that mean that the people he was speaking to are very special? No, they were not special. They were not educated, probably.

They were simple people. They had no social position. So he wasn't talking about that.

He wasn't saying you are VIPs. What was he then saying? He was pointing to the essence identity of those humans, the light.

What is the light of the world? What is it that illuminates the entire world without which there would be no world? Consciousness.

Eckhart Tolle You Already Are Who You Want To Become [51d7b4b7-3059-4796-b082-855b4360fde5]

[Speaker 2] (0:00 - 0:34)

You already are who you want to become. In this episode, Eckhart talks with a live audience in Greece. He cautions participants against the belief that enlightenment is somewhere out there or something to be achieved in the distant future.

He says we don't have to go through a long process of becoming to find liberation. He explains the irony is that when we look to the future, we miss the opportunity to find freedom right here in the present moment. He urges all of us to wake up and to realize we already are who we want to become.

Some spiritual seekers seek with great intensity. It's their life purpose, and it's a great thing. Instead of seeking wealth or recognition or worldly success, what they seek is whatever they call it, liberation, enlightenment, becoming enlightened, liberated.

Okay, now the danger is to look to the future for a... that you project a state that you want to achieve, which is in the future. And the frustrating thing is you don't achieve it, but you want to get there.

And that is a movement of becoming. You want to become something or someone that you are not yet. And so this prevents you from realizing that you are already what you want to become.

And wanting to become it is the obstacle that prevents you from realizing that what you're looking for, you are already. So some teachings will tell you that in order to awaken spiritually, you need great intensity, the same intensity that a drowning man has for air. And that's very intense.

If you're about to drown, you really want air. And so some teachers will tell you you need... if you don't have...

if you do not look for spiritual realization with the same intensity of a drowning man or woman looking for air, you won't get there. That's one teaching. The others say, and this sounds a little bit like more what I've been saying, there's nothing you can do about it.

It comes when it wants to come. So just relax. Let go.

Don't look for anything. Just... Okay.

So... So you want me to just watch TV or... Become a couch potato and watch TV?

Just it might come or it might not come. It's unlikely that it'll come. However, if you bring the two together, the two approaches which seem totally contradictory of wanting to awaken with that enormous intensity and just being totally okay in this moment is just fine.

There's nothing to look for. This is fine. The intensity that created the projection of future, that intensity needs to move into the present moment.

So instead of the intensity of, I need to get there. There's a longing getting there. And of course you're almost looking for it.

This is the enlightened me is over there somewhere in the future. Or maybe it's maybe I need to move to India. Maybe then I'll find myself.

And of course you might or you might not bring that intensity into the present moment. And in the present moment, you are just be intensely present. You don't want anything.

Be intensely present. There's nothing to want anymore. If you're intensely present, it is a very deeply fulfilling state of being.

Intense presence. Are you still looking for yourself? No, there's nothing to look for.

That presence is it. Now you might lose it the next moment, but right now you are present. You are the presence.

And sometimes you don't get the intensity unless you are being extremely challenged by life. Some people don't get it until really you need to get to the limit of endurance. Let's say you lose everything.

And there you are on a park bench. Lost all status, relationships, possessions. Everything gone.

Taken away from me. And instead of developing a victim identity, what life has done to me. Oh my God.

This is where I've ended up. On the park bench. It's all been in vain.

All the stuff that I've been involved in. And all my spiritual search. Where has it gotten me?

Here. The park bench. It's all completely pointless.

The story. You can see the story. How it creates unhappiness and an unhappy identity.

And then you can't stand the suffering anymore. And perhaps a moment arises when you completely surrender to this moment as it is. And that's...

This is really... It's like an awakening. You suddenly awaken into this present moment.

And from before you were in your thoughts with a mind made identity. A very unhappy identity. And suddenly you go, oh.

There's no opinion anymore about who you are. Because you know that you are that deep presence. And then you notice whenever you move away from it, you begin to suffer.

So that keeps you on the narrow path that leads to life. That is life. And somebody talked about that.

The narrow road. The narrow path that leads to life. And not many people have chosen it.

I think somebody said that. And what is this narrow path? It's the path of presence.

Very narrow. And that is exactly what all the the great Zen teachers taught. To be absolutely here in the now.

And you burn off past and future. You can still manipulate past and future for practical purposes. But it no longer has anything to do with your sense of identity.

Your personal past. You remember it. Yes.

But it no longer has anything to do with who you are. You are the deep I. So that is something that you can, you can, this is an opportunity here.

And especially if your life situation is very unpleasant at the moment, at home, wherever. Go into intense, in very intense presence voluntarily without life forcing you into it by putting you into a limit situation. Another one could be you go to the doctor and he says, we've just been looking at your x-rays and it doesn't look good.

You have five months approximately. Now that's terrible news. Especially if you're not that old yet.

It could happen. So either this brings an enormous amount of suffering suddenly or it pushes you into absolute and complete presence. And this is, there's a phrase that the teacher, the chain-smoking guru, who approached this wonderful book, Nisargadatta described as this state, he described as in his habitual, very emphatic way of speaking.

He said, this is the radical refusal to harbor thoughts. And he would look at you like that. The radical refusal to harbor thoughts.

That's how he spoke. Okay, I'm not harboring any thoughts. This is a very yang approach to these, the Zen masters also are a bit on the yang side more than I am.

They look at you and they look really fierce with bulging eyes in the old drawings of Zen masters, these bulging eyes. And that's a teaching in itself. But in the good drawings of these ancient Zen masters, you see when you look at the, you can, done by perhaps by great artists, you can see that, yes, there is that intensity that looks almost intimidating, looks intimidating, but there's also hiding there.

Behind it, there is a gentleness and a presence and compassion. But yet, it's not on the surface. It's hiding behind.

The surface is very yang. And that's the same with Nisargadatta. He's the same approach.

It's a very, not many people yet are at, have arrived at the point where this statement by Nisargadatta, the radical refusal to harbor thoughts, not many humans are yet ready for that or are able to live that, but some are. And there may be some here. And if there are some here who are able to live this radical, very radical approach to awakening, if there are some who heal, then it's probably because you are faced with a threatening life situation or something is very not going well in your life or something very bad has just happened or you're in deep suffering.

You're contemplating suicide. Let's say you're contemplating suicide because you're telling yourself, I can't take any more. I just cannot take any more.

And one can see why people think that life is just unbearable. I can't, I can fully understand that. But I would suggest as an alternative option to suicide to try something else first.

You have nothing to lose anymore. Absolutely nothing to lose. So try something else first.

And we could call it the radical refusal to harbor thoughts or we could call it unconditional and total acceptance of this moment as it is. That's another way of putting it. So as an alternative to suicide, why not go there?

And what that is, and this sounds a little frightening or extreme, that has been described as an act of, but in a positive sense, an act of self-annihilation. Self-annihilation. Self-annihilation, but it refers to the egoic self.

So if you are faced with, or you're faced with imminent death, maybe you're just old, well, you have nothing to lose. Why not go there now? And once you know what it is that I'm talking about, you've had glimpses, so it's not just mental abstractions, you know experientially, at first hand, what presence is, because you have experienced moments of presence.

And so then you go there and no more of that nonsense, no more drama, no more suffering, just this moment as it is. And in that you, you feel beautiful. Suddenly there's a deepening and you go into the deep I, and you are the deep I.

How much longer you live suddenly isn't that important anymore? Because the fulfillment of your life is already here. Nothing could be greater than to realize the depths of your being.

And so if you're not ready for this very radical approach, that's fine. A time may come when you are ready for it. But you can also awaken more gradually, and for most of you that applies, rather than, but if you're looking, if you're contemplating suicide, please try The radical refusal to harbor thoughts when the unhappy entity that wanted to commit suicide, the unhappy entity that said, I can't take anymore, dissolves.

So the very entity that couldn't take anymore isn't there anymore. You withdraw consciousness from it. This kind of happened to me that night when I experienced that shift.

I can't live with myself anymore was the thought that came. What does that mean? I can't live with myself.

Who am I and who is the self? So there are two of me here. Very weird.

I can't live with my, I can't live with myself. I can't stand myself. I am a burden to myself.

All that kind of thought, what does that mean? It means there is a self that's very unhappy and there's an I. And they have come together.

But now if you separate the I, which is consciousness, from the self, the self is no longer being sustained by consciousness and it evaporates. And then you realize who you are beyond the conditioned self. Consciousness.

When that happened to me kind of spontaneously, I could not have explained it in the way I explain it now. I didn't understand it at all. So there was no immediate understanding that came with it.

There was just a shift from being an unhappy person to being at peace in the same situation. So this is very, very important. The separation of consciousness from the structure of thinking, so that thinking does not continuously absorb all their consciousness and gobbles it up and devours it continuously.

The mind is a huge addiction. The greatest addiction is the addiction to thinking. Useless thinking, not constructive thinking, which means 95% of thinking is useless.

Creates enormous amount of suffering. So you take attention away from thinking and then separation happens between... Consciousness is realized in its pure form, not in its incarnated form as thought.

Consciousness is realized in its pure form. So simple. I know you're not waiting for me to continue speaking.

I may, but you're not waiting because you're experiencing that beautiful state of being where you're not waiting for the next thing. Let's just go a little more deeply into that beautiful state of pure presence, pure being. I'll be shutting up for a little while, probably, who knows.

And as much as possible, be here relinquishing thought. You don't really need it right now. What is there to think about right now?

It wouldn't add anything to the experience of this moment. It would only detract from the experience of this moment. If you find it difficult...

I'm talking again. If you find it difficult to hold presence, a very simple thing is, and that was already recommended by the Buddha, to be aware of your breathing. That means you can feel yourself breathing in, the whole length of the in-breath.

And then there's a brief stop, and you're aware of that also. And then there's a whole length of the out-breath. And there's another brief stop.

And then the in-breath starts again. So you're aware of these movements, and the two stops. You don't need to actually do anything to your breathing, because it's happening anyway, but you just didn't know it.

So this is one way of, for those who cannot directly enter the state of pure presence or awareness, this is a little help, because while you're aware of your breathing, you'll notice a weird thing. You cannot think at the same time. The moment you think, you lost awareness of your breath.

And this is why there's a probably a legendary thing that the Buddha said, he probably didn't say it, but be aware of your breathing for one hour, and you'll be totally enlightened. But if you miss one, you should rather start from the beginning. Now, you don't need to be aware of your breathing for one hour.

Don't believe that. All you need to be aware of your breathing is the breath you're taking at this moment. Not many breaths, only this one, because that's the only one there ever is.

So those of you who cannot yet just simply step out of thought into presence, that's a help. Breath awareness. Closely associated with that is body awareness, the inner body, the aliveness that pervades the inner body, to feel that aliveness in every cell of the body.

That's an anchor for presence also. Takes you out of your thinking mind, diverts consciousness away from thought. It's helpful to be in this energy field of collective presence.

At first, the cessation of thinking happens sporadically. You may notice it when it happens spontaneously, as it does for most of you. You notice, for example, when you first look at something, let's say, you step out of your room or the house where you're staying, and you open the door, and then, of course, in the morning, for example, or during the day, and, of course, the first thing, you look what's there, you look.

And if you're very alert, you'll notice that in the first two or three seconds of looking, you're not thinking. There's just... Now, most people don't know that.

But in the first moment something new arises, it could also be listening. There's a sound. Maybe it's a bird.

And you're listening. In the first two, three, four, five seconds of looking or listening, you're just aware there's the perception and there's the awareness. And then some kind of mental labeling comes in, and you start either thinking something about it, calling it something, or your mind moves away entirely from that into some other mental dream world where you're thinking about the next thing you have to do, or whatever it is, or what happened just before or yesterday.

So it could be that you're looking at something for a moment, and then completely absorbed in thinking again. Or you're looking at something. There is that space of presence that arises spontaneously whenever something new comes into your perceptual field.

And if you can be aware of that, then a wonderful thing happens. Then that initial space becomes longer if you acknowledge it. You don't have to do anything.

Just become aware that whenever there's a first perception of something, there's a moment when you need to... You see it, and there's an awareness. But the labeling hasn't started yet.

And if you catch that first moment, it will deepen and it will become longer. And that means you become more spacious, more space. And you become, we could put it like that, a deeper human being.

The being deepens. Because the more space there is before the conceptual mind comes in, the deeper you are as a human being. In other words, the being dimension, which is the depth dimension within you, grows.

It deepens. It intensifies. Now, this is a lovely practice where you don't really have to do anything, and it happens continuously.

A human being, too. You look at a human being comes towards you, sitting at the table, and the first few seconds, you just look. And then something comes in.

Some kind of mind movement will come in, or this person you may then begin to interpret and feel something about this person. Oh, I'd like to have a date with this man or woman, or whatever. Some kind of desire movement may come in, some opinion, or some dislike, whatever it is.

That's with humans. But always catching the first moment when you look at something. Like, I mean, you can even do it anyway.

Look at something that you hadn't looked at before. Just look at the ceiling or whatever it is. And in the first few seconds, you'll notice, before the mind says, oh, there's so many lamps up there, before the mind says that, the mind doesn't say anything.

You're just aware of what we're looking at. Interpretation hasn't happened yet. And then the mind says, oh, I wonder how many lamps are actually on that ceiling.

Let's count them. That'll keep the mind busy. But in the first, this is the first moment, always catching that, then it gets longer and it deepens.

And this, even this very simple thing, as you practice that, changes the entire way in which you perceive so-called reality. Just catch the initial moment. And by catching it, it gets longer and you become deeper.

The longer the gap before you express a thought or whatever contribution you make, the deeper you are and the deeper your perception is. Any great artist, if let's say it's a painter who paints a landscape or whatever it is, has to enter that state. I mean, there are many artists these days who have no access to it.

You'll realize that when you visit modern art galleries. But there are still some who do. And they, in the act of creation, there is that absolute ability to look and look and look and be the awareness.

And then out of that comes something beautiful. And when the painting is done of a landscape, for example, there is an added element in that painting that is the, how it gets in there, nobody knows, that is the consciousness of the artist in that moment of creation. The awareness, the consciousness has to become part of the painting.

Yes, the nature is there, but it's more than a photo. Although photos can be very beautiful too. It's more than just a photo.

There's something else that has come. And that is the, this is why great works of art can help you enter. If you really contemplate them, they can help you enter the state out of which they were created.

So that's, remember that, that practice of first perception, it could be auditory too. That's a very beautiful thing. Let's say there's a sound of a bird.

And at first you, and after three or four seconds, you may find the mind will want to interpret, but you can actually delay it and say, not ready to interpret, just carry on. And then at some point the mind says, yes, but I really want to know what kind of a bird that is. No, and that's interesting because the mind says, I really want to know.

The mind wants to know, it wants to interpret. It does not want to be in the state of not knowing. However, the mind does not realize that there are two modalities of knowing and it regards the other modality of knowing that is non-conceptual as valueless and actually dangerous.

And you have to know that. And then you can see in your life, you need conceptual knowledge, but more importantly, you need, more fundamentally, you need non-conceptual knowing. I give sometimes the example of going into a beautiful ancient cathedral, for example.

So you enter that space and you begin to look. And then somebody offers you a recorded tour of it, which you can hire, you put it in your ear and it guides you around the cathedral. It explains everything.

And now you walk three more steps and you will see that statue by so-and-so, done there. And then you, now you look up to the ceiling and it will explain. Oh, so interesting.

Wow. Yes, yes. After an hour, you have learned everything.

There's to know a lot about the cathedral. So you've known it conceptually and to the mind, that's all there is. It doesn't realize there's another way of experience in the cathedral, which is totally non-conceptual.

And in order to do that, you have to refuse the electronic guide and just walk in there and just look and be aware and spacious and experience that space and what's in the space, the totality of the space. And you, a sense of awe, it's a funny English word, awe. It's onomatopoeic, I believe that's the word, which it kind of reproduces the sound that you make when you're in a state of awe, you say, awe.

And that's the state when you look at something, you say, wow. But there's no, you don't know anything conceptually. You don't know when it was built and who did this and who did that or what these particular architectural things are called.

You don't know anything. And you walk and you experience, it's a deep experience. And this means you're experiencing the other way of knowing, which is totally neglected in our civilization, but is vitally, vitally important.

And so you neglect it and all you know is conceptual knowledge. You need both. And the more fundamental one is the non-conceptual, because that takes you deeper and connects you intimately with what it is that you're perceiving.

So after a two of one hour of the cathedral, you come out and a friend is waiting for you and says, what have you learned? Nothing. But you have experienced the cathedral and it's been a wonderful experience.

Now, I recommend that if you have more time, the next day you go back and then you hire this guide and walk around and learn about it. And on the third day, you visit it again and you can be in both dimensions. As you walk around, you can still experience it.

You're not totally immersed in your conceptual knowledge, but it's there. But you have that spaces of pure awareness as you experience it. And this is an analogy almost for how your whole life should be and can be.

You move in the two dimensions. And this is not only knowing a sacred building or something like that. It refers also to knowing yourself.

Because most humans only know themselves conceptually. In other words, they don't know themselves at all. They only know stuff about themselves, but they don't know themselves.

There's knowing and knowing about. There's a reason why in some languages, such as French or Spanish, they have two words for to know, whereas English or German only have one. So in French, you have savoir and connaître.

And in Spanish, you have saber, you say, and conocer. So it's two different ways. For example, in Spanish, if you say, I know who you are.

That's one way of knowing. Sé quién eres. Or I know you.

Te conozco, you use a different verb. So one is the conceptual knowing, and one is a more direct knowing. So there's sometimes certain wisdom embodied in language.

So here you need to know yourself, not just as an object in your consciousness. In other words, you know about yourself. You know things about yourself.

You need to know yourself more intimately, but this knowing is totally non-conceptual. And from the conceptual point of view, looks like not knowing anything at all. But it is a deep knowing beyond concepts, where the knower and the known merge into one.

So you are no longer in the, when you know yourself in the sense that the ancient Greek philosophers talked about, then you know yourself no longer, you're no longer an object to yourself. Object and subject merge into one. And that is called, this is why we have the expression in some spiritual traditions, self-realization, self-realization.

You're no longer an object to yourself. This is the healing of the ancient split that started in Greek mythology, expressed as the myth of Narcissus. The man who saw an image of himself, then began to live through a mental image and became very unhappy.

That's the whole story of humanity, the development of the ego. And it is the healing of that split that occurred many thousands of years ago, when humans split themselves in two and sometimes more than two. So they have self-image and you, so knowing yourself, and this is fundamentally knowing yourself as subject, object in one.

And then you still have some things that you know about yourself. And this applies then to other situations and other humans. Then you know every human being also on the two levels.

You know them as humans, which is the conditioned entity, but you also know them in their being. And that is the added dimension to every interaction. So you're no longer related purely through the mental emotional field.

There's something deeper that is present in the interaction. So that's the two modalities of knowing, conceptual and deeper knowing, non-conceptual knowing. And that's the state that Socrates referred to when he said, I'm the only one who knows that he knows nothing.

He dwelled in that state, that deep state of non-conceptual knowing, but miraculously out of that deep state of non-conceptual knowing, suddenly creative thinking arose from that. So he was one of the most creative. He taught humanity or certainly the Western world to think, to ask questions, to think.

And he was a highly creative thinker, but he could only be a creative thinker because he had access to the non-conceptual dimension. And then out of that creative thinking rose and that became concepts, yes. But he was never lost in concepts and he never created a conceptual structure that was the ultimate explanation of reality and that this is how it is.

No, it is more, it's a loose thing. Not, he didn't create any dogma to believe in. So he continued to have access to the source of creativity, which is non-conceptual knowing.

And then if that flows into your mind and if your mind, of course your mind needs a certain preparation in order to give form to that which arises from ultimately the formless dimension. So it helps if you have learned how to formulate words and sentences, then you can say something about it. And if you are an artist and you have, I can go within very deeply, but if you put me in front of a canvas, I'm not going to produce a great work of art because that is not, the vehicle is not prepared for that, but the vehicle is prepared for something else.

And I'm not going to create a great work of music if you put me in front of a piano. I'm not going to suddenly produce a great symphony or come up with the completion of what Albert Einstein looked for, the unified field theory, whatever that is. I'm not going to come up with it.

That's not, the mind is not, cannot be a vehicle for that, but it can be a vehicle for this. Thank you.

Eckhart Tolle You Are Already Complete [ce574151-45e8-44e9-8a00-291d870dea45]

You are already complete. In this podcast, Eckhart addresses participants' concerns. An athlete wants to know if competition is incompatible with leading an awakened life.

Eckhart explains that one can have the desire to win, but when winning becomes the key to one's sense of identity, that's a pitfall of the ego. A man asks what to do because his presence practice has grown so deeply he no longer relates to his family. He says he loves them but doesn't want to be around them.

Another person asks for advice on how to snap out of incessant thinking. Eckhart says if we're totally absorbed in thinking, then we've lost the present moment. Eckhart reminds everyone that even though we have problems, part of the solution is to realize in our deepest essence, we are already complete.

[Speaker 4] (0:54 - 1:20)

Here's the written question. I've been a competitive athlete all of my life. Before games, I would get fired up and definitely want to win.

Has my competitive nature always been entirely my ego? And if not, what's the role of competition in the awakened life? Should we not strive to compete in anything at all?

[Speaker 1] (1:21 - 13:58)

Okay, good question. That reminds me of a story of a Zen master. He was watching an archery competition and one of the competitors, who was really a master in archery, was not doing very well.

And the Zen master was watching and they asked him, what's happening to him? Why isn't he doing very well today? And the Zen master said, his desire to win drains him of power.

His desire to win drains him of power. Now that's interesting. Wouldn't one have thought that his desire to win would empower him?

That of course, that would be ego, his desire to win. His desire to win means there's a focus on the outcome. There's a mental focus on the outcome that he wants to achieve.

That mental focus on the outcome that he wants to achieve prevents him from being totally present in the moment and giving his fullest to the moment. So there is a drain of energy because the mental focus is on the desired outcome instead of total and complete and utter attention to the present moment. If you give total and complete and utter attention to the doing of the present moment, an intense energy arises that sometimes could surpass anything that one would think a human being is capable of.

Now, how does that relate to winning and the desire to win? You can have the desire to win in competition. Of course, winning is important to you.

But winning becomes a distraction. The desire to win becomes a distraction when it is an ego, egoically motivated desire. It becomes important to your sense of identity, to your sense of self, to win, to win that competition.

Your sense of fulfillment, your sense of completion, your sense of happiness, and most importantly, your sense of identity and the completion of your sense of identity depends whether you win or you don't win that whatever it is, that competition. And that is the power drain. And that is when you feel elated.

And sometimes it's possible that despite the fact that you could have done better, you're still so good because you've practiced so much. And you can still win even if it's egoically motivated, but it's less likely. It's less likely when you need the win for your identity, then it becomes a hindrance.

But when you regard it as a game in which you participate, giving your fullest, because it's lovely to participate in the game of life, it is lovely to feel this empowerment of intense energy. And this is not only in sports, it's also when you are writing, let's say you're a creative writer. When I wrote The Power of Now and The New Earth, I could often sense this incredibly intense energy arising, not only when I was writing, it was also there even in between the writing.

Sometimes the energy, the intensity of energy was very, very high. And an outside observer might have thought that I was feeling stressed or that I was in a state of stress. There was no stress whatsoever.

We tend to associate high, intense energy with stress. And that is because when you're coming from ego, this high energy is always associated with stress because you need to get somewhere. You're not in full enjoyment of the energy.

Stressful energies can even be very destructive, destructive to the body, destructive to your mind. So the important thing then is the fact that you are able to participate in the game of life, because you're human, you're a human being. As a being, you don't need anything.

As a being, you're already complete. As a being, you are timeless. There's nothing to be added to who you are as a being.

As a being, you participate in the fullness of life. You are the fullness of life. As a human, which is your form identity, being is your essence identity, the two come together.

As a human, you engage in doing, because as a human, there are many things you can do and would want to do to participate in the created world. The universe delights in creativity. Only look at the planet, how many life forms just one planet has created.

In the oceans, on land, millions of life forms, and elsewhere undoubtedly also. So the universe delights in creating form. And you can also participate in the universe's delight by participating, becoming a co-creator in the world of form, whether you create something or you simply participate in this game of life through an activity.

You could become a master in your field, or you strive towards becoming a master in your field, and you delight in the intense energy that comes with it. You know what you want to achieve, but your sense of who you are is not linked to the achievement, and that is the key. So you can work towards an achievement without expecting a fuller sense of identity or finding yourself, one could say, without expecting to find yourself in the desired outcome.

When I get my gold medal, or when I have written this bestseller, or whatever it may be, then I will be fully myself. And then there's the idea that you will experience a completion of your sense of self, which actually can happen for brief moments, and then it disappears. So you cannot actually find your completion of your sense of self in any achievement except very temporarily.

And often the achievement doesn't last very long. You can be the greatest whatever tennis player or whatever field, and there comes a time when you're not the greatest anymore. There comes a time when you might have an accident, you might have dedicated your life to a certain physical activity, and suddenly you have an accident, you break a certain bone, and you can't do it anymore.

And your whole life was dedicated to it, and this can be devastating for a person, because they had associated their sense of identity with achievement in their particular field. But you can actually be more powerful if you do not link your sense of identity to what you do, so that the doing becomes an impersonal process where energy comes through you into this world, and then manifests in whatever form. And it's a beautiful thing that you can deeply enjoy, a joyful thing when you feel the creative process operating through you.

And creative process can even be, if you're a great tennis player, it's creative. People love watching these sports. I sometimes ask myself, why is it that people watch, there's two people with a racket and they're hitting a ball, they go on for hours, and people are fascinated.

Why can they be fascinated by watching two people hitting this ball for hours on end? And they're fascinated because they can sense that the players are present. They're totally present in that moment, and it's not the human that's doing it.

If the human interferes, they are much more likely to lose the match. If the ego comes in, if the desire to win comes in, then what the Zen master said applies, there is a power drain. But if they can be totally present, then that's the most wonderful thing, even just to watch as an observer.

There's a beauty to it. So the important thing is then, we come back to the very foundation of everything. The foundation is you need to find your identity that is transcendent to what you do or achieve or know as a person, so that you can operate in this world without the baggage of ego or the power drain of a false sense of self that seeks itself in something and then is happy for a little while when it gets it, and then it's no longer happy, or it doesn't get it and then becomes totally unhappy.

That's not how you want to live because then your activity becomes stressful. And even if you get your whatever you win in your particular field, it doesn't even help if you're so continuously focused on where you want to get to. You're never present in what you do, and you're much less likely also to be successful.

The greatest achievements were done by people who recognized that these things, they recognized that a power came through them, and they were open to it. So participate in the game of life, but find who you are first, so that you continue to know that who you are in your essence has nothing to do with what you achieve or don't achieve, and so you're no longer dependent for your sense of self on victory or defeat, gain or loss. You're not dependent for your sense of self on victory or defeat, gain or loss.

And that's essential, because if you are dependent on those things, it's a recipe for ultimate unhappiness and misery. So participate in the game of life in a free, liberated way, not looking to it for something that it cannot give you. And then you're much more likely to be successful.

That's a paradox. You're much more likely to be successful if there's this internal need to win isn't there anymore, and yet there's high intensity of energy. So you're more likely to get what you want when you don't desperately need it.

It doesn't mean there is not intense energy. There's intense energy in the present moment, and it's beautiful. Anybody who has experienced a moment of creativity or periods of in your life when you are creative, it's a wonderful, joyful thing when you feel this flow of creativity.

Enthusiasm is a word that's usually connected with that, and your action is enthusiastic. Enthusiasm, that word goes back to Greek language. It means in God, which means you're connected to the power that underlies the universe when you're enthusiastic.

Unless the ego is there, there's also egoic enthusiasm versus craziness. So let's not go there.

[Speaker 2] (14:03 - 15:31)

Hi. Hi. First of all, I really have to say thank you so much.

You've helped me out so much in my life, and I really appreciate it. But recently, I felt my presence growing and growing and growing, and it's really awesome, but there's a downside to it too because my family, who I really, really love, they have a really strong eminence of mind. It's like anything that we talk about, it's got to be logical.

It has to make sense. Why would you do that? Or look what this guy's doing over here.

So when I'm in conversation or spending time with my family, I'm kind of just sitting there in presence, and I don't feel like I get to connect with them in the way that I used to. But in order to do that, I have to get, it's like a really, there's a mind frequency that you have to get on, and then kind of just really, I can't do that the same as I used to. So it's just led to me just kind of not really wanting to be around them anymore, and that's really sad for me because it feels like you've said in many things like a kind of death almost, and I don't really know what to do about that or if there's a way I can change it or if I just have to accept it.

And if that's the case, I mean, I'm totally fine with that, and that's kind of where it feels like it has to be for me. But at the same time, I just wanted to see what your insights were because you know, I'd love to talk some things.

Yeah, yeah. So you're finding that you don't really participate anymore when they are having conversations or discussions, then you just sit there, and they notice it, and they say what's wrong with you, and you feel you're not part of them anymore, and you don't want to go there because that would draw you back into egoic mindset. So there's a transitional period when you, as you awaken spiritually, if you want to put it like that, then for a while you can feel that you don't connect anymore with people around you, and quite a few people have this challenge.

It is possible to participate in these normal interactions unless they are extremely negative. There are some people who manifest extreme negative conversations and vibrational frequencies that you would want to remove yourself from. There's even underlying sense of violence, whether it's physical or verbal violence.

There are certain energy fields that you would not want to be too close to. In fact, you can't anymore. You would have to remove yourself.

But then there are other energy fields that are just normal human craziness. I call the normal human state crazy, a bit crazy. The normal human craziness you have to learn to live with.

So not the extreme craziness that you can't, obviously, you can't participate. But the normal craziness you find when you meet your family or you meet old friends. Gradually you are able to develop the ability to participate in conversations without getting drawn into the egoic level of conversation.

So you can comment on things without getting drawn into unconscious identification with the stream of thinking. So you may even find that your presence is helpful to others because although you participate, I cannot quite explain to you because it's hard to explain how you're able to talk without being completely drawn into the mind stream that many people, when you observe conversations between people, they go and then the other replies and they're totally set in their opinions, completely identified with their mental positions.

And you are able then, you can practice, you say something, you comment on something without necessarily contradicting. But it comes from a different place than identification with the mental position. You might still have mental positions.

You probably have a mental position towards the political situation. You probably have some position. You're either on the left or on the right or somewhere in the middle, who knows?

You have some position. But the way in which you voice your mental position, are you identified with it? Do you derive your sense of self from it?

Or are you simply able to state how you see things? This is how I see it. But there's no self in it anymore.

If you can practice, practice with little comments. There's no self in it. You don't need to, whenever you become defensive about anything that you have said, you've been drawn into egoic sense of self.

Any defensiveness or aggression in what you say, you realize they have drawn you into their level of consciousness, normal craziness, in other words. But when you can observe yourself, when you can make statements without any defensiveness or aggression, then these statements are free of self. Doesn't mean you cannot have a position, but there's no self-identification with the position.

And then you can state your position and let others then say whatever they like. So gradually you learn to participate in the conversation, but coming from presence so that you continue to be able to function in this world without becoming drawn back into the craziness. That's always a danger, especially if you have a group of people and you are the only one who is present, then there's always a danger that you get drawn back into the egoic mindset.

So it's a challenge, but it's a very helpful challenge because by facing the challenge, you grow in presence. You only grow in presence when presence is challenged. That's a wonderful miracle.

By whatever life circumstances they may be, presence needs to be challenged in order to grow in this dimension. If presence were not challenged, it would not grow. That's the beauty of it.

So be thankful for these people who challenge your presence, because they can intensify your presence if approached correctly. All right. All right.

Thank you very much. Any life situation that is challenging, where you think, oh, I can't be present with that. Well, yes, it is possible.

As I said, there are some situations where you would never want to be in, like to be with violent people or something like that, that you wouldn't want to. But otherwise, there's this huge area of normal craziness where it's wonderful to be challenged, because that's how presence grows in this world. And you may find that the spark of presence suddenly transmits itself to one or two other people.

Not through explanations. Don't try to explain stuff. Just live it, but don't explain it, unless they really want to know.

If it's a true question, then there's a time to say something. But otherwise, don't try to explain anything. Don't use the word presence or anything like that.

Just be present. Okay. Thank you so much, Eckhart.

I really appreciate it.

[Speaker 1] (22:12 - 22:14)

Thank you. All the best to you.

We had a person write in, are there any tips that you can give to help us snap out of incessant thoughts immediately? For example, what about using a certain word like silence that we can say to ourself? I know you've spoken about taking a deep breath and also looking at the sky.

I find myself lately with a sharp increase in overwhelming, rampant, jumping thoughts, and I'm getting so frustrated with it all. Are there any tips to help us snap out of incessant thoughts immediately?

Well, the only place you can snap out is in the present moment. So it is always immediate. It's either in this moment, you are either in thought or you are out of thought.

So the important question is, in the moment, are you able to recognize that you do not want these thoughts because they are futile? They may even be destructive. They do not add anything to your life.

They make your life miserable. And they seem to have a life of their own. As you know, the thoughts, as I've said before, for most people, when they say, I think, it's not actually true because thinking happens to them.

Thinking is like something that takes place in you that you have no say in at all. So if there is enough awareness that you can realize that these thoughts are futile and you don't want them, and you do not believe in a subsequent thought after you've realized that you don't want this mental noise, it fulfills no purpose, except to be a terrible burden in your life. You realize that you would rather not have it because you don't need it.

And then a thought may come that says that you need to think more because worry, for example, is one such case. Worry says that you need to worry because if you don't worry, it will all fall apart. Of course, that's a lie.

So don't believe any thought that says that you really need to think a bit more about this. And then the moment you've realized you don't want it, then you can make a choice. I want to step out of thought.

Now, what do you do next? I want to step out of thought. If you say silence, I don't know if that's a good thing.

Silence is still a thought, and you might even develop a discussion or conflict in your mind that says, no, I'm not going to be silent. And then another part of their mind says, yes, I want you to be silent. So that may not work.

The one of the quickest ways is come to your senses, come to your senses, sensory perception, become aware of sensory perception, visual, auditory, those are the two main senses, and then the other senses, sense, taste, touch. But let's just stay with the two main senses, visual and auditory. Touch might be interesting too.

So come to your senses means become aware, place your attention. You can't stop thinking, can't stop thinking. I want to stop thinking, but I can't.

Of course, you can. What do I do? Open your eyes and look around the room and listen.

Are there any sounds? Touch the surface of the table or whatever is in front of you. And feel it.

Look at different objects in the room briefly. So you're consciously perceiving the room. If you're in a room, if you're outside, you do it outside.

And keep your attention on sensory perception. Listen, see, touch, be where you are, be where you are, come to your senses. And then you will notice something.

You will notice a pull of thinking, wanting to get your attention back from sensory perception. And that pull can be very strong. There's a gravitational pull, I call it sometimes, where thought wants your attention back.

It doesn't want you to step out of, it wants to continue. Like every life form, because every thought is a temporary life form. It's an energetic form.

And it wants to grow in you. In many people, thoughts represent almost the kinds of cancer that they proliferate. Certain thoughts proliferate in your mind and they get hold and one thought leads to another and another.

So you will feel the gravitational pull of thought wanting your attention back. Once you know that, you can say, there, you can, I'm verbalizing it now, but you just notice, there's the gravitational pull of thought wants to come in and take. And sometimes you lose it, you lose sensory perception again, and you're back in thought.

And then you come back into your senses. And if you can combine sensory perception with breathing, taking conscious breaths, that's even better. That's more of an anchor for presence.

You're breathing and you're watching, and maybe you're also listening. And if you then can add a third thing, then you can be really totally present if you can feel your inner body while you're there breathing, sitting and perceiving. You're fully here in the now.

And when the pull of thought will come, and you refuse to go there, it's not, you don't suppress thought, you just give more attention to sensory perception, more attention to your breath, more attention to the inner body. Do it at night if you can't sleep at night. If the room is dark, inner body awareness, and breathing.

And if there's light in the room, then you add sensory perception, visual perception, look around, be where you are, be where you are. That is the most powerful way of withdrawing consciousness from thinking. And many times you will probably lose yourself in thought again, and then you come back.

And then gradually, you spend more times, longer periods of time in no thought. And the important thing is have an agreement with yourself that you do not spend more than a certain period of time every day thinking about your life problems, whatever they may be. Say, set aside 15 minutes, 20 minutes, whatever day when you address mentally your problems, what can I do?

What is there to do? Can I do this, that, that. The rest of the time, do not allow your life situation to live in your mind and make your life miserable.

Detract from the enjoyment of life, which is always in the present moment, leading to continuous loss of the present moment. That's a dreadful fate. Never continuous loss of present moment.

Many humans are suffering from that condition. So, think about your problems for a certain period of time. For the rest of the time, have an agreement that whenever your mind comes in and starts thinking about whatever it is, your problems are, everybody has certain problems.

Do not go there. Do not see that it is futile, unless you have a sudden insight, a sudden realization, that's a different thing that will come at the most unexpected moments. But other than that, to dwell in useless, vicious circles of negative thinking, fearful thinking, empirics, experiencing emotions that come with negative and fearful thinking, it's dreadful.

So, have an agreement that you do not carry the burden of your problematic life situation, which exists as thought in you. Don't carry it around with you all the time and be in it all the time and derive your identity from it. Address your problems in a focused way.

Give it some time and then step away and then be present. It's always returning to the present moment again and again. When you have to think, you think.

Set aside problem-solving time. Every day, if that's necessary, every other day, this is my problem-solving time. The rest of the time, you use thought just in response to the present moment, because sometimes you need thought to talk to people and do this or that.

And at other times, you don't need thought. You're just present. But always, the practice is, return to present moment awareness again and again and again.

Every time you realize you lost present moment awareness, the possibility of being aware is there. Oh, I lost it. Well, that means you're there now, because otherwise you wouldn't even know that you lost it.

So, if you know you lost the present moment, that's the present moment. That is the awareness. Because if you are totally absorbed in thinking, you don't even know that you lost the present moment.

There is no present moment for you. I wish you well, and we will meet again in the now. And so, now let's have our little meditation.

We're starting now. Hear our bells.

[Speaker 3] (32:50 - 33:12)

Thank you. I'm Oprah Winfrey, and you've been listening to Eckhart Tolle, Essential Teachings, the podcast. You can follow these essential teachings on Spotify or wherever you listen to podcasts.

If you haven't yet, go to Spotify and follow this podcast. Join us next week for more enlightened teachings from Eckhart Tolle. Thank you for listening.

Eckhart Tolle You Are the Consciousness of the Universe [1a57d328-64b3-4e7d-aecd-9bdb79de4a45]

[Speaker 2] (0:00 - 0:29)

You are the consciousness of the universe. In this episode, Eckhart talks about the need for challenges. He says, without them, we would not grow in awareness.

He explains the entire universe is evolving towards greater consciousness. He says beyond our individual lives, we are connected to something vital and vast. In our highest form, Eckhart believes we are the consciousness of the universe expressing itself.

Every animal develops their particular power because of challenges. They need the challenges. And then through the challenges, they develop certain powers of like extreme speed.

And they all have a high degree of alertness. The animal needs its own alertness. It's very different from the presence that arises in humans.

It is a higher level of consciousness, but it's the same consciousness. The animal is very present and alert because if the animal were not present and alert, it would have become extinct a long time ago. And then of course, when they say they're not alert and find a safe place, and then they're totally at rest.

And they're not thinking about their problems because that's not they haven't reached the level of consciousness that produces problems. They are below problems. And your destiny is not to regress to a level of consciousness below problems by becoming stupid.

Because that's not where the evolution is going. The evolution is going towards greater consciousness. You rise above the problems, you don't fall below your problems, you begin to rise above your problems.

And then the problems, certain problems are still there. But also, yes, challenges continue to come. But because the way in which you deal with the challenges is now suddenly very different.

You no longer complain about them. You no longer have an underlying assumption that these things should not be happening to you. This should not be happening.

No, you see it for what it is. It's one of the many challenges of life that come and come and come. So you no longer have this assumption that there is something wrong with your life because of this.

You can also look see through the delusion of things that you see online, you begin to realize that what people post on Facebook is an illusory image of who they are. You no longer think, oh, look, their life is so great because look how the great meals that they have and send photos of and they're always happy. Look where I am.

And they look so good, their faces are so unblemished. Of course, you have to remind yourself that these are technical things that you can use. You can overexpose the face so much that you don't even recognize who is there.

You just see the big eyes. And everybody looks beautiful like that. They did it to me too.

We had photographers done and I just couldn't get rid of these photos that we need new photos. But every photographer, when you get the photos, has done something to your face. It's crazy.

So the challenge is there's no longer the expectation that the world is here to make you happy. It's not. Oh, that's a big relief.

I thought it was here to make me happy. So I don't need to complain anymore because it's pointless to complain about something that is not, that is actually, it's meant to be like that. Why?

Okay. And then suddenly all the challenges that come no longer were transformed into heavy problem making. Not only that, because only part of the challenges of life come from out so seemingly outside of you as through other people and events and things that happen.

And a very great part of challenges actually come from your own mind. And that is, I would suggest the greater part of challenges in your life are not through external events, although yes, they also happen. But the greater part of challenges is the unobserved mind.

What your mind is doing and saying about your life, the narrative in your mind, and the dysfunction of your mind, the misinterpretations of everything in your mind when you, as I mentioned earlier, when you look at life through the conditioning of your mind, the veil of conditioning, the narrative, and you cannot separate what is from your interpretation of what is. And suddenly you realize, okay, this is, this is a challenge, and you're not complaining anymore. You're just looking at it and facing it.

And you become more alert through every challenge that arises. Even the little ones, like your flight is canceled, you arrive at the airport, it's a little challenge. Or you stumble and you fall and you break something that's a little bit bigger challenge.

But the mechanism behind the reactivity is the same. So first you can start with little things, little things that go wrong, flight is canceled. It's canceled.

Nobody's telling you what's happening. And there are 50 people angry all around you. So you're either drawn into that or you just, okay, because you see this, oh, it's a sign for me to be alert.

It's an opportunity for intensified presence. And then you become actually intelligent for the first time. You access a, one could say higher intelligence.

And then if right, if a certain action is possible in that moment, you take action and it'll be right. It's not reactive. It's action, but not reaction.

And if no action is possible, you're simply in a state of complete surrender and you feel great just, and maybe you sit there for two hours and still nothing has happened. And then perhaps you go and go to a hotel or you sleep on this chair. And it's not, it's no longer creates a problem in the conventional sense of the word.

It's not, it no longer creates an unhappy entity that is you. It creates more alertness. And I have had accounts of people who were given a very serious prognosis when they went to see their doctor.

And usually the case is that when the doctor tells you something that might imply that there is not much time left for you, that's a terrible thing. When you believe that your life has, is not complete yet, that is so much more that you wanted to do that you could do, but you may not be able to do it. So usually the first reaction would be very great suffering.

And, but in some people that also has created, I've had quite a few accounts of people who suddenly became intensely alert and present. They refused to leave the present moment because they realized either through coming into contact with this or some other similar teaching or intuitively without having any guidance, they realized if I leave the present moment, I become unhappy. If I go just a few months into the future where I may not be here anymore or the body or me or whatever, I become unhappy.

So they got totally present and suddenly feel a sense of not only great alertness, but almost elation. There was an account a few years ago of a, unfortunately I've forgotten his name, a British musician, relatively well known, but not world famous. And he was given, he was only believe in his thirties or early forties.

He was given this diagnosis that he would only have another year to live. And, but this was an unusual case. He reported, he told it in an interview, he walked out of the doctor's office and without going through the stage of suffering first, he immediately experienced without having read any spiritual book, he immediately realized this arising of very intense, alive sense of aliveness.

And he lived completely in the present moment. Suddenly started living completely in the present moment. And then he said in the interview, he thought, why didn't I do this before?

Why did I wait for this? And he felt not, you can't call this, it's not happiness what he felt. It's not happiness.

That's a superficial thing. Something deeper than happiness. He felt life itself, the joy of life that is deeper than happiness or unhappiness.

Perhaps even to call it joy is not quite right. That an intensified sense of aliveness. And what is that?

What is that intensified sense of aliveness? And what happened? Why did he, or anybody to something like that happens?

Why do they suddenly feel that? And they didn't have it before. Because time was removed from them.

There was no more time, no future. And without future, the ego cannot survive. The sense of self, the egoic sense of self needs future and it needs past.

It's built, it's built, it's up through the past and it needs future for its fulfillment. And of course, ultimate destruction, but that's the ego doesn't want to talk about that. So the ego got destroyed through that very quickly.

And so it has happened to people who've lost everything, who were involved in huge natural disasters or manmade disasters. Not to every, it doesn't happen to everybody. Some people remain stuck in terrible suffering.

But these, it's always an opportunity for true spiritual awakening. And so, but you have come here now because you no longer need, you've done the stage of suffering. So suffering plays, it still may still be important because it will intensify your presence when it comes.

But you don't need suffering as such because you are voluntarily inviting the state of presence into your life. It begins to manifest through you. And then the challenges that happen also do not remain, are not the same that they were when you were unconscious and continuously reacting angrily or despondently in a very unhappy way, where you actually, through the dysfunctional reaction, what you do, you amplify every challenge that happens in your life.

When you cannot face it for what it simply is, when you build up a huge narrative around it, you amplify it. Let's go back to a very simple thing. Your flight is canceled at the airport.

And you become, get taken over by reactive mode. You walk up to the counter, you start shouting at the employee, how dreadful this airline. It's your, you should be, you should make sure that your clients are, you should, and you build it up.

So what before was a relatively small thing, through your reactivity, you amplify it. And what often happens, then the other person amplifies it back and you get a huge drama. And then they call the police and you're dragged away.

One often reads about people, especially these days in planes, perhaps because the seats are so narrow. So many people get very unconscious on planes and they start making a scene and shouting and then they have, the plane has to land somewhere and they have to be taken off the plane. And this is a typical example of how something that was a little challenge, you had to sit in this very confined space for two, three hours.

Okay. And you had to sit there, but their level of consciousness, perhaps through excessive intake of alcohol, became even lower than it would be normally. And then the little challenge becomes amplified so much that they end up in prison.

And this is just one example of how in human interaction, how humans, they amplify the challenges and then they get amplified back. And then sometimes even more humans participate in it. And then you get violence and warfare.

And it's just the same thing. It happens in one individual, it starts and then it spreads. And so the way in which you deal with challenges then changes, no longer reactive.

And when you no longer amplify the challenge, what tends to happen, and this is almost like a little miracle, it dissipates much more quickly and becomes transformed into something else. When you no longer fight it, then very often, very quickly, something else happens, some helpful circumstance that suddenly you say, oh, that's great. Or either something else arises to compensate for what just happened.

Sometimes something even better arises if something is taken away from you. So the flight is canceled and then, who knows, somebody says, oh, I have a private jet, come and join me. It's a little far-fetched, but.

And of course, you wouldn't get in a private jet because it's bad for the environment, so don't go there. So if you have a different relationship with the challenges of life, they dissipate more quickly. And if they don't dissipate, they become transformed into something different and helpful.

Instead of amplifying them, you help transform them through your state of consciousness. So although I'm saying that challenges continue to come at you even as you become more and more present, that is true, but it is also true that they dissolve more quickly. And what is also true is even if they don't dissolve, they no longer make you unhappy.

You no longer have an unhappy identity, an unhappy sense of self. And that's a great relief when you're no longer deriving your sense of who you are from this unhappy sense of self. And if you look at humans, not humans who are here, but normal humans, when you look at normal humans, you often see that their basic identity is a very unhappy one.

And quite a few are just waiting for the next thing to be unhappy about. They look at you and they want some kind of reaction so that they can get angry. They are, as somebody once put it, a grievance in search of a cause.

So it's not the cause that causes the grievance. The grievance is already part of their sense of identity. And of course, if a grievance is part of your sense of identity, you find causes continuously, especially if you start reading stuff online.

So your practice then is the little challenges that you encounter here through external events, and sometimes somewhat bigger challenges through your mind, whatever narrative your mind is creating around the present moment. And then experience a freedom that comes from facing the present moment without a narrative. It is as it is.

This moment is as it is. And you don't add anything to it mentally. You're just present with what is.

Suddenly, you feel liberated. And of course, that's you're awakened at that moment of complete alignment with the isness of things. There's no longer an egoic entity there.

The egoic entity needs for its survival, non-alignment with the isness of life, which is always now. I'm saying it again, the ego needs for its continued survival, that sense of non-alignment with the isness of things, it needs to have an antagonistic relationship with life. That strengthens the ego.

And the ego has an antagonistic relationship with life. And what's life? Where does life happen?

Always here and now. So the ego has an antagonistic relationship with the present moment. It wants something else.

And that something else is never here and now. So it's condemned to continuous unhappiness. And it loves its unhappiness.

It loves it, because it's sustained by it. It is the food for its, it's the fuel for the ego. It's unhappiness.

It loves antagonism, having enemies, great. Nations do it. We need an enemy, because who are we if we don't have the other?

So we need to emphasize the otherness of the other. People do it to other people, but nations can do it also to others. So who is the, who is the bad nation now?

We need to find the, these are the bad guys. It got, there was a problem when Soviet communism collapsed, because this one big enemy suddenly didn't seem to be there. And then for a while, they didn't know what to do.

Well, then of course came the terrorists and all that. So that's, then that can, that's fine. And then, but now they've discovered that Russia is bad, not even without communism.

Russia has continuously evil intentions to interfere in elections. Of course, United States never do. So, so the, the practice then of not adding unnecessary narrative to what is, and suddenly you become free, you're just alert.

Wow. But what does that imply? What does it imply when we say not adding a narrative?

What is a narrative? A narrative is a sequence of thoughts. So not adding a sequence of thoughts to the present moment, what it's really saying is, there's a space of alert stillness.

Because then that means you're not adding a narrative, you're aware, but you're not interpreting, not conceptually. There's a deep knowing that awareness, but it's not conceptual. There are two types of knowing in this world.

One is conceptual, conceptual mind. And the other type of knowing is non-conceptual. And that's far greater.

That's intuitive knowing. That's a, that's a, that's the, that is higher intelligence, one could say, when you look at something and you know, but you don't call it anything. So you remove, so to not to add unnecessary mental baggage to what is, implies that you're able for a moment to be, to face whatever is in the state of alert stillness.

Like the heat here now. It just is. If you don't complain about it mentally, then it's still, it's not comfortable.

Nobody would even say it's comfortable. But you don't have to call it in your mind, it's dreadfully uncomfortable. You don't even have to call it uncomfortable.

You know, the body would rather be somewhere cooler. It's not a problem. You could get up and go out and that's your choice.

Or you can stay and say, this is what is. So if you can't get out, or you choose not to, that's the isness of this moment. And then you become free as your inner state becomes free of increasingly free of external conditions.

The external conditions no longer determine your inner state of consciousness. That's an enormous freedom. Because until you, that happens, you're at the mercy for your inner state of consciousness.

You're at the mercy of what happens continuously. An unpleasant person makes you feel equally unpleasant or disagreeable or even worse. And then you have a nice person, you feel, oh, that's nice.

And then something good happens, you feel, oh, great, great, but it never lasts so very long. And then the next thing happens, that's bad. And so, oh, oh, oh, my God.

So it continues at the mercy of situations, people, and so on. And so you're reactive. All this keeps the ego, the false sense of self going.

So your practice here is then as much as possible, face the present moment, without any narrative and experience the beauty of that. It's easy with nature, you can look at a tree, you can look at the sky, and the many plants here, without imposing any narrative on it, you can just watch, wow. Wow is a good word.

Wow isn't ultimately, it's the least conceptual it can be. Wow is just wow. After wow comes nothing, there's just a space.

Wow is not really an interpretation, it's just a remnant of an interpretation. Wow. And then there's stillness.

I don't know, it's maybe apocryphal, apocryphal, but I read them as Steve Jobs, the iPhone man, when he died, his last word was wow. I don't know if it's true. But that's a nice last word.

If I have to have a last word, why not wow? Wow. I will let you go soon, but not quite yet.

Just a few more minutes. A few more minutes. Don't count the minutes.

One more thing now, while you're here, this is just an additional comment, all connected with what we've been saying. As much as possible, don't carry around with you, or as little as possible, carry around with you your life situation in your mind. Everybody has a life situation, something that you left at home, a certain set of circumstances and problems, problems, yes, everybody has them, a certain set of circumstances and problems to do with other people, your job, your health, your financial situation, your living situation.

Some of these things get mixed into a particular mixture, configuration. And so there's not a single person who does not have a somewhat problematic life situation. When you look back and go, things that needs to be solved, or something needs to be sorted out, or don't know, big problems, what's going to happen, you don't know.

So usually people walk around carrying this burden of their life situation, they're so identified with it, the entire personality is made up of this problematic life situation. And they don't know they're carrying this burden around. And most of the time, they think about it.

And they think by continuously thinking about it, they must arrive at some kind of solution. But that's not how a solution arises. Focused thinking from time to time, yes.

But continuous overthinking is the opposite of finding a solution. It is amplifying the so called problem, and amplifying a problematic sense of self, which is a huge heavy ego. So don't walk through the beautiful surroundings here with the heaviness of your, I call it your life situation.

You can take it up again, when you go home, and address your problems, whatever can be done, you do what cannot be done, you surrender to, that's fine. But here's this is about something else. It's not about your life situation.

It's about finding life, the life that's underneath your life situation. And that is the being. Your life situation is concerned with doing all kinds of things and happenings.

But underneath your life situation, there is a transcendent, I sometimes call it a transcendent dimension. There's a sense of beingness of presence, that is far deeper than your person. It's underneath the person, so to speak.

This is why you're here to, to go into this sense of being, so that you are not consumed by your life situation and by doing. So this is not denial, this is not denial of your life situation. It's finding the transcendent dimension.

And once you begin to find the transcendent dimension, you're just becoming still here, alert, still, watch, transcendent dimension begins to open up. Don't think about your problems here. What point is that?

And how do you get out of it? If your mind has a certain momentum, and you cannot stop thinking the mind, then just choose certain simple, simple practices, no matter where you are, choose conscious breathing. Even while you're walking, choose conscious breathing into the body, and you begin to feel the inner body, you feel the abdomen.

I'm developing a Buddha abdomen. That must be a good thing, I suppose. So abdomen, you feel that.

And that takes you out of the mind, brings you present sense perceptions, be alert, look, listen, feel the air on your skin, breathe, the scent, all come to your senses, breathe, all these things take you out of the mind. And so that is how you let go of your life situation while you're here, and begin to explore the beingness of you, the deeper I am the transcendent dimension, and you begin to realize then that who you are is not your historical personality that happens on the surface of life. Yes, you need to deal with stuff.

You cannot say, I'm not dealing with anything anymore, because it's all an illusion. You have to deal with it. That's part of it.

If you deny it completely, then life will show you that that's not the way. So you have to deal with it, but not be consumed by it. If you're consumed by it, it's a terrible fate.

Then you ultimately means you're consumed by your mind, because it's the life situation exists, you keep it alive in your mind. And the demands of life are constant, the external demands. The life wants you to do this and that and that and this.

So there's the financial stuff, the relationship problems, people are so complicated. Oh, my God. And don't be consumed by this.

So we are here to find the transcendent dimension. So your sense of who you are is derived from there. And then you can deal with the rest.

But if your sense of who you are, your sense of identity is derived from the historical person with its problematic life situation, then you're lost. Basically, you're lost, you're lost in your life situation, which is overwhelming. And you're lost in your mind.

Basically, that's what it means. The one Indian teacher described the human condition, what's the human condition is basically lost in your mind. So the secret then is, where is does your sense of identity come from?

Where do you derive it from? Your sense of identity is, and we will be going deeply into that. Because my sense of transcendent identity is no different from my transcendent identity isn't really mine.

I just say like that. Your transcendent identity is not yours. Although sometimes I might use that word yours.

There's a transcendent identity in that we are one. Once you realize that who I am in my essence is identical with who you are in your essence. That's a wonderful realization.

And what if you want to put a word to that essence, you can say is, the essence of who we are is consciousness. But not my consciousness or your consciousness. We are expressions of the one consciousness, temporary incarnations, disguises of the one universal consciousness.

So you are this, the universe, there's an underlying consciousness that manifests through all the multiple billions of life forms, it incarnates continuously, it is born and dies, is born and dies, is born and dies. And gradually, there's an evolutionary process that we cannot possibly understand. But it's there, it's, it's happening.

So you are the consciousness of the universe, you're not, in addition to being a person, which seems to be so overwhelming and all consuming, there's something much more vital and important that you are. And that's the consciousness of the universe incarnating as a person. But the strange thing is, through facing the problems of the so called person and the challenges, the who you are beyond that begins to emerge more fully, there's again, a little paradox.

It's through the very things that seem to block the evolution of your consciousness are actually the things that bring it about the things that will intensify your consciousness. And again, as I've said before, various occasions, that is the deeper meaning of the Christian cross, which is this, whether you're a Christian or not, you're able to see the truth that the Christian cross points to, although some people say, Oh, I don't like the cross, it's suffering. No, it's not just suffering.

The cross is a torture instrument. And it's a symbol for the transcendent dimension, which we could call the divine. The cross is a holy symbol for the divine.

But and it's a torture instrument. It's a weird paradox. So the very thing that's a torture instrument, where the archetypal human is being tortured and killed, and then transcends that.

And suddenly, the torture instrument becomes something very different. It's a symbol for the transcendent. And so you don't have to be a Christian to see that there's something hidden in that.

And that applies to everybody's life. So the very thing that seems to block your progress on the path, those challenges are actually there to awaken you. And that's a wonderful realization.

Eckhart Tolle You Are the Light Of The World [bae525af-ddb4-47da-bbc9-fe83bd8bf7f4]

You are the light of the world. In this episode, Eckhart encourages listeners to release their thinking so they can become aware of what he calls their being. He says, most of us have a mistaken sense of identity based on what we think about ourselves.

He explains, however, that's not who we really are. Eckhart goes on to quote Jesus who said, you are the light of the world. Eckhart believes what Jesus is saying is, you are the light of consciousness because that is our true identity and the source of our deepest essence.

The essence of our gathering here and the essence of all spirituality is to discover in yourself the possibility of stepping out of thought and initially for brief moments. And that is an amazing thing. Before your identity was derived from the movement of thought, your identity was derived from the narrative, the story of me, my life was your identity, what you called my life.

And now you become aware or when there's a moment of no thought, what is it that who or what are you and I'm not just talking about it now, as I talk, let's do it. We're not doing it, it's the wrong word, but the language is very limited. There's no doing, we're becoming aware of being, that's really what it is.

So you don't do anything to become aware of being. So there's no thought in this moment, in this moment, let's pretend for a moment that past and future don't exist. I'm saying, pretend just to be more acceptable because ultimately past and future actually don't exist.

But to be more acceptable here, I'm saying, let's pretend that past and future don't exist because where are they? I don't see them right here. Can't see any past and future.

Okay, this is all there is. And in this moment, you don't need to remember your name. I mean, until I mentioned it just now, you probably didn't.

You weren't thinking of your name as you were sitting there probably, unless you're mad. And you weren't thinking of your email address and you weren't thinking of yesterday's breakfast and you weren't thinking about your childhood as you were sitting there, hopefully. And so as you're sitting here, let's say if you don't remember anything about your life, what's left of your life, when you just come into this moment and say, this is all there is.

And okay, then you have sensory perception. That's the first thing that you're left with is sensory perception, visual, auditory, and perhaps other tactile, breathing, scent, a little bit perhaps. The predominant ones are visual and auditory, but you can also feel perhaps your skin.

So that's, you're coming to your senses right now, coming to your senses without interpreting what you see. You don't need to interpret, you just see. Now, what happens inside you if you don't interpret?

What is there? Are you there as a person? No, the person is the whole conditioned mind.

But when you just perceive, the person has subsided and, but how is it possible for you to perceive? Well, obviously there's a consciousness. There's an awareness.

That's the background to the perception. Or one could say it's the space in which the perception happens. You could say it's the light in which the perception appears.

There is a presence. Now, next step, right here and now, you're aware of your sense perceptions here. And how are you aware of yourself now if there's no memory in it?

What's left of you? What's left of you is just a deep sense of presence, of beingness. It has no form.

In other words, what's left is a simple knowing that you are. Very hard to talk about, but you can sense the presence that you are. Can't say much about it, but undoubtedly, this is the one thing that's beyond doubt is that you are conscious.

And even that's not 100% correct because if I say you are conscious, I've created a duality between you and as if consciousness were something that you have. But the essence of who you are, the I am, is consciousness. You are consciousness.

You are awareness. And this is exactly what Jesus meant, although in churches, it's not generally understood. It's exactly what he meant when he said to his disciples, you are the light of the world.

He also said it about himself. There are two things he said. In one place in the New Testament, he says, I am the light of the world.

In another place, he says, you are the light of the world. That's the most amazing pointer to who you are in your essence. It doesn't mean you are special.

You are the light of the world, but you are not. We are the light of the world, but they are not. That's not, to sense yourself as formless presence is so liberating.

And then that becomes increasingly the foundation for your sense of identity. But it's no longer, it's very different from the form identity. Now, the form identity remains for a while as a physical body and as a psychological form of you, but the difference is you no longer derive your sense of who you are from your form identity.

You are not identified with your physical form or your person, the person. You're not identified with it. It's still there, but it no longer gives you your sense of who you are.

That's an enormous shift and enormous difference. Your sense of who you are is timeless. It has nothing to do with your historical personality.

Your sense of who you are as this essence has nothing to do with whether on the surface level of reality, your life can be considered a huge success story for a while until it ends, or your life is a total failure. Let's say you've, let's say if it's a total failure, you've taken one bad decision after another because you were totally unconscious and anybody who's unconscious will take one bad decision after another. Well, occasionally you might have a lucky one, but it doesn't last.

And you end up, you're finally there in a prison cell. The whole thing has been complete, a total and complete disaster and mess. I messed it all up totally.

My whole life, I messed it all up. Now this thought, this narrative in your mind will create an enormous amount of unhappiness and strong ego too, but a very unhappy ego. But in your unhappiness, perhaps the ego would still be blaming others, can blame society or your parents or the unfair system.

You are the victim of the system. That's a victim is a wonderful ego food. I'm the victim.

Everybody, of course, is a victim to one, to a greater or lesser degree, because living in this relatively unconscious world, people have done things to you, sometimes very bad, sometimes bad enough, but everybody has been to some extent the victim of other people. No doubt about that. And also some very bad things humans have done to other humans, no doubt about that.

But the question is, is that memory and that narrative the basis for your sense of identity? Are you clinging to that narrative of yourself as a victim? And that becomes the main part of your sense of who you are.

That is a huge prison. It's worse than a physical prison. If you have put yourself in a mental prison of victimhood, it's worse than a physical prison.

So, but I just gave the example of somebody who has messed it all up, and now you're ending up in a prison cell. Or you have somebody else who will say who has achieved great things, and now he's sitting in his mansion and around where these wealthy young people, these Silicon Valley, you have built up your huge computer empire with probably the famous parent's garage. It's all started.

And now you have billions in the bank and your private jet. Now for the realization of your essence identity, and it makes no difference whether it's one or the other. The only difference is perhaps when things go wrong, so to speak, in your life, usually you're closer to it than when things go right.

You're closer to it when you're not in your comfort zone than when you're in your comfort zone. So the guy in Silicon Valley or Wall Street or wherever they are, they may have to wait until the whole thing collapses, and then they lose. They're no longer in their comfort zone.

The spiritual awakening is very, very rare. I don't even, haven't heard of anybody who became awakened in their comfort zone. Oh, that's bad news.

So it's when your surface reality, becomes frustrating, that's the beginning of potentially finding the portal into the awakened state. But when your surface reality is relatively pleasant, by the way, it doesn't stay like that, but for the time being, let's say it's relatively pleasant, you're not really motivated into finding the deeper essence of who you are, because why not, let's fly to Paris? We'll have a great meal there, where you feel a little bit uncomfortable and discontent.

Okay, let's go there. Let's do this. Let's try this.

More sensory experience. You can buy any sensory experience. And then after a while, you find being in your comfort zone, after a while, becomes your discomfort zone.

And then finally you've made it. And then finally, there's a possibility of awakening. And so the challenges that we encounter in life, many people have an attitude of resentment.

Or a feeling that there's something very wrong with the world, or there's something very wrong with my life, when they're being challenged by difficult situations, difficult people, loss of some kind. Did I mention difficult people? Oh, yes.

You may find a lot of your suffering, unhappiness, strangely enough, comes from other people. They are so difficult. And often the very people that were supposed to make you happy, suddenly they don't fulfill their purpose anymore, and they make you unhappy.

It's called the divorce court. And there's an implied belief that this shouldn't be happening. Life should unfold beautifully without all that stuff going wrong.

And to some extent, yes. To some extent, especially as you live more consciously and no longer totally in the grip of ego, you're beginning to awaken. There's an awareness.

You no longer create unnecessary suffering in your mind through reactivity. We are able to drop the unnecessary baggage of creating narratives and creating your own suffering through your narratives. You let go of that.

So it's a huge chunks of suffering begin to fall away. But challenges still come. And even then, it doesn't mean everything will now go totally as expected and as it should.

There's still loss happening from time. There's still, you still come across difficult people. How is that?

I don't want any more difficult. Yeah, but they're everywhere. As the famous French philosopher said, hell is other people.

He looked very unhappy, by the way. Well, the only photo I ever saw of him, he looked unhappy, so I don't know. Jean-Paul Sartre.

It's true, other people are difficult. So your life improves immeasurably as you become more conscious, but it will still challenge you. And it won't mean you will never experience loss again.

It doesn't mean things may not go wrong, still occasionally, not perhaps as drastically as before. You don't create your own mayhem and chaos anymore. But challenges, yes, different kinds of challenges come.

And if you no longer complain that a challenge shouldn't exist, difficulties shouldn't exist, obstacles shouldn't exist, things should not be canceled, they shouldn't go wrong. If you drop that expectation, then it's actually fine. But be careful that if you still have an unspoken assumption that there's something wrong when challenges happen, that would draw you back into unhappiness.

There's nothing wrong when challenges happen. We grow through them. And if you hadn't had yours, you wouldn't be here.

If I hadn't had mine, I wouldn't be here. So we wouldn't be here. We would not be here without it.

And so retrospectively, we can actually be grateful for the suffering that we've had, retrospectively. The question is, the challenges of life, when they come, do we transform them into unhappiness or are we able to just face them and then go with it, go with them and do whatever action is possible or necessary or totally accepted at this moment? This is how it is.

So when you live more consciously, you no longer convert the difficulties of life, the inevitable difficulties and challenges of life. You no longer convert them into unhappiness, which means they don't contribute anymore to your unhappy person identity. You're no longer becoming a more unhappy person.

You'd be surprised how many people's main sense of identity in this world is unhappiness. And they're just looking for the next thing to be unhappy about. And they always find something or to complain about, to be angry about.

There's an expression that then you become a grievance looking for a cause. And of course, you always find the causes. So important thing then to realize that I'm sure there are some of you who have carried the burden of a very unhappy self for many years.

And perhaps you're just beginning to step out of it. You're just perhaps beginning to transcend it. And there are still millions in this world who carry the burden of an unhappy narrative in their minds, unhappy self.

And you think about then my life, why did it come to this? Why didn't my own, these my expectations that I had when I was 20, why didn't they work out? Why did my marriage collapse?

Why did I lose that job? Why did I succeed and made millions and then I lost them? Why, why, why did I work for nothing for 15 years and then the whole thing that I built up collapsed?

Why is it dreadful, dreadful? All this begins to dissolve because you realize you're unconsciously creating suffering and strengthening the egoic personality through that. And then my life then is just memories.

And you begin to realize, as I sometimes put it, or people find it a little weird, when I say my life isn't a correct way of putting it because you don't have a life, you don't have a life. Because if you have a life, there's you and life. How can you be separate from life?

So if you don't have a life, one could even say you can't even lose your life. You can only lose something that you have, but you are life, you don't have a life. I am life and life and consciousness are synonymous.

It doesn't mean that every form of life is conscious, but every form of life is, the way I see it, is matter, the table, the rock, mineral, it's like frozen consciousness. Plant life is like liquid consciousness. It's an analogy.

And the mind and thinking and beyond that, consciousness itself is like vapor, mist, it rises. This isn't a water analogy. All life is manifestation of the one underlying life or consciousness in manifold forms.

So you are that, I am life is a wonderful realization. I am consciousness, I don't have a life. Yes, I have a history, but the history is not my life.

It's stuff, it's stuff in the mind, it's memories. Hence, all these things are wonderful that they happen to you because they have brought about your awakening. They all make sense if you now look back on all the things that happened, including, not only including, but especially the so-called bad things.

They brought you to this point. They brought you, they pushed you into awakening. And some people have to suffer so much that one could almost say they are forced into awakening or they become dreadfully unhappy.

A good point to reach for humans is to become very frustrated with their life and the things of this world. It's not a bad place to reach that point. And you've all reached, you've all experienced to a greater or lesser degree, becoming frustrated with the way things are and with your so-called life, to a greater or lesser degree.

Now, some people become so totally frustrated. They say, I just can't take anymore. I just can't take not another day of this dreadful suffering of just one bad thing after another.

Awful. And that's a dangerous point to reach and a very potentially awakening point to reach. It's dangerous because it could take you to suicide, but if there's anybody here who, if that ever should happen again, or you're at that point now where you feel close to, I would rather end it than carrying on the suffering.

I'm suggesting an alternative possibility. If you're so frustrated, why not try the very simple thing ultimately of completely letting go of any resistance to whatever you're experiencing at this moment, just surrender totally to this moment as it is, your experience of this moment as it is. Yes, but I'm so unhappy.

Then you accept that this moment, I feel this unhappiness, but I accept that this is my experience of this moment. Yes, but all my circumstances are so unpleasant. Look around here.

This is awful. Yes, but I completely surrender to my experience of this moment. And then finally the mind has to stop because there's nothing else to say.

And then you notice the moment you leave this moment with your thoughts, you begin to suffer again. And then that means, okay, and this immediately the suffering is forcing you back into the present moment. And then after a while, some mind movement will come back.

Oh, and this is how, if you're really that unhappy that you're close to suicide, you're very close to awakening. And it's even possible if you're, it's even possible that you can go, for most people, awakening is a more gradual process. But if you're dreadfully unhappy and then you surrender, it could be a very sudden and drastic, immediate awakening.

It wouldn't even be gradual anymore. You might still occasionally have to, when you sense the pull of old thoughts, become so easy then to come back into the present moment. And this is why I have received letters from people in prison, some of them in for life, who have said, I'm free of suffering.

I have surrendered. And they become a force of power for good in their environment where it's very much needed. So whether your suffering is extreme or whether it comes in smaller doses, use it.

Use the challenges and difficulties of life so that eventually you transcend, was the words of the Buddha. The Buddha defined his whole teaching by saying, I teach suffering and the end of suffering. That's what he said.

Some of the things that you read in Buddhist scriptures were written much later. They're attributed by the Buddha. But some things are clearly to me uttered by the Buddha.

And I teach suffering and the end of suffering is undoubtedly what he actually literally said in which it means, I teach suffering means I show you how suffering arises. I show you how you create suffering through unconsciousness. And I teach the end of suffering.

And I show you how you can transcend suffering and transcend the self that is ultimately illusory because that's the second part of the Buddha's teaching is that the self is an illusion. By that he means what we've been talking about, the form identity of you, that is identification with that is the illusory self. And then the Buddha said, when they asked him, well, what's then, who are we then?

What's the essence of it all? Who are you? Who are we?

And he said, another term that he used is translated, not very well translated as emptiness. And that does not sound very inspiring at all. So if he says your essence is emptiness, what do you mean emptiness?

And then of course, very often his teaching was such that when they later talked about it, he said, when he was asked that question, he kept noble silence. In other words, he didn't answer, so, but he kept noble silence. That means he was just present, but didn't go into conceptualization.

Does God exist? They asked him, and his answer, and that's the answer, to go into that beautiful space of no thought or to realize within yourself that beautiful space of no thought, space, I said. Now, remember what the Buddha said, emptiness, space, my translation of the term sunyata would be spaciousness, the spaciousness, spacious awareness, the spaciousness of no thought.

You have risen above thought, not fallen below thought. That's a beautiful place too. Below thought is a beautiful place of connectedness with being without even knowing it.

The tree lives below thought and is a manifestation of the one consciousness too. Your dog, even your dog lives below thought. That's why he's so happy a lot of the time, has no self image, because you need thought to have a self image.

You need thought to have an ego. Some dogs and cats have beginnings of an ego, but of course they've lived with people who have a huge neurotic ego, so they have adopted it a little bit. But most dogs and cats are still surprisingly free of ego.

They're just there. But below, we don't want to go there. We don't want to go below thought, but they are there and they're beautiful.

This is why people feel attracted to dogs, because the beingness to the eyes of the dog speaks to you. The being of the dog, you can sense, you feel more alive when you look in the eyes of the dog, because the dog doesn't impose conceptualization to you. He has no conceptual identity.

So for a moment, for a few seconds, the dog frees you of your conceptual identity in the head and the tail wags. So, beautiful, below thought. The dog doesn't have a relationship with himself.

Humans do. They don't love themselves, they don't hate themselves, they're not unhappy with their body or their appearance, because they don't have a mental image of themselves. So even the fattest dog is okay.

No problem. And now humans rise above thought, and that's the spaciousness that the Buddha talks about. Emptiness is the usual translation.

You become, you realize yourself as spacious awareness. It's formless is another word for it, formless consciousness. And what did Jesus talk about when they asked him about when he said kingdom of heaven, kingdom of heaven?

What has that got to do with Buddha's sunyata or emptiness or spaciousness? Oh, rest a moment, let's see. Kingdom of heaven is very spacious.

If you had to choose something in the sense-perceived world as an analogy for emptiness, you would probably look at the spaciousness of the heavens. Kingdom of heaven, that's the old translation. In my translation, it is kingdom is dimension and heaven is spaciousness.

So the kingdom of heaven that Jesus talks about is the dimension of spaciousness. And where is that? It's in you.

It's a dimension of consciousness in you. Exactly the same what the Buddha talks about and points to. And it is realized when you are able to access this dimension of no thought.

At first, yes, meditation can help. And it's a good thing, I recommend it. It may not be for everybody, but it can be very helpful as long as you don't feel that you're doing a meditation.

Because the meditation is the realization of being, which is immediate. You cannot have a means to an end. If I meditate in order to realize being, you immediately project the realization of being into the future, where it isn't.

Because there is no future, except as a thought in your head. The future is a thought in your head. Otherwise, some explorer would have found it.

I have found the future, the undiscovered land. No, nobody has found it. It is for practical purposes.

We need past and future. There's no doubt about it. But beyond that, we need to realize that we don't want to be trapped in the mental concepts of past and future.

The future is experienced as a thought in your head, as is the past. So the future and past have their purpose, but we need to be able to go beyond them as regards our state of consciousness. And this is the arising of the timeless state of consciousness, the timeless dimension to who you are.

It's a liberation from the person. Spaciousness, the kingdom of heaven, the dimension of spaciousness. It's here and now.

So to be able to step out of thinking, I recommend highly that you practice contemplation, if only for brief moments, sensory perception without imposing thought on what you're perceiving. Just a clear, alert seeing. There's just looking.

And immediately there's a different dimension to what you're perceiving. You can look at a flower or a tree. And before, when you perceived through thought, the veil of thought, you thought you knew what it is you're looking at because you had a label for it.

In many, many cases, in most cases, it's just because you have a label for something doesn't mean you know what it is. It's conceptual knowledge. It's a lot like that.

You have labels for something. And that is, our civilization knows only this kind of knowledge, conceptualization. Analysis can accumulate knowledge through conceptualization.

You have access now to vast knowledge through the internet. All of mankind's, humankind's, what does Trudeau say? People kinds.

All of people kinds knowledge is at your fingertips on the internet. Is that going to save us? Is that going to save the world?

Is more of that, just need a bit more knowledge and then we're going to sort out all the problems of the world. We need a bit more knowledge. Okay.

We have a lot already. Or is there another dimension of knowing, of knowledge that we have completely neglected? Yes.

And what is that dimension? That's the dimension of knowing through awareness, which is non-conceptual. So you can look at a tree without a single thought in your head, and suddenly you know this tree in a non-conceptual way, which means, if I had to put it in words, you can sense the being of the tree.

You can sense even the sacredness of the tree, but you can only sense that because you're in touch with that dimension within yourself. And you're no longer misled by concepts. You can still use concepts when you need them, but you're no longer burdened by concepts.

And then you can look at a tree and can sense the vastness and the mystery and the aliveness and the sacredness and the stillness that surrounds the tree. A whole new dimension of interacting with a tree that you had no idea of when all you had in your mind was ideas about the tree. You can do the same thing as I know these days, tourists walk around places and visiting.

Tourists are everywhere. Interesting branch species has developed out of humans. Tourists, I occasion, and they go around with the walk of my favorite example.

In Europe, you have cathedrals. In other places, you have temples, beautiful buildings. They've been there for hundreds of years or a thousand years.

You walk into a temple, you walk into an ancient cathedral and you can hire a tape, not tape anymore. It's a digital thing you put in your ears. It's your guide.

You hire this machine. It guides you through the cathedral and it talks to you all the time. After you've done that, it takes an hour.

You have learned so much about this cathedral. Nothing wrong with that. But have you truly experienced that place?

Have you really been there? In order to really experience that place, you can't do it through knowledge, although knowledge has its place. To really experience it, you need to say, when you go to the door, when they say, do you want to rent this thing?

I say, no, thanks. And then you walk through the cathedral and you go, wow. God.

And after half an hour, an hour, maybe you sit there for a while, just sort of take it all in, absorb it. And after an hour, you walk out. And if somebody then asked me, asked you, well, what have you learned?

Nothing. And yet you have had a very deep experience of that place. And that's another way of knowing that's totally neglected in our civilization.

It's all connected with awareness, with the awakening, with presence. So there are two ways of knowing, conceptual and non-conceptual. If you neglect the non-conceptual, you miss a whole dimension of life.

And actually the most important, the very foundation of life is then missed. And you get trapped in just one half of life, which is the conceptual. And the other half just doesn't exist for you.

And if a civilization continuously ignores, even discourages people from realizing that other half, I don't believe it can last for very long. So, and that other way of knowing from a conceptual viewpoint looks like ignorance. That's the strange thing.

So when you walk into the cathedral or the temple and you go like this, you don't know anything. From a conceptual viewpoint, you become comfortable with not knowing conceptually, but in that not knowing conceptually, there's a deeper knowing that has nothing to do with concepts. And that's not taught at school or universities, unless there's some individual teachers, perhaps bring it in.

And that's the way in which you know yourself also. It's not, you can't just, you know the famous dictum in ancient Greece, know thyself. That goes back to Pythagoras, the first philosopher, the most important thing.

Now you can know yours, again, you have the two dimensions. Know yourself on the one hand means, know what makes up your personality. Know about your past, about why you do things, why you have certain reactive pattern.

All that's very useful. You can go to a psychoanalyst and the psychoanalyst will help you on that level to know yourself. And then, well, when you were seven, what did you experience then?

Oh, well, this, and then, and then what about when you were eight? And nine, oh, that was terrible. Oh, God.

No, there is a place for that. It takes a long time, of course, to find out more about yourself. Psychoanalysis can take, some people are in it for 20 years.

I'm not saying this, it's wrong, but it's this one dimension of knowing yourself. And it's not the fundamental dimension of knowing yourself. The dimension of knowing yourself is knowing yourself not through concepts, but knowing yourself through awareness, not only through awareness, as the awareness, as the consciousness.

And then you have, and then that's, that's then a balanced human life. A balanced human life is when you know yourself as a human being. A human, no, that's a beautiful term.

Human being, two things. You know yourself as a human, which is who or what you are as a personality, but you also know yourself as the being. The being is not, nothing to do with concepts.

The being is the consciousness itself. The human is the ripple, the being is the ocean. And when you realize yourself as the being, then the ripple is fine for as long as, as long as the ripple is a ripple, actually has a much better existence than before when the ripple didn't know his or her own essence.

Once the ripple knows its essence, the ripple life actually, although not completely free of challenges, the ripple life actually becomes much more pleasant. You can actually enjoy the things of this world. You can enjoy other human beings.

You can enjoy even having things, but you're no longer looking for yourself in any of these things. And most importantly, you're no longer looking to the world or whatever the world can offer you and looking for some ultimate fulfillment or happiness through the things of this world, the surface dimension. And this is a wonderful shift when you realize nothing in this world is going to make you really ultimately happy, not for long.

Brief moments, yes, but not for long. And that's amazing. First of all, it looks, oh no, but of course it's good news.

It's good news. Nothing, you drop the demand that a human being, another person, a situation, a place, or some kind of achievement should make you happy. You say to them, make me happy.

Come. Why can't you doing it? And then you say, there's something wrong with this world.

It's not making me happy. I have failed. It must be me because everybody else is obviously happy.

And then you drop the demand that a place, person, achievement, attainment, possession should make you happy because you realize the being of yourself. That's where true happiness, joy, aliveness, peace, stillness arise. That's already there.

The rest is the icing on the cake, which is there for a while. You enjoy it when it's there. And then of course, everything goes.

After a while, it dissolves. The Buddha's famous teaching on impermanence, don't attach yourself to or look for yourself in anything that's impermanent. And everything is impermanent.

Fleeting comes and goes. So you have the two dimensions and then you're no longer just a human. That's so frustrating to be just a human without the being.

And you are a human being. Wow, that's like such liberation from just being human. Become comfortable then with what, from a conceptual viewpoint, looks like a state of ignorance, which is, you remember the example I gave, walking around a cathedral or a temple or looking at a tree.

From a conceptual viewpoint, it looks like ignorance, but there is a deep knowing there that's nothing to do with concepts. So you become comfortable with not knowing. That's a beautiful place to be.

Become comfortable with not knowing. And then you'll find that when you do, when the mind begins to operate out of that state of not knowing, you have actually many interesting insights and ideas and realizations, but you need to be rooted in not knowing. Rooted, that's a very, very powerful way of being.

So you have the two dimensions. The human is then rooted in the being. So become comfortable with, you don't need to continuously interpret everything around you.

Become comfortable with just the famous Beatles song, "Let It Be." Become comfortable with letting it be without imposing anything on it. Situations, you remember, we talked about situations, narratives about situations, let it be.

No need to interpret everything. Become comfortable with not knowing. Again, when you look at another human being, you need to immediately interpret who they are and whatever, have immediate opinions and judgments about them, or can you just look at somebody and just have no judgment?

Just take them in, spacious awareness, just looking, just listening. Listening, another thing that comes with not knowing, when you truly want to listen, you cannot know and listen. Your mind needs to be still and alert, which is a state of not knowing when you're listening to another human being.

That's creative listening. And creative listening is the only way two human beings can fruitfully interact with each other and then have a fruitful outcome of the interaction when each one, or at least one of them, can be in that state of pure listening, which is not knowing, not immediately formulating thoughts. So that's the practice of stepping out of thought.

What helps, especially initially, as you step out of thought is to feel the aliveness in your inner body, to feel the aliveness in your inner body that can become an anchor for not thinking, but not falling below thinking, no, not being, staying alert. And then you realize when you're present, you're present with your entire body. It's not just the, it's not the sense-perceived physical body.

There's something deeper there, but you can feel that as every cell of the body, even here and now, you can feel the aliveness that pervades the entire body that can become an anchor for presence. So that's the new consciousness that's arising, means human beings are able to live in both dimensions. And that is the rest for the rest of your so-called life.

I say your life, because we know you don't have one anyway. The rest of your so-called life, which is not yours, is that is the practice is to live that. And that's the purpose.

Whatever you do otherwise is secondary. Just bring that into what you do and wherever you are, you bring in that practice, that after a while, it's not a practice anymore. It's a natural way of being.

So you're no longer completely absorbed any longer in the conceptualizing mind. So basically this is the essence of it all. This is the secret of life or the secret of the universe for the time being.

Thank you.

Eckhart Tolle You Are the Present Moment [359d0179-0860-44ce-b423-f4c159a97ddb]

You are the present moment. In this podcast, Eckhart gives a brief talk on his signature teaching the power of presence and then answers questions from the audience. He says the important thing to understand is the presence that inhabits our bodies.

It's not something that is external to us. It is the essence of us. He says the secret and the mystery of the present moment is that we are the present moment.

Welcome everybody. Wonderful to be with you. Here we are again in the present moment.

So we might as well become aware of the present moment. How do you do that? Some people are thinking the entry point into the present moment or present moment awareness is sensory perception.

What you see here or other senses may be involved to a lesser extent, mostly what you see and hear right now. Be aware of that without labeling it mentally. And what you are aware of is the surface of reality.

One could say the surface of the ocean of being. So your attention is in sense perceptions. And then you notice the attention itself, which is the consciousness that makes sense perception possible.

And that's of course very subtle because it's not an object. You notice the subject behind all objects of consciousness. Consciousness is the eternal subject.

Whatever is being perceived or thought or felt is the object of consciousness. So your entire world arises as objects of consciousness, as sense perceptions, then also a more abstract reality, which is conceptual thinking. And there's the emotional reality feeling within yourself.

These arise and subside. Sense perceptions depend on where you are and what you happen to be directing your sense of perception towards. It changes, of course.

I can look at the ceiling, I can look out of the window, whatever. So sense perceptions, you can become aware of your inner perceptions too, the inner objects of consciousness, thoughts. There goes one, which comes and then it subsides.

Emotions, whatever you may be feeling right now, is an object of consciousness. And that's fine. This is what you feel right now.

But in addition to what you feel at this very moment, there is something else that is bigger than what you feel. And that is the consciousness through which you feel what you feel. To become aware of this awareness itself, which is you ultimately, the essence of you.

You become aware of yourself as the perceiving consciousness. And that presence, you sense it as an inner thing. And then you may begin to notice that this, the presence that you feel is all around you too.

It's not, there's no distinction anymore between inside and outside. There is a presence that pervades the universe, it pervades your body, pervades the space. You could say it is the space, because the space is not anything either.

Space isn't an object. Consciousness isn't an object. You cannot grasp it.

You can't say it's here or it's there. So becoming aware of the present moment is ultimately becoming aware of yourself. The deeper levels of yourself, the deeper level of yourself, the deeper dimension of yourself.

And so as you become aware of the present moment, you feel this presence that pervades you, that is all around you, that the universe is no longer an inanimate thing that is there around you. It's an alive presence. Everything has aliveness in it.

There's something that holds the atoms and molecules together of any form, a vast intelligence that operates and manifests as form temporarily. And at some point, it withdraws and then the form dissolves. For example, I've shown this, it's a pebble.

Now it's very smooth. There's tiny, tiny sparkles. There's some crystallization happening, almost invisible, tiny sparkles in there.

And it's very smooth and you can, this is tactile sensory perception, you can feel that it's almost something alive in you. But of course, everybody would say, well, this is an inanimate thing. Inanimate means it has no life.

But is that true? Minerals, they're all mineral realm, which is how Earth started, apparently. It started as, at first, there was not even the plant life.

It was just mineral life. Well, most humans don't call it life. But physicists then eventually discovered, if you penetrate deeply into even a so-called inanimate object, it is intensely alive because there's a vast universe in there of atoms and molecules in motion, in vast spaces in between.

So it's continuously, it looks like something, but it's a process. It's something that life is doing in a very slow way compared to us. It's something that life is doing.

Ultimately, there are no things. They're all only processes. They're all events in consciousness.

So even the pebble is an event in consciousness. It's a form consciousness takes. And so from our point of view, we could say, what is it that gives it this shape that holds the molecules together in this particular shape?

You could ask the same question. Your body is infinitely more complex than the pebble in its atomic molecular structure. And yet there too, there's something that there's an organizing principle behind form that enables form to be, and that is a vast intelligence, this organizing principle behind that inhabits your body too.

All the functions of the body, the vast intelligence is required to coordinate the countless functions in your body every moment, the exact temperature of the blood, the digestive system, the air moving into your body every moment into the lungs, what the lungs do with it, the chemical laboratory in your stomach, highly advanced, the immune system of the body that looks out for invaders. If you had to do it, no human intelligence could do that. It goes far beyond anything human intelligence could do.

An intelligence inhabits your body, enables your body to be. And at some point, the intelligence withdraws. And the atoms and molecules are no longer held together by the organizing principle of this vast intelligence.

And then it doesn't take long before they say, okay, we might as well go our separate ways. And that's called the body decays very quickly. And that's called death.

But all it means is something withdrew from the body. The most important thing is not just to talk about it, but to sense the presence that inhabits your body, and that inhabits entire all forms in the universe, the presence of consciousness in everything. So there's a tiny, tiny glimmer of consciousness in this pebble here, too, just less than a millionth of human consciousness.

And at some point, this also will dissolve at some point, but it could take a long time. In 2000 years, if there are no external influences, this pebble will still look exactly the same. And if there are no external influence in 10,000 years, it would still look exactly the same.

And then perhaps in 100,000 years or half a million years, it would eventually also dissolve. So the important thing in all this is to sense that presence that inhabits your body, not as something external to you, but as the essence of you. For example, you can breathe in, you feel the breath moving into the body.

And that makes it easier to feel the aliveness that pervades the body as you feel them. And thinking subsides for a moment, but you're fully conscious. And that's presence.

And that's the present moment. That's why it's called presence. So the secret and mystery of the present moment is that essentially, and in essence, you are the present moment.

The one thing that never changes, it's always now. The unconditioned conscious presence that does not exist ultimately in this dimension. It does not exist at all.

Exist means stand out to be manifested. It pops out into the surface of being that exists prior to existence as being. And being is not part of this dimension.

It kind of shines into this dimension, like sunlight shines down here, but being is transcendent to this dimension. So who you in essence are is a transcendent, the transcendent being prior to existence. And therefore, there've been some mystics that said, largely misunderstood, God does not exist, which means God is not something that is manifested in this dimension of space and time.

God doesn't, he, she, it doesn't stand out. And you can't say, oh, God is, where's God? Oh, there.

God is transcendent to this. Now, is God consciousness? Yes and no.

The way I put it is, God is unknowable. God is beyond anything that you could know or talk about. But this source that is beyond anything that could be known, the source of all life, emanates into this dimension, so to speak.

I'm trying to explain something that cannot be put into words. What it emanates is consciousness, in the same way that the sun emanates light. Is light the sun?

Yes and no. Is consciousness God? Yes and no.

It's an emanation. You are an emanation of the one. And to know that you are not intellectually, but to sense that the essence of you is that emanation, that's of course the end of fear.

Until you know yourself as that, there must be some fear, often quite a bit of fear, because you still don't know. You're kind of a disconnected fragment in a threatening universe, floating around, threatened by other disconnected fragments, seemingly disconnected fragments. So let's go on to the first question.

[Speaker 4] (13:54 - 14:28)

Here is my question. They say that the eyes are the windows to the soul. It can feel like seeing the whole universe just by looking into someone's eyes.

Is there a transmission happening when we look into another person's eyes, or is it just witnessing a silent presence as a model that helps us allow for the space within ourselves to let whatever is happening to happen?

[Speaker 1] (14:30 - 27:09)

Thank you, thank you. Good, very good question. There is a kind of transmission.

For example, let's say when you look into somebody else's eyes, whether or not the other person is aware of that, let's just assume that the other person is aware of it and has agreed that he or she wants to share a moment of presence with you, and you look into each other's eyes. Now, for many people at first, it's an uncomfortable thing. So you have to kind of surrender to that moment and let go of thought, of any kind of mental interpretation.

If you can be still and present and look into somebody else's eyes, there's a sharing of presence. There's a field of presence that arises where you look at the other person is no longer perceived as other, you merge into one, your perception, self-perception. It can be a very powerful way of connecting in a relationship, if you do it occasionally.

Because otherwise, in the relationship, you have just personalities. And in many relationships, there's never any transcendence of the personalities, the conditioned personalities. There's never a moment of shared presence, which could also, it doesn't have to be looking into each other's eyes.

There can be a moment of shared presence when you're sitting together, just being, or you're out in nature and you're contemplating the sky together. Whenever the mind is not involved, and you still, you don't feel uncomfortable. In fact, you feel a togetherness, a connectedness without the involvement of thought structures.

And it goes even beyond emotions. When you look into another person's eyes, sometimes it happens at first, as you go beyond thought, you might encounter an emotional level. Sometimes for a little while, people get quite emotional when you look into somebody's eyes, there's a layer of emotion.

Some people even get tearful. And then you can even drop beyond that. And then you find presence.

So sometimes it's three levels involved for people when you, gazing is the word, not to be confused with staring. It's good that the English language has those two words to differentiate, because staring obviously involves a personality. Staring wants something from you or wants to impose something.

But gazing is very different. There's an openness there. So gazing into another's eyes.

At first, there's a discomfort in many people and still the mind is still active. Oh, this feels so weird. It's so weird.

I can't do this system. I don't want to do this. Then you let go of those thoughts.

And then you might get a layer of emotion. Oh, you suddenly feel very good about the other person or you've or you've or something else comes up. You remember what he or she did yesterday, or whatever it may be.

And then you let go of that. And then you can just be in still presence. Just stillness descends, but an alert stillness.

There's just consciousness left, no longer mine or yours. And that can be very lovely meditation. Naturally, when I look at another human being, I look at the other human being without any unnecessary thought.

I'm saying unnecessary because a little bit of thought may be necessary. For example, I had a haircut yesterday. So obviously, I had to talk to the person cutting my hair to explain and sometimes we have a conversation.

She tells me about her life and adventures. And then there are other times when I just sometimes I look at her in the mirror. She may not even know that.

And there's no thought. There's just I can sense her presence. She's no longer a hairdresser doing her hair.

I can sense the being beyond the personality. And that's wonderful. And so any interaction with human beings, I use thought when it's needed.

But I love just being present with another person without any mental judgment whatsoever. Now, not everybody is yet able to kind of do that because the mind has its own momentum. But it can be for a while a practice, you let go of judgments.

It's a practice until it becomes a natural thing. So that when you meet another human being, you don't immediately go into judgment, like, dislike, or some kind of suspicion or whatever it may be. Who is he?

What does he want? You just allow that human being to be without imposing anything. And that's a wonderful sense of connectedness and oneness.

And this is where empathy arises. As long as there is mental judgment, there's not really any empathy with another human being because you're judging the conditioned entity. Empathy means that you must have some access to that which is beyond the conditioned entity.

You can sense the being of the other beyond the personality, which is sometimes there are cases, of course, where the personality is extraordinarily dense, like a very cloudy sky. And that makes it a little bit more difficult to sense the being. But even there, it is possible.

It requires a more intense presence. And that sometimes happens when you meet very difficult people, or people who are aggressive towards you, that requires a much more intense presence, not to be reactive in that situation, and realize beyond conceptualization, that this person is acting out their conditioning. There's nobody else.

There's nobody really there. It's just a karmic entity acting out its conditioning. We call it a person.

Beyond that, there's a being, everybody is a child of God, in sadistic language, no matter how veiled, how dense the veils are. And they may not ever know that in this lifetime, but eventually, they will know it. Awakening happens.

So, when I look at you, there's no thought, obviously, in my mind. At the end of a session, sometimes, as you know, for many times, too, there's stillness and presence. I'm looking, there's no thought.

It's just still presence. And then, is there a transmission there? Or is it just, as you say, a modeling of presence?

In a way, both, but there is a transmission. Now, how can that happen? How can that happen?

I can see there's a transmission when two people come together, or you go to a spiritual teacher, sometimes the spiritual teacher may just look at you as, for example, Ramana Maharshi, wonderful spiritual teacher, lived in the first half of the 20th century in India. Very often, people would come to him with questions, and quite often, he wouldn't answer, he would just look at you. And for some people, that was very frustrating.

And others found it very enlightening, because immediately, the question dissolved, and there was a transmission. Now, it's understandable that somebody who is very present can awaken or intensify the presence that is also in you. That, of course, can happen when you are together with that person, but you don't have to be together.

Now, how does it happen here? You might ask, does the presence travel to everybody who is watching? It doesn't work like that.

Consciousness is not subject to space distances in this dimension of space and time. Consciousness is beyond space and time. So, there can be a transmission in consciousness.

This doesn't mean that consciousness has to travel from here to wherever you are, because it's already there. Consciousness has no distance and no time. So, there is a transmission in consciousness.

It doesn't need to travel. Even if one of you or if some of you were on planet Mars, it would be the same. It doesn't depend on what we see as spatial.

Consciousness is transcendent to space and time. And as humans evolve, one day or gradually, we will realize the infinite possibilities of consciousness so that we will be able to establish connection with a human being easily, even on maybe not a human being, other beings, in another planetary system or the Andromeda Galaxy. Andromeda Galaxy is the closest galaxy to our Milky Way Galaxy.

And light, which is the fastest thing, it's not a thing there is, traveling at 300,000 kilometers per second, takes about, I've forgotten exactly, more than 200,000 years to reach the Andromeda Galaxy or to travel from the Andromeda Galaxy to here. And that's the closest galaxy to our own. It takes like, well, 200,000 or 250,000 or 300,000 years to travel.

And in consciousness, it would take no time, because consciousness is transcendent to this universe, the manifested universe. So yes, in that sense, one could say there is a transmission. But it can also happen if you can just look at a photo of somebody in the state of presence.

There's a famous photo of Ramana Maharshi that was taken. Some people find that very helpful. They look at him.

And they immediately sense their own presence. And that's really what it is. You sense your presence suddenly.

And it's not yours. I just call it that, for the sake of reusing language, where in this world, we appear as separate beings. So you can sense the presence in you.

It's not mine. And I'm not doing anything. And this event here with us, many people coming together here, there is a transmission, not just from me, all contribute to that.

So this event that's taking place through technology, but in part, but of course, involves human beings in different parts of the planet, is part of the awakening consciousness. Consciousness gradually awakens in this dimension, which means it comes more fully into this dimension. It doesn't awaken, we just use those words.

It comes more light comes into this dimension, and then the beings in this dimension gradually become more complex, more conscious. This is the evolutionary process. Well, thank you for the questions.

Hi, Eckhart. I very much appreciate the opportunity to connect with you this way. And I really love the way you started out tonight's session with reference to rocks and stones and minerals, because I'm a geologist by training.

And now I feel totally guilty about all the rocks that I've hit with a rock hammer and a sledgehammer all the way through my career, knowing they had a level of consciousness. Anyway, so my question involves the dissolving of the body and awareness. So when the body dies, what happens to awareness, the deep eye?

Does it rejoin the collective consciousness that underlies all of creation? Or does it maintain some sort of individuality? And the reason I ask that is because I find it difficult to reconcile that idea with the concept of reincarnation and karma, which suggests that awareness retains some sort of individuality and returns to inhabit another form to continuous journey of evolution of consciousness.

So I wonder if you'd help me reconcile those two lines of thinking.

[Speaker 1] (28:34 - 42:57)

Oh, yes, thank you. Very good and complex question. So let's start with that with reincarnation.

Is there such a thing as reincarnation? Then how do you reconcile that with consciousness? What is it if there is reincarnation?

What is it that reincarnates? Is it the person? One way of putting it is that what reincarnates is all the things that make up the illusory sense of self.

So ultimately, what reincarnates is the illusion of being a separate person with all its desires, accumulated desires, and other tendencies. In order to really understand this, we will need to understand the whole purpose of the universe because everything is connected, as above, so below. The microcosm that you are and your role in this universe as a human being is intimately connected and one with the whole purpose of the totality of the universe.

In order to really deeply understand this whole matter, you would have to understand the entire purpose of the universe, which is impossible. We can only have approximations. All I can say it is a little bit like this.

It is a little bit like that. Don't overestimate what the human mind, the capability of the human conceptual mind, there's another deeper mind. The conceptual mind cannot understand how the universe functions and what its purpose is.

It's vast, unbelievably vast. So, what I'm describing now is not the ultimate truth, but it's a way of approaching the truth, a limited way of understanding the whole function of the universe. The universal consciousness incarnates into form.

It takes on form and that becomes this dimension here. So, that which inhabits form is the one consciousness. It gradually creates for itself, so to speak, gradually more complex forms because it gradually comes more fully into this dimension.

This is how this universe comes into being. Gradually, the Big Bang didn't happen. It's still happening.

It's the movement into form, increasing complexity of life forms. The universe, why is the universe doing that? I don't know.

We can't go there. We cannot understand that. All we can say, it seems that it wants to experience, the one consciousness wants to experience itself as a universe and maybe there are many other universes.

It goes into form and that includes the human form, but in that experience, the universe consciousness loses self-awareness. It identifies its form so fully that it gradually loses its connectedness, awareness of its connectedness to the one. So, that is the dream.

In a way, this universe is being dreamt by the one consciousness. All the forms that arise and subside and arise and subside gradually become more complex. It's a dream that gradually becomes more complex and there's a dreamer.

The dreamer is the one consciousness and the dreamer is completely identified with up to a point. The dreamer, which is the one consciousness, is completely identified with the dream and every form of the dream. How do I know that?

Because I've investigated within myself. You can find many answers to universal questions if you go deeply into yourself. To some extent, you can learn about where the universe is going by observing where you are going, where your consciousness is going.

For a long time, I and millions and you and millions and millions and billions of others, for a long time, I was completely identified with the forms, the conditioned entity, me, the person. I was completely identified with the conditioning, every emotion, every thought that arises. I was it.

Consciousness, at some point, woke out of the dream and realized itself beyond the dream. There was an awakening happening from being totally captivated by the dream, totally identified with the dream, to suddenly realizing that which is beyond the dream, which is the dreamer, which is consciousness, which is I, which is the deep I. I realized that, and now many others also realize that.

That is part of the awakening of the universe, where the dream of form gradually leads to an awakening. In that awakening, the universe, which is consciousness, knows itself in a way, perhaps, that it hadn't known itself before, to use limited language. So, the purpose, then, is the awakening.

Your purpose is the awakening of consciousness, the disidentification of form. Now, perhaps, many humans have very little of that, perhaps, little glimpses of awakening in a normal human lifetime. But mostly, the dream of form continues, and you know it was totally identified with every thought that arises, and every reaction that comes up, every emotional reaction which is conditioned.

I mean, you can watch people in movies or in real life, everything is just absolutely so real, the person is. And so, there's fear, and there's anger, and complete identification. There's no separation whatsoever, or perhaps, through suffering, occasionally, there are little glimpses.

And then, immediately, the conditioning takes over again. This is many lifetimes of humans who are not engaged in the actual awakening process, but even in them, glimpses of awakening happen. But a lot of the human entity, which is the dream of form, does not awaken, and there's an enormous, to use Eastern terminology, there's an enormous karma behind it, accumulated stuff from the past.

This karmic entity, with all its desires, and even the ego itself, which is the dream, wants to dream again. That is what reincarnates, the illusion of the person reincarnates. And gradually, the illusion awakens.

Suddenly, or gradually, over many lifetimes, the illusion, which is the person, the illusory self, which reincarnates through suffering, and in the various reincarnations, awakens to its true nature, which is timeless consciousness. Now, you may ask, so is then all individuality lost? Do I disappear?

No. That which is most essentially you, that which is at the very bottom of, the very foundation of your sense of beingness, that is never lost, because that is the essence of who you are. Then, of course, there is an entire entity that consists of memories, and all kinds of things, narratives that make up the sense of self.

That, of course, does not survive for very long, but what lies underneath it, strong tendencies, also to want to experience more of form. I often say to people, if they ask about reincarnation, you can discover the truth of reincarnation every moment. You don't have to wait until you die, because when you are completely identified with every thought that arises, which means there is a sense of self that gets trapped in every thought, consciousness gets trapped in every thought that arises, you're completely identified, the dream is overpowering.

That means every time you identify with a thought or emotion, you reincarnate, you incarnate into that thought and into that emotion, you become it, or you think you are it. So, the very unconscious people who are completely identified with every thought and emotion that arises, they're in the grip of their conditioning, it's a dream-like state, they continuously reincarnate into thoughts and emotions, they become it. And those people, of course, there's an enormous urge when the body dissolves for this energy field that is formed still to experience more of the same.

Sometimes it wants more suffering or whatever, more drama, please, I need another dramatic lifetime. This is one way of looking at it. One could also, sometimes analogies can be quite helpful, but although they're limited, let's say you are an iceberg that floats in the ocean, you only see about 10% of it above the water line, 90% of the iceberg is underwater, you don't see it.

Let's say that you are such an iceberg, so there's the part that you see, and there's the part that you don't see, and the part that you don't see is all the thoughts, the conditioning, even the thoughts that you're not having at this moment are unseen. Even the simplest things like, what's your telephone number? Of course, a second ago you were not aware of your telephone number, it was under the water, so to speak.

Now when I ask you, you can retrieve it, and then it rises up to consciousness. So there is a vast unconscious part of who you are, which is the iceberg underneath. Now the iceberg is floating in this vast ocean, and in essence it is no other than the ocean, but it seems to be other because it vibrates at a certain frequency that makes it solid, but it's still water, and even the person is still consciousness, but it is vibrated such a frequency that it seems to be something different.

Now, let's carry on this analogy one step further. Now, if you have observed icebergs, occasionally an iceberg is when it floats around, now it gradually melts, of course, that's an interesting part of our analogy, it gradually loses its heaviness and its weight gradually, but as it continues floating, occasionally it topples over, and as it topples over, it might very briefly disappear under the, in the water completely, and then it re-emerges and looks a little bit different, different part of it comes up, so it topples over, and then there it is again, and it re-emerges. This could be an analogy for the process of reincarnation, of dying, and then being reborn, but in this gradual process, there is an evolutionary development, and that is gradually the heaviness of this contracted entity that is the iceberg gradually merges with the ocean, it warms up, it becomes more conscious, gradually, and loses the illusion of separateness, and when it's lost the illusion of separateness completely, it doesn't need to reincarnate anymore, because there's nothing there to reincarnate. But in that process, to bring this analogy to a conclusion, somehow the ocean needed the iceberg, it needed to experience itself as the iceberg, and when the iceberg dissolves, it returns something to the ocean, it's no longer just the same in this analogy, it's no longer just the same water that was there before, there is something, because then through this whole process, this long process of reincarnating again and again, and there was a learning process, a deepening of self-awareness, through the suffering of being seemingly independent entity, autonomous, but it wasn't, the suffering gradually brought about consciousness, so the iceberg returns consciousness to the ocean, this is why the ocean needs the iceberg. This is obviously an analogy that is limited, as all analogies are, but it can be a glimpse of how this whole thing functions, and why you are here, and so on. I hope this is a, although limited, a somewhat satisfactory explanation.

[Speaker 2] (42:59 - 43:29)

No, I thank you very much, and I understand that you were struggling to try and explain the unexplainable, so the analogies were hugely helpful, especially the one about the iceberg, yeah, and, you know, I remember every now and then you refer to the movie The Matrix, and I always remember the character that decides, makes a conscious decision to return to the Matrix, because that's where he really enjoys it, so thank you very much, Eckhart.

[Speaker 1] (43:29 - 43:30)

Thank you, thank you.

[Speaker 3] (43:32 - 43:51)

I'm Oprah Winfrey, and you've been listening to Eckhart Tolle, Essential Teachings, the podcast. You can follow these Essential Teachings on Spotify or wherever you listen to podcasts. If you haven't yet, go to Spotify and follow this podcast.

Eckhart Tolle You are the Light of Consciousness [1823714a-b91e-4dff-a734-6507238db30a]

You are the light of consciousness. In this podcast, Eckhart talks with a live audience about the new consciousness he sees emerging around the world. He says one of life's great mysteries is that the universe is conscious.

While scientists struggle to define it and we can't see it under a microscope, consciousness exists. We are living proof of that. Eckhart says we have a role to play.

And he quotes an ancient aphorism, you are the light of the world. He says what that means is you are the light of consciousness manifesting in the world.

[Speaker 1] (0:43 - 50:47)

Right now we are sitting here. You are sitting here. Ultimately there's only one eye and it's sitting there.

And here there's only this one eye. You are sitting here. You are aware of your sense perceptions.

That's part of the present moment. You're aware of this room. You're aware of the lights, the screen.

Man sitting on a chair talking. You hear the voice. You hear the background noise.

Boom, boom, boom, boom. I think they call it music. Boom, boom, boom, boom, boom, boom.

It's noise that goes with a beer fest. That's fine. You perceive the totality of this room and yourself.

The body, you're sitting on a chair and that's the present moment, one would say. But it's not the depths of the present moment. It's the surface of the present moment.

The surface of the present moment is sense perceptions, hearing, seeing. If one of your sense perceptions is missing, either you don't hear or you don't see, that's fine. You have the others.

So you're aware of sense perceptions. You're aware of what you hear, what you see, what perhaps even what you touch. And is that all there is to this moment?

Is that all there is? Well, you would say, yes. Haven't you forgotten something?

No, just a second. How is it possible for you to perceive these things? How is it possible for you to have these sense perceptions?

You might also have a thought may come into your head. What am I going to have for dinner later? How much longer do I have to sit here?

I don't understand a word of what he's saying. Or what you had for breakfast this morning. Thoughts can come and go.

Sense perceptions, thoughts. Your entire life consists of a mixture of sense perceptions, thoughts and emotions. That's basically, you mix them in a particular way and that becomes your life.

You mix them up in a pot. Sense perceptions, thoughts, emotions, my life. Is there more?

Have you forgotten something? Yes, of course you have forgotten something. You've forgotten that if you were not conscious right now, there would be no sense perceptions, there would be no thoughts, there would be no emotion.

If you were not conscious at this moment, none of this would be. And if there were nobody here, no perceiving consciousness, would there even be a room that's debatable? Or would there just be certain molecules and atoms floating around in space?

It only becomes a room when a perceiving consciousness makes it into a room. So you are the consciousness without which there wouldn't even be a room here. You are the consciousness without which there wouldn't be a man sitting on a chair.

You are that. That is the essence of who you are is consciousness. Now here we come to the, you are conscious right now.

This is one way of putting it, but it would be more accurate to say you are consciousness. That's the essence of who you are. If I say you are conscious, I have created a duality.

There's you and consciousness is something that is added to you. But the essence of who you are is consciousness. And when you are aware of yourself as consciousness, then you become self-aware.

Awareness arises. This is awareness is when consciousness, which is who or what you are in your essence, when consciousness becomes conscious of itself, that is the miracle of awakening. And that's the arising of awareness.

And in that arising of awareness, you have transcended thinking. You can come back to thinking and think much more effectively and creatively when you access a dimension. But you have transcended thinking when you realize experientially, like right here and now, the silent realization that who or what you are is this conscious presence and underlies everything and that you sense as yourself, that you sense as your own presence.

I call it your own, but of course it's not your own. It's the presence of the light of the world in you. You sense your presence.

This underlies everything. To give an analogy, I could give two analogies. Let's say there's a painting.

The painting is painted on a canvas. And let's say you are whatever is painted on the canvas, that's you as a person. And when the thing that's painted on the canvas, the picture, is totally identified with the form of the painting, that is unconsciousness and ego.

But let's say what's painted on the surface becomes aware of the canvas on which it is painted. That's a strange analogy, but it works for a moment. It might work.

If you're the painting, you become aware of the canvas without which the painting could not be. And that means you have become aware of the substratum in yourself, the consciousness without which nothing else would be. Wow.

Now, instead of canvas, I prefer to use the expression space. You are the space of consciousness, the inner space, but ultimately there's no division between inner and outer, the inner space of consciousness. Consciousness pervades the entire universe.

But of course it becomes focalized, for example, through the human brain, which is an instrument that consciousness uses to express itself through and to create this dimension that we inhabit. So this is just so amazing. Let me give another analogy.

You watch a movie as it's projected onto a screen. There's a projector and there's a film. I don't know if it's still the same these days.

There's a film that runs through and there's a light behind it and the light shines. There's a lens and then the light projects the images from the film onto the screen. Now, in this, another weird analogy now, let's say you are one of the actors on the screen acting out your script, which is your conditioned mind.

Drama, whatever it is. Oh no, look what he did to me. Let me tell you what he did.

And then he said, and I said, acting out the drama on the screen, it's your script, it's your conditioned mind. You don't even know you're acting it out. You think it's you.

It's just mechanical acting out of your conditioning. And suddenly the actor on the screen becomes aware of something. Maybe he or she gets a little shock on the screen.

Somebody hits him or her over the head. And suddenly the actor on the screen realizes something, realizes that actually the essence of who I am is actually the light. Of course it is.

The light is projected onto the screen. So the essence of who I am is the light and the rest is secondary. Oh, self-realization.

I am the light. I'm using that because that is another beautiful pointer. The light, a beautiful way of speaking of consciousness as the light.

And this is what you might remember from the New Testament. There were two significant sayings, well, among others, two of the most significant sayings by Jesus, which are undoubtedly literally true. Not everything that's in the New Testament is literally true of what he said.

And some things were distorted. Some things were added. Some things were left out.

That's another story. But with some things have such power that you immediately know somebody uttered these words who knew the essence of who he was. He knew.

So there are two statements. One is in the Gospel of John and one's in the other gospel. I can't quote.

You can look it up. One is, he says, I am the light of the world. Oh.

And in another gospel, he says, you are the light of the world. Oh. So that's an amazing statement, both about himself and about everybody else.

But you don't know it yet. That's the difference. You are the light of the world.

He was talking to uneducated, probably, fishermen or whoever he encountered. So when he says you are the light of the world, he was not saying you are the crème de la crème of society. No, he was talking to people who had no particular possessions or even education.

So he was pointing to something that was essential in every human being. You are the light of the world. You are the consciousness in which the whole world appears and comes into being.

Now, all you have to do is realize it experientially. Know it experientially. Then you know that you are the light of the world.

And when you know that you are the light of the world, it's not an ego thing. It's not saying I'm the light of the world, but you are not. Or saying I'm the greatest light of the world.

I'm a greater light. Some lights are greater than others. Or only I can give you the light of the world.

Come to me. None of that. So I am the light of the world is the same pointer as in the ancient Greek temple said you are.

I am to become aware of the bare fact of your beingness. Right now. I don't use these words as explanations or philosophical statements.

They are only pointers towards something that you have to go beyond the words. Can you be aware of your own beingness? Because when I say I am, I am is the first person singular of the verb to be.

Strangely enough, I don't know why it's a totally different word. It really should be I be. I am.

It's being. It's being of your being. In the German language, you actually have the form ich bin, which is related to the English be.

I am. I am. Right now, are you able to realize the bare fact of your beingness as the I am without adding anything to it?

Just feel the presence of yourself. But ultimately, what is that presence? It transcends who you are.

It far transcends who you are as a person. Now, I don't very often speak of God, but I'll do it now. This is difficult territory for some people because God for most people is a conceptual edifice, and it's been spoken of so many times by so many different people, meaning so many different things.

Now, when Jesus said, I am the light of the world and you are the light of the world, the light of the world is the consciousness that illuminates everything, and that's the essence of who you are. And that consciousness emanates from the source of all life, which transcends space and time. It's not somewhere in space and time.

It transcends space and time. So you cannot really speak of the source. It transcends anything the human mind could think or speak of, that source you cannot speak of because you can't explain God with the limitations of human language, which after all are only a few sounds produced by the vocal cords, plus a few, I can't remember the term for it, sounds produced by a friction of air.

So just the combination of a few sounds produced by the vocal cords plus air friction cannot explain the mystery of the universe, not surprisingly. And to think you can explain the mystery of the universe by producing a few sounds is absurd. But there can be a few hints.

The source of all life, which transcends space and time, emanates into this dimension. It emanates into this dimension, and in this dimension it emanates gradually more and more, and that's the evolution of this universe. The gradual emanation of increasing emanation from the source.

And it's a bit like the sun, another analogy. You could have the sun, the sun emanates light continuously. And it's not surprising that in ancient civilizations the sun was regarded as God.

Of course the sun is not God, but it's good as an analogy. The sun emanates light, and when the light touches your hand, you feel the warmth of the sun. In some sense you could say you are touching the sun.

And yet in another sense, of course, if you touch the sun you would immediately evaporate. But the light is still connected to the sun. The light in you, the consciousness in you, is an emanation of source.

And the source emanates, and temporarily it manifests this light, and this light temporarily appears as a person. It temporarily appears in a particular form and then evaporates, and then appears in another form, it evaporates, evaporates, appears. Human life is short-lived on this planet.

I mean, if you're still young, you might think, oh, it'll go on and on. And I've even heard recently a young person say, by the time I get old they'll have invented a remedy against death. I don't think so.

Life is short. If you saw a speeded-up version of life on the planet, you would see human beings appearing and disappearing continuously. Let's speed it up.

Let's speed up 100 years in 3 seconds, 5 seconds, 10 seconds. You would see life appearing and disappearing as human forms, continuously popping up and bursting like soap bubbles. Sparks, little sparks appearing and disappearing.

Millions, consciousness manifesting gradually, coming more into this dimension. In that sense, the evolution of the universe, and especially the evolution of humans, has not been completed yet. The evolution of humans is a work in progress.

Humans are evolving as more consciousness enters this dimension. So as you awaken to who you are, and you do it when the mind becomes still for a moment, and yet you haven't lost consciousness, and you look around, and you don't need to label it mentally. You look at a flower, you look at light, you can look at your own hand, you can look at whatever it is you may see.

You're aware, aren't you listening? Whatever it is you're listening to, you listen, and you don't have to label it mentally. So you become the background, the canvas.

You are the consciousness, and that means there's a stillness in you that arises. It's a stillness, but it's alert. It's an alert stillness.

It's not the stillness that comes when you've had 10 whiskeys, and you're about to drop off. Not that stillness. And it's not the stillness that is there just before you go to sleep, when the mind cannot think about its problems anymore, and you go, oh.

No, it's an alert, an alert stillness, and to realize that this dimension is in you, always there, can be covered up, but it's not something you need to attain. It's not something you need, and this is perhaps a disappointment for those of you who have been spiritual seekers for many years, and perhaps are attached to the mental concept of spiritual seeking. In other words, it's become part of your ego.

So I'll say it anyway, because it's good to be disappointed. It's not something that you can need to attain or get or obtain or achieve. It's not even an achievement.

It's realizing what's already there in you. The dimension is already there in you, always underlying the movement of thought, always underlying it, always there, like the canvas, always there, but always overlooked, almost always overlooked by normal humans. Occasionally it surfaces in their lives, this dimension of alert stillness, of pure consciousness, of unconditioned consciousness.

Occasionally it emerges in their lives, but they don't even know what it is because they associate it with something that they're experiencing at that moment, but what they're experiencing at that moment frees them for a moment from the stream of thinking, and a little space opens up inside, and they go, and it feels so wonderful, it's your life, and you go, for example, a magnificent natural spectacle could do it, a magnificent sunset, the sun disappears into the ocean, and there's a vastness of it all, and your eyes get wide, and you look, and so, wow.

And you may not realize the intensity of that moment, and the alert, the deep peace and aliveness you feel are only indirectly caused by the sunset because the sunset stopped, it was so magnificent that it stopped your mind for a moment, and there was that stillness arising in you, and in that stillness you can sense yourself more strongly than ever before, you can sense your essence more than ever before. It could also arise when you look into the eyes of a baby, one year old, and that baby looks back at you, and the baby has not yet arrived at thinking, it has not yet arrived at conceptualization, it has no opinion about you yet, it probably will in a year or two years' time, but right now, with one year old, the baby has no opinion about you, the baby has no judgment about you, the baby just looks.

And you look into the eyes of the baby, and for a moment, and you feel so good, and you say, after a few seconds you say something, you say, oh, wonderful, what is wonderful? Wonderful is that for a moment, the baby freed you of the incessant stream of thought in your mind, because you instinctively felt that the baby was not imposing any thought on you, so it freed you for a moment from thought, and that it feels so good to look at this baby, because for a moment you are freed from the person, the personality, it's just a spaciousness, a space. So it can happen accidentally in people's lives, but it doesn't happen that frequently, you can't wait for the next thing to happen in four weeks' time, in four weeks' time maybe I'll meet another baby, and then I'll have another five seconds of freedom, and you may suddenly realize that even the dog can do it for you.

You look into the eyes of the dog, and again the dog, although the dog is conscious, in expression of consciousness of course, he has a lovely consciousness, but the dog has not arrived, the dog exists below thought, not in thought, the dog has no thought as such, no conceptual thinking, he doesn't think, I wonder what kind of a person you are, so even looking into, and this is why people love their animals, or even love just meeting an animal in the street, and you go, oh, and again for a few seconds, the dog looks at you, you look at the dog, and the dog frees you for a moment from yourself ultimately, frees you for a moment from yourself, and you feel, oh, feels so good to be free from myself. Another thing you can do, of course, is you can engage in extremely hazardous activities that require your intense presence, and if you don't have that intense presence, you will die.

There are certain activities of that kind, like rock climbing, or car racing, or whatever else, even surfing can be dangerous if you get hit by a huge wave, if you surf, then you're not going to be thinking, I wonder if the next wave is the one that I'm going to catch, let me think about it, no, it's not quite big enough, it doesn't go like that, you're totally present, and people get addicted almost sometimes to certain activities of that kind because it frees them temporarily from themselves, from the mind-made person or personality, so all that remains of them is a conscious presence, and that feels so alive and so good that they need to go back to this dangerous activity again and again, and perhaps one day they fall off the rock, the rock wall, and it's all been worth it, I'm sure, however, you don't need to do all that, if you enjoy it, it's fine, but you don't need that, once you realize that this is always in you, you just need to acknowledge that it's there, that dimension, you just need to acknowledge it, first of all, you can do it when it arises spontaneously in your life, like I mentioned a few things, the dog, the baby, dangerous activities, but also whenever something new comes into your field of vision, let's say you open a door and you go into a room that you haven't been in before, or you're walking along a street and you turn around a corner, maybe it's a new city, you walk, and again something new opens up, and every time you look at a new vista for three seconds or four seconds or so, you're not thinking, but you don't normally know that, for a few seconds you're just taking it all in, and then you interpret it mentally, you can even do it with a sound, we can do it with sounds, I highly recommend listening to the shakuhachi flute, Japanese bamboo flute, which is often used in Zen practice, and the best shakuhachi players are actually Zen monks, the others may be good technically, but the essence isn't there, the shakuhachi is just a bamboo flute, bamboo with a few holes in it, or maybe it's just one, I don't, they play it and there are big spaces of silent spaces in between the sounds, so the sound goes, space, and then another sound arises, space, so the most important thing when you listen to shakuhachi music is the spaces in between the sounds, and as you listen to the spaces in between the sounds, your mind is still, you listen to it, and so listening to the space in between sounds puts you in touch with the inner space of consciousness, of awareness, and whenever you look at something new, for the first few seconds, you may realize you're not thinking, you're just taking it all in, and if you become consciously aware of that, you can prolong that, you can actually arrive at a point where you can walk along a city street, or initially more easily in nature, because nature does not stimulate mind activity in the way that a city does, if you walk in nature along the beach, a forest, whatever it may be, you begin to be able to walk through nature, or sit around nature under a tree, and take it all in, the sounds, the sights, the smells, the feel of the air, the breeze on your skin, take it all in, be so alert, you're taking it all in, but you're not thinking, it's just you are the consciousness that makes the perceptions possible, and so when you're not thinking, it's not that difficult to do, and when you're not thinking, of course, you're not a person anymore, temporarily you have transcended the self, what the Buddha called the self, which he said, the self that is ultimately a delusion, you have transcended the self, it is extremely liberating, nature can help you with that, because nature does not think, nature is also a manifestation of consciousness, but nature has no conceptual thought, so you are activating something that becomes activated in you, that is an intelligence that is deeper, than the conceptual intelligence that is thought, and it's essential to have access to that deeper intelligence, if you want to use thought in a creative and powerful way, if you don't have access to that intelligence, that is deeper than thought, higher, deeper, whatever you prefer, if you don't have access to that intelligence, that is deeper than thought, then all your thinking is repetitive and ultimately not helpful. And not only not helpful, creates more problems than it solves.

And you do an enormous amount of overthinking that creates an unhappy person and an unhappy life. My life then becomes unhappy. So there is the conditioned intelligence in you.

And this is the kind of thing that is encouraged at school and at university. And that's the kind of thing that does the IQ tests and is either good at it or not. And then there is a deeper non-conceptual intelligence where all creativity arises.

And that is the essence of you as consciousness. That is the essence that emanates from the source of all life. And so you are a ray of source.

You're that source emanation. You're a ray of God, one could say. You are a ray.

And so the awakening is not a personal thing. It's not that the personality of the person does not awaken. The person ultimately recognizes that it is not ultimately real.

It's only temporarily semi-real and gives way and something else shines through. And that is the awakening. So the person does not awaken.

But what is it then that awakens? Well, that's a wonderful question. The universe awakens through you.

The universe, what is the greatest mystery of the universe? Is it the mystery of the atomic, molecular and subatomic? Well, deep mysteries are there.

Is it the mystery of infinite outer space, the galaxies and the unbelievable vastness of it all? Yes, those are great mysteries, but the real mystery is something that the astronomers or molecular scientists almost never mention. The greatest mystery is that the universe is conscious and nobody knows what consciousness is.

No scientist has ever seen it. Some scientists even deny that it exists. How you can do that, I don't know, but they do.

There is no consciousness. Okay, who is speaking? How is speaking possible?

So the science, you cannot put consciousness under a microscope. You can never say, there it is. I now know what it is.

So in a way you can never know what it is because you're never separate from it. You are essentially it, but you can know it as yourself, but you cannot know it through conceptual mind. So the interesting fact about the deeper non-conceptual intelligence, which is the alert stillness, the unconditioned consciousness and an interesting fact about this is that from the point of view of conceptual thinking, that state of connectedness with the deeper intelligence, the unconditioned, from that point of view, it is a state of not knowing.

It is a state of ignorance, but only from a conceptual viewpoint. But you need to know that because there may be a little bit of fear in you that comes from the mind that says, I need to think all the time to figure everything out. And that is not true.

Certain things you need to think about undoubtedly. Certain things can only be approached through thought, but there are other things that thought can be a great interference through the essential realization of who you are and also to experiencing the joy of life and true inner peace and experiencing empathy towards other humans, experience love, true love, not egoic love. I want you, don't you ever leave me, not that.

True love, all those things emanate not from conceptual thinking, they emanate from source, from the unconditioned consciousness. But when you go there, it seems from the point of view of the egoic mind and conceptual thinking that you don't know anything anymore because the mind is still. Conceptual thought does not realize that that stillness is the source of all creativity and or anybody is truly being creative has created from by having some access at least perhaps in the limited area of their creation, have had some access within themselves to that dimension.

And they have created out of that incredible things, incredible music, beauty, architecture, incredible works of even writing that's inspired writing, all creativity, any creative insight has come out of that. Creative piece of music that survives from generation to generation has that essence in it. So there are the two levels to you, there is the intelligence of thinking, which is fine, and there's a deeper intelligence of not thinking.

And that is not only that, it's the essence of who you are. Why don't they teach that at school? I don't know.

Some people have a natural connectedness with that. I've read the biography of Albert Einstein a while ago and I was surprised when he was about four years old, he was so slow, he didn't have this quick mind that could immediately have formulated thinking immediate as it's encouraged at school, that kind of thing. The other is totally neglected at school.

So the teacher asked the question, who knows the answer to this? I know, I know, I know, and Einstein would just sit there and started going deep, deep, deep within. And he naturally drifted into stillness without ever having it as a practice.

He naturally always drifted back into stillness. And then great insights came out of that. So some people have it naturally, but most people need to consciously embrace it and invite it into their lives.

So inviting that space of no thought and becoming comfortable for those periods of time when you embrace no thought, it might be just a few seconds and gradually become extended, become comfortable, and this is a strange way of putting it, become comfortable with not knowing. And yet in this not knowing, there is a deeper knowing, and that's what's called wisdom. Wisdom is something that the world desperately needs.

The world does not need an intensification of analytical thinking. We've got so much analytical thinking. The world does not need more information or facts.

Is that going to save the world? We've probably got millions of facts on the internet. We're drowning in information.

And everybody's doing their conceptual thinking and it's not getting us anywhere. Wisdom, intelligence without wisdom, which means just intelligence cut off from the deeper essence of who you are, becomes very destructive. Intelligence without connectedness to wisdom is very dangerous, as we can witness in the world.

With technology, more and more technology development becomes more and more destructive in the absence of wisdom. And wisdom is the intelligence of the unconditioned consciousness. And that's what the world needs.

That's what you need. And that is what wants to emerge into this world through humans. If humans don't become vehicles for it, it will emerge somewhere else.

But there's a good chance that humans will make it. Now we are in an interesting, because you're all here. So that's very promising.

You are here. You are not just people come here at a deeper level. This is an event of awakening, of the awakening consciousness.

You have all come here as persons, but that which has brought you here far transcends who you are as a person. You are the awakening universe. Obviously, you're not separate from the universe.

You are the universe that is awakening through you. That is the purpose of your life ultimately is to enable the universe to awaken through you because you are it. That's what it wants.

And every other purpose you have must be aligned with the purpose of awakening. So even if you continue the job that you are doing, you bring a conscious presence to what you are doing. You're no longer egoic.

You bring conscious presence to it. You might be a hairdresser and the way in which you approach your clients, you bring consciousness into them. You look at another human being and there's a moment of spaciousness.

There's not immediate labeling, mental labeling. You can begin to be with another human being and offer them space to be. And you are that space for them.

Empathy comes through that. Loving kindness comes through that. As you may remember, the Dalai Lama said, the Dalai Lama, interestingly, didn't say my religion is Buddhism.

Everybody knows that. But he said, my religion is kindness. And kindness implies empathy and benevolence.

Goodwill is another word for benevolence that flows from within you towards another human being. And that can only flow through connectedness with the unconditioned non-conceptual intelligence in you. That's when it flows.

And then you can love the other, not in the egoic sense. And you can love a person, if you meet for half a minute in an elevator, you can love them by sensing their essence as consciousness beyond the person that they manifest on the external. You can sense that you share consciousness with them.

And that is the recognition of the other as yourself. So when Jesus said, love your neighbor as yourself, there's something that was not transmitted or written down completely. So we get an isolated fragment.

He did not say, please, you don't need to believe me. I'm just saying it if you don't want to believe me. He did not say, love your neighbor as yourself, because that is a commandment that he would know people cannot fulfill.

And they have tried for 2000 years, not done that well. I must love my neighbor as myself. He's a jerk, but I must love him.

I can't stand him, but I must love him. I'll try. Or you deny all the negative feelings you have towards your neighbor because you have a mental image of yourself as spiritual or religious.

Press it down. So it needs to be connected with the kingdom of heaven that he talked about. Kingdom of heaven is an old translation.

As you may know, my translation is kingdom is dimension. Heaven is spaciousness because heaven is the sky. It's the heaven.

It's an analogy, vast space. He's talking about something within you, spaciousness of awareness. The dimension of spaciousness is a kingdom of heaven.

And that is within you. It's also around you, it's within you. Now, if you find the kingdom of heaven, the dimension of spaciousness in you, that dimension of consciousness in you, if you find that, then you love your neighbor as yourself.

The two go together. You can't take as a separate commandment, you must love your neighbor as yourself. You're not capable, but seek first the dimension of spaciousness.

Then you will love your neighbor as yourself. It's a natural result of that. It flows from that.

These realizations come to all the ancient, all religions have, in their essence, have that realization, especially, of course, it's there in Zen, it's there in Hinduism, it's there, especially in Sufism, in the Islamic tradition. It's, the realization is always, that's what it is. Oh, it's all, these things are the most important things of human life, and our civilization seems to ignore it completely.

The mainstream civilization that we have, it's still, nothing of that is ever mentioned. Now, when I say that humans are awakening, it is true that there's an increasing number of humans who are going through the shift in consciousness and are awakening. It's still a minority, small minority still, that's true, but it's happening.

When you watch the news on television or you go onto the internet, the opposite seems to be happening. The world seems to become more and more crazy, but that's fine, that goes together. It's only when things become critical that the awakening happens.

The awakening does not happen when things are comfortable. They happen when things become critical. It's, your comfort zone is not the place where you will likely find spiritual awakening.

That's a bummer. When you're taken out of your comfort zone, then you get challenged by life, and only when you get challenged by life, and most of you have been challenged by life, and the only reason why you are here is because you have been challenged by life, and only that can bring about the motivation for awakening, for, in other words, it would be in Buddhist terms, finding the end of suffering for yourself. The end of suffering.

You no longer make yourself happy by your own mind, and you no longer make yourself unhappy, and you no longer make others unhappy. That would be a step forward. So when life takes you out of your comfort zone, and it's taking that now, for example, collectively, when you watch the news, read the newspaper, and so on, the media and the politicians, they're both going crazy.

The media are looking for enemies, and they're finding them again, and the politicians agree. Be very careful that you don't get taken in by all the stuff that you read, and then you adopt all these thoughts as your own because you're reading them. If you can't bring stillness into your life, then you can begin to think more creatively and look at situations outside of the conditioning of your mind, because every time you go to the internet and you go to television or newspapers, you don't realize that you are taking on the collective mind, and your mind is being conditioned by the collective, and you don't realize that the thoughts you think are your thoughts are not your thoughts at all.

So you've just taken them on. So the thoughts can very much act as a prison in your life, and to become free of being imprisoned by your thoughts, find the dimension of spaciousness in you, which is always there, just waiting to be acknowledged. It's here and now, always there, and that is your adventure, to find that in your life, and then allow it to live through you, and then life becomes satisfying, and what you do becomes secondary.

Of course, you'll do something, but what you do becomes secondary. The consciousness that flows into what you do is primary. What is your state of consciousness when you speak to a person, when you take action, do this and that, what is your state of consciousness?

Please practice all the things that I mentioned. Step out of your mind, conscious sense perceptions, take some conscious breath that frees you from thinking too for a moment. Step out of thinking as much as you can, and then your thinking will become more empowered and become creative.

You have the courage to go into the space of not knowing from the point of view of conceptual thinking, and look at a human being without needing to work something out mentally about them. In fact, you will know a lot about that human being, but not conceptually, not as a judgment. You can sense their essence, and you might also sense what it is that covers up their essence, and that's fine, but you no longer mistake that which covers up their essence, which is a personality, for who they are, because if you mistake that which covers up another person's essence for who they are, then you're trapped in ego again.

You're creating more ego for the other, and you yourself are strengthening your own ego. So not mistaking the behavior of other humans, of their personality for who they actually are. You recognize it, yes.

So primary in your life is awareness, conscious presence, alert presence, stillness. Find that dimension, invite it into your life as much as possible. Resist the temptation of always grabbing your cell phone when there's a moment of not doing anything.

Allow that moment to be, and realize the essence of who you are as the deepest, the deep I am, I am. Without adding anything to it. There was an Indian teacher who was several, but especially one, Ramana Maharshi, recommended this as a meditation method, asking yourself the question, who am I?

So you go, you can close your eyes or not close your eyes, and you go, and so you ask yourself that question, who am I? Who am I? Okay.

Now, the important thing is, if you find an answer to that, you're wrong. The important thing is, after you've asked yourself the question, who am I? There's a space of not knowing.

That space of not knowing is also a space of no thought and is also a space of unconditioned consciousness. And that's the answer. But there's no answer on a conceptual level.

So the question, who am I, can be a very powerful pointer to who you are. But you must become comfortable with not knowing who you are in order to know who you are. And with this paradox, I'll leave you.

Hello to all you podcast listeners. We're bringing you something really special. One of the great spiritual thinkers of our time, Eckhart Tolle and I, are giving you a chapter-by-chapter class on what I believe is his groundbreaking masterpiece, Eckhart's best-selling book, A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose.

This book resonated with me in such a profound way. I truly think that it's the most important book I've ever read. It's changed the way I live my life, so much so that I always have a copy on my nightstand, because I constantly give myself a refresher course.

And now more than ever, we need to create what Eckhart calls A New Earth, inside our personal lives, in our communities, and the world. Give it a listen, and over 10 episodes, you too will be opened up and learn how to quiet your mind, get your ego in check, live a fully more present life. We're talking deep, big picture, even delving into consciousness and the reason why we're all really here.

My greatest hope is that Eckhart's quiet wisdom and patient teachings will resonate with you as they have with me. Each podcast episode will start with my conversation with Eckhart about a chapter, and then Eckhart answers questions from people who are reading along in the book. So I encourage you to get your own copy of A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose, and join us for a thrilling, enlightening, and spiritual experience.

Welcome to the final class of our New Earth series. You know, I have just loved being able to bring this to all of you. For those of you who are new to Eckhart and A New Earth, I hope that this experience has been as eye-opening and as heart-opening as it was for me and so many others, and continues to be.

For those of you who are revisiting the book, hopefully you're reading and hearing things in a new way, deepening your understanding of Eckhart's wisdom. If there's one key message in A New Earth, it is to recognize that the only time that matters is now. There is only the present moment, and every time we get better at recognizing the present moment, awakening to that, we get better at recognizing our ego when it shows up.

Every time we get better at recognizing our pain body, it means we're strengthening our spiritual muscle, and we keep that muscle in shape by being more centered, more thoughtful, by living more consciously. That's what this is all about. And the result of all this hard work, you get a life that gets filled with a lot more meaning and a whole lot more joy.

So let's get started with our final class, Chapter 10, A New Earth. I just again want to say thank you to every one of you for helping us to create this new Earth here with Eckhart Tolle and with me. The themes of Chapter 10 are truly the culmination, I think, of what all of our work has been about, how to bring consciousness to every moment and to every action of our lives, and in the process, learning that we are far greater than anything that we could have imagined ourselves to be.

We're going to get started. You talk about the brief history of your life on page 282, the coming into manifestation of the world as it's returned to the unmanifested, its expansion and contraction. On the previous page, you talked about the Earth expanding, the universe really expanding and contracting.

Those two movements are reflected throughout the universe in many ways, such as in the incessant expansion and contraction of our heart, as well as the inhaling and exhaling of our breath. They're also reflected in the cycles of sleep and wakefulness. Each night without knowing it, I love this, you return to the unmanifested, capital S, source of all life, when you enter this stage of deep, dreamless sleep, and then reemerge again in the morning replenished.

Those two movements, the outgoing and return, are also reflected in each person's life cycles. Out of nowhere, so to speak, you suddenly appear in this world. Birth is followed by expansion.

There's not only physical growth, but also growth of knowledge and activities and possessions. This is a time where you're mainly concerned with finding or pursuing your outer purpose. Each person's life, each life form, in fact, represents a world, a unique way in which the universe experiences itself, and when your form dissolves, a world comes to an end out of countless worlds.

I thought that was so beautiful. That's the bottom of page 283, everybody. Each person's life, each life form, in fact, represents a world, a unique way in which the universe experiences itself.

So we are manifestations of the universe experiencing itself as each of us. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (5:08 - 5:34)

And that takes you out of this illusion that all you are is this limited little person. This is, on the surface of things, you are this person with a name and a form, but in the depths of your being, you are the universe experiencing itself in this form. And just this thought brings about a little shift in the way in which you perceive yourself.

[Speaker 2] (5:34 - 5:35)

And everybody else.

[Speaker 1] (5:35 - 5:36)

Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (5:37 - 5:48)

We are the universe, or the source of all life, or the creator, or God, whichever name you choose to use, expressing itself in our particular form.

[Speaker 1] (5:48 - 6:06)

Yes. In and through this form. So there's not...people usually perceive themselves as being this is me, and there's the universe, or the world, and there's the me and the rest of the world. But you are the universe. You are the life. We're not separate.

Not separate.

[Speaker 2] (6:07 - 6:32)

Yeah. Each person's life, each life form represents a world, a unique way in which the universe experiences itself. And when your form dissolves, a world comes to an end, one of countless worlds.

Wow. That's really powerful. So let's talk about the awakening and the return movement.

What is the return movement in a person's life?

[Speaker 1] (6:32 - 7:52)

Usually you start off with the outward movement as you grow up. And as you go into adolescence and adulthood, you start building your life. You acquire experiences.

You acquire knowledge. You acquire possessions. Your sphere of influence extends.

So that's the expansion. You grow. And usually that goes up to a certain age.

It varies from person to person. Unless, I talk about it also, unless this period of expansion is interrupted by some traumatic event, we can come to that a little bit later. So there's the expansion.

And then when people reach a certain age, suddenly a different movement starts. Things, the body is no longer as strong, not working so well anymore. People around you begin to die.

They reach a certain age. And so there's another movement that at some point comes into people's lives, which we could call the dissolution of form. It's gradually happening.

And in our culture, we don't like to talk about that. And this is why most old people are hidden away in homes. You rarely see, you have to go to third world countries to really see the reality of human life.

[Speaker 2] (7:53 - 8:03)

And also we have such a fear of it and not just a fear, a disdain for it. So we do everything to make ourselves look younger. Everything is about looking younger, being younger, younger, younger, younger.

[Speaker 1] (8:03 - 8:03)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (8:04 - 8:04)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (8:04 - 9:46)

Now the return movement is also when the spiritual dimension can come into your life very strongly when the form with which perhaps for many years you had been identified, which is the physical form and the form of my life, all the things that you had built up and identified with, your job, your status, your profession, your possessions. And when that begins to become a little bit shaky, then it is very often at that point that there's the possibility for the spiritual dimension to come into your life when the solidity of the outer forms becomes diminished. Right.

So traditionally, and there's still the, in India, for example, there's still a tradition when a man reaches a certain age, he withdraws from society. He sometimes even, some people still practice it, but not so many these days. He even leaves his family.

If he knows that his family is being looked after, he leaves and becomes a solitary a mendicant or monk in order to go deeply within. So that's, but you don't need to do that. All we need to be aware is that when the return movement starts, when the forms that you had identified with begin to break down, that is a wonderful time for going back home for the return movement into spirituality so that you become aware of your own consciousness.

Rather than what consciousness had identified with, that was your life before.

[Speaker 2] (9:46 - 9:47)

You mean form.

[Speaker 1] (9:47 - 9:48)

Form, yes.

[Speaker 2] (9:49 - 9:52)

And so it's sort of the return back to formlessness.

[Speaker 1] (9:52 - 10:25)

Yes, but consciously. It's a conscious return to see where, what is the source of my very being. You could say it's, you're going, when the world begins to become shaky, then you go back to the source out of which it all came, which is God ultimately, God within, the source within.

So there's these two movements in a person's life. Now, in our civilization, the whole civilization...

[Speaker 2] (10:25 - 10:27)

These two movements, the outgoing and the return.

[Speaker 1] (10:28 - 10:50)

The outgoing and the return. Now, our civilization is only interested, it seems, in the outgoing movement. People are interested in accumulating, in building up, in creating, making a life for yourself, being successful.

Of course, that has its place. That's fine. What our civilization knows very little about is the return movement.

[Speaker 2] (10:50 - 11:26)

You say, then one day, you too disappear. Your armchair is still there, but instead of you sitting in it, there's just an empty space. You went back to where you came from, from just a few years ago.

Each person's life, each life form, in fact, represents a world, a unique way in which the universe experiences itself. And when your form dissolves, a world comes to an end, one of countless worlds. The return movement in a person's life, the weakening or dissolution of form, whether through old age, illness, disability, loss, or some kind of personal tragedy, carries great potential for spiritual awakening.

That's why you say some older people become sort of luminescent.

[Speaker 1] (11:26 - 11:27)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (11:27 - 11:27)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (11:27 - 11:54)

And others have a resistance against the return movement. The ego identifies with the weakening body, for example. And so negative inner states arise.

People become angry or bitter or complain all the time or talk about the past all the time. Then they resist what's happening.

[Speaker 2] (11:54 - 12:02)

Yeah, because they can't accept, which we're going to talk about those three modalities, acceptance, enjoyment, and enthusiasm.

[Speaker 1] (12:02 - 12:11)

So here comes the acceptance of when old age approaches, the acceptance that this can be also very beautiful if you're open to that.

[Speaker 2] (12:11 - 12:39)

You say, because in old age, the emphasis, the top of 286, everybody, because in old age, the emphasis shifts from doing to being. And our civilization, which is lost in doing, knows nothing of being. It asks being, what do you do with that?

What do you do with it? Yeah. But the older you get, the more conscious you become that being is of more value to you than doing.

Doing. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (12:39 - 12:39)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (12:40 - 12:54)

And the whole point of A New Earth is for everybody to realize no matter what age you are, that being is of more value to us than doing. Yes. And that it's only the being that you bring into your doing that matters.

[Speaker 1] (12:55 - 13:08)

Yes. And you don't have to wait for old age for this to happen. You can become conscious of this at any age.

And then the way in which you interact with the world is very different.

[Speaker 2] (13:09 - 13:42)

Right. 287, when the ego is no longer identified with the return movement in a person's life, old age or approaching death becomes what it's meant to be, an opening into the realm of spirit. And many times, obviously, you don't have to approach death in order to open into the realm of spirit, as so many of you have told us that this whole book is about opening to the realm of spirit.

Okay. You say in A New Earth, on our new earth, old age will be universally recognized and highly valued as a time for the flowering of consciousness.

In a way, we lost it because that was already there in ancient cultures where old age was greatly honored. For example, in the Native American culture, a grandmother, when somebody is called a grandmother, it's a title of great distinction and everybody has great respect for the grandmother because the grandmother embodies that wisdom, not only wisdom, she also embodies the opening into the realm of spirit. The elder of a tribe, for example, they embody the opening into the realm of spirit and through those old people, everybody can contact that realm.

So it's very vital to have that. We lost it and now we are going to find that again where old age is honored rather than looked down upon. So there's the grandmother, and I mentioned in the book, you have the grandmother of the Native American.

In our civilization, you have the granny, and I say the granny at best is cute, but there's no depth to that, to how we perceive it. Because we don't honor. No.

That dimension has virtually disappeared from our civilization, the dimension of depth, the dimension of spirit, the dimension of the sacred, which is so vital for human life.

[Speaker 2] (15:06 - 15:15)

And what kind of effect does that have on us, not honoring that age and that which is sacred within the age and the depth of that? What kind of effect does that have on us?

[Speaker 1] (15:15 - 15:43)

Well, it means the whole dimension of spirit, which is there, is lost. So all our life becomes completely superficial. And when life becomes completely superficial, you're identified with the surface movement of your life.

And because of that lack of depth, people become very unhappy because there's only the surface of their life possessions, achieving this or that, getting recognition. And role-playing. Role-playing.

[Speaker 2] (15:43 - 15:48)

And also what you call on page 289, I like this, intelligent stupidity.

[Speaker 1] (15:48 - 15:49)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (15:49 - 15:50)

Intelligent stupidity.

[Speaker 1] (15:50 - 15:51)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (15:51 - 15:52)

Tell us what you mean by that.

[Speaker 1] (15:52 - 16:24)

Well, an example I give is, for example, you need great intelligence to split the atom. To do that, but then what do we do with that? We make an atom bomb, a destructive weapon, out of something that could be a wonderful thing.

So on the one hand, humans seem very intelligent, and then what they do with that intelligence very often is extremely stupid. Right. And it becomes destructive.

Because that's where intelligent stupidity comes in.

[Speaker 1] (16:28 - 16:45)

And that's because the dimension of spirit is missing. Intelligence that is not connected to the deeper dimension of awareness or spirit, whatever you want to call it. And being.

Yes. Is very destructive. Right.

Sooner or later, it becomes destructive.

[Speaker 2] (16:46 - 16:56)

Yes. I love what you say on page 290. This is, you know, I've read the book now several times, because when you go back and read it again, you will find things that you didn't experience the first time.

[Speaker 1] (16:56 - 16:58)

Repeated readings, very helpful.

Or the second time. Yes. Or the third time.

Once again, this chapter. Struggle or stress is a sign that the ego has returned, as are negative reactions when we encounter obstacles. So whenever you encounter obstacles in your life, it is because your ego is forefront, at the forefront.

[Speaker 1] (17:15 - 17:26)

Yes. It doesn't mean that you don't encounter challenges in your life. But to make them into, if you consider a challenge an obstacle that you need to fight against, that means the ego is there.

Right. This is 290. The force behind the ego's wanting creates enemies.

That is to say, reaction in the form of an opposing force equal in intensity. That's what an enemy is. The stronger the ego, the stronger the sense of separateness between people.

The only actions, this is one of my favorite quotes. I love this. The only, see I've underlined it three times.

The only actions that do not cause opposing reactions are those that are aimed at the good of all.

[Speaker 1] (17:55 - 18:18)

Yes. So you no longer separate yourself and say, this is, this is my, you consider in whatever you do, you consider the totality of the whole, not just my little needs, but how do I fit into the totality? And so then, this is not, no longer karmic action which produces suffering.

Right.

[Speaker 2] (18:18 - 18:42)

We're also learning that action, although necessary, is only a secondary factor in manifesting our external reality. The primary factor in creation is consciousness. No matter how active we are, I love this, how much effort we make, our state of consciousness creates our world.

And if there's no change on that inner level, no amount of action will make any difference.

Yes. In other words, what you do is always secondary. Who you are is primary.

And that means not who you are in the eyes of the world or who you are in whatever image you might have about yourself, but whether you are connected within yourself with that dimension of being spirit or consciousness.

[Speaker 2] (19:07 - 19:23)

You say it beautifully, 294, it's not what you do but how you do what you do determines whether or not you are fulfilling your destiny. Yes. It's not what you do, but how you do it.

And by that you mean the amount of presence or consciousness you bring to whatever you do.

[Speaker 1] (19:24 - 20:15)

Yes. Another aspect of that is whether whatever you are doing at any given moment, even the most, what the mind would say, insignificant thing, are you doing it in presence or is it just a means to an end because you want to get to some future moment? Right.

Just a simple example you could give, you can go to a restaurant and the way in which the waiter puts the plate on your table can be present and conscious and immediately you would be affected by that. Sometimes it happens that you have a waiter who is conscious and with care and attention he or she puts the plate in front of you. Right.

And you can sense a very different energy from a waiter who is just doing his or her job and he just puts it down. And that's in every aspect. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (20:15 - 20:24)

Going through the toll booth, that's picking up your laundry, that's standing in line for french fries, that's everything. People either bring their presence or they don't.

[Speaker 1] (20:24 - 20:42)

Yes. Yeah. And often it's a useful thing to remember to check inside yourself to see whether you are making whatever you are doing at this moment, whether it is primarily a means to an end because you want to get somewhere else through what you are doing, or whether you are giving it your fullest attention.

[Speaker 2] (20:42 - 21:04)

Well, we're going to get into the three modalities of awakening where you say that unless you are at any given time having acceptance, enjoyment, or enthusiasm for whatever you are doing, you should stop doing it. Yes. Because if you're not accepting the moment, enjoying the moment, or having enthusiasm for the moment, then you are in one way or another causing suffering.

[Speaker 1] (21:05 - 21:22)

Yes. It's a dysfunctional state. You're in a dysfunctional state.

You are not aligned with the present moment. You are not aligned with yourself. You are not aligned with life.

Completely dysfunctional. And then you generate psychic disharmony around you. You make yourself unhappy.

Already you are unhappy.

[Speaker 6] (21:22 - 21:22)

Right.

[Speaker 1] (21:22 - 21:31)

Because you can't accept the present moment. And the unhappiness spreads because when you're unhappy, others around you, you make them unhappy too. It spreads like a disease.

[Speaker 2] (21:32 - 22:03)

Well, I think, you know, as we here are already in Chapter 10, one of the biggest issues that I've heard so many people talk about, and a friend of mine started emailing me saying that she was following the classes and that it's very easy to have this resonate with you. But then when you have to go out into the world and actually deal with people, that it starts to get difficult. And that friend is an actress who played my daughter in the movie Beloved.

Oh. Yes. She's my baby girl.

Kimberly Elise played my baby girl. Hello, Kimberly.

[Speaker 6] (22:04 - 22:04)

Hi.

[Speaker 2] (22:04 - 22:23)

Hi. Who's been reading the book. Kimberly's been reading the book.

And I was trying to email back and forth explaining this in email. And as Eckhart says, emails are, you know, not a full form of communication when you're trying to express these ideas. So go at it, Kimberly.

[Speaker 3] (22:24 - 24:07)

Okay. So, yes, as I was telling Oprah, it's been really exciting and enlightening to discuss in theory all the different concepts and ideas in the book. It's been attainable here in this loving cocoon, which I live in and my book club members live in.

But once you go out into the real world and have real life situations, you're presented with a lot of challenges because not everybody's read the book. Not everybody's on this journey. Not everybody is striving to evolve or have awareness.

A simple example, one of the book club members works for a very egotistical boss and is very sort of pushed and has unrealistic demands put upon her. And she's managed to sort of pull herself above it, become witness to the ego she's dealing with and the ego within herself. And as a consequence, she's been perceived as sort of lax and dispassionate and disengaged in everything that's going around because everybody else is so in the drama.

And she feels her job could be at stake because she's being viewed this way. That's an example. So my question is, if we're in the process of evolving our state of consciousness, moving away from our egos and getting closer to our true selves, how do we manage, how do we manage to maintain this level of elevation when you're forced in the real world to live and work with people who come from a strictly egotistical place and don't understand this awareness level and really can perceive you as being weak?

[Speaker 2] (24:09 - 24:14)

Good. Good question. Good.

Now let's hear what Eckhart has to say.

[Speaker 3] (24:16 - 24:16)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (24:17 - 26:31)

So we are gradually learning to live from a different state of consciousness. Now you cannot expect to be necessarily to be a master when you meet difficult people and already to be fully in that state of presence. It's a gradual process where you bring presence into your life.

And as you invite presence into your life, and at first don't even practice with the difficult boss, but leave him alone for a while. First you invite presence into your life with small things. When you're at home, one little movement, making tea, opening the curtains as you get up, looking out of the window without any judgment, just perceiving the light, the clouds.

Bring as much as possible presence into your life in simple situations. When you get into your car, you get in, close the door. Be quiet for 20 seconds, 30 seconds.

Feel the inner body. Many opportunities are there whenever you're waiting. I talk about that in both books, I believe.

Whenever you're waiting for something or someone, drop the waiting and be present. Be fully there, fully alert, fully accepting of that moment rather than wanting some other moment. And gradually you grow in presence power, or presence power grows in you.

And as presence power grows in you, you can begin to apply it to slightly challenging situations which normally would have triggered, for example, some slight irritation. And there you can observe, oh, there's the old reaction as you're waiting in line at the supermarket. And you can see the irritation with the cashier or whoever is there ahead of you.

And you can immediately be aware of that and see, oh, what's it? It has no useful function. It does nothing except make me unhappy.

And you can then let go of it and be clear and free and present at that moment.

[Speaker 2] (26:32 - 27:46)

WINFREY Yeah, I think, too, Kim, that one of the things that we all want when you read this and you feel so great, it's like you feel so enthusiastic and you want everybody to get it as you get it. It's like developing a, like developing spiritual muscle. DR. WINFREY It's like developing spiritual muscle. You can't go out and lift, you know, the 50-pound weight unless you have also lifted the 25-pound weight and the 10-pound weight. And so you have to start developing the muscle with things that you are more comfortable with. And once you've developed a strong enough muscle, the bosses become, the unruly bosses become easier to handle.

In the beginning, you just can't say, I'm going to go out, I'm going to apply this principle and expect it to work, because you have to have the inner strength in which to deal with it. And also it comes from a greater awareness, I think, having had unruly bosses in my early years, it comes from a greater awareness of what your real purpose in life is. I remember being in Baltimore in the early days of my career, having a boss who was a complete jerk, who was just a complete jerk.

I'd like to use another word for it, but I'll just leave it.

[Speaker 1] (27:46 - 27:50)

DR. WINFREY Of course, it's not his true self, but it's almost. WINFREY Heavy overlay.

[Speaker 2] (27:50 - 28:32)

WINFREY Having a boss whose true self was love and innocence and had a wonderful presence, but the- WINFREY Heavy overlay. WINFREY Heavy overlay was the ego self that he showed daily was a complete jerk. Something inside me knew I wasn't going to be here forever, there forever.

WINFREY I knew that I could tolerate it. I could deal with it. I could handle it.

I could, you know, my place in it was not, I knew he ultimately had no power over me, that I needed to do what was necessary for this particular time in my life. But inside myself, I knew trouble don't last always. And I will not, this is not going to be the course of my life.

[Speaker 1] (28:32 - 28:33)

WINFREY This too will pass.

[Speaker 2] (28:33 - 29:06)

WINFREY This too will pass. I knew that this too will pass. And so I could go into the space every day doing what needed to be done, as perhaps maybe your friend needs to do, doing what needs to be done, and could do the thing that everybody else couldn't understand.

I could offer, give that person what they thought they needed. I could give them, I could create the space for them to be and even to show themselves, to be whoever their ego at that particular time, you know, wanted to be. You see what I'm saying?

[Speaker 3] (29:07 - 29:18)

I do. I do. So as you're, as you're at that higher level of awareness, you're able to look at a situation and see it as just a situation, but not your entire life.

[Speaker 2] (29:18 - 29:28)

Not my entire, not your, not your entire life. Because that person, ultimately, I knew I'm going to be here for a time. I need to learn this much here.

And then I'm going to be gone.

[Speaker 3] (29:29 - 29:41)

And do you believe that there are just some people in this lifetime who will not get to this level of awareness? And that you just really have to focus on yourself. Yeah, but that's what I said to you.

[Speaker 2] (29:41 - 29:50)

That's what I was saying to you in the email. That's not your job to worry about what other people are going to do. Your only role is to be, is to concern yourself with yourself.

Isn't that true?

[Speaker 1] (29:50 - 29:51)

Oh, yes.

[Speaker 2] (29:51 - 29:51)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (29:52 - 29:58)

Yeah. So in one thing, as we said, and Oprah called it spiritual muscle.

[Speaker 6] (29:59 - 29:59)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (29:59 - 30:35)

And I called it growing in presence power. It's the same thing. So presence builds up gradually.

Right. In the meantime, you can still practice, even in difficult situations. It might sometimes work, even if your spiritual muscle is not yet highly developed.

If you can remember just a little pointer, the little phrase, am I able to accept this moment as it is? And if this moment comes in the form of this obnoxious person, then the question is, can I accept this obnoxious person at this moment?

[Speaker 2] (30:35 - 30:37)

Can I accept this obnoxious person at this moment?

[Speaker 1] (30:37 - 30:41)

Because whatever arises in the present moment, can I be the space for this?

[Speaker 2] (30:42 - 30:57)

Yeah. And if you're able to remove your ego from it, if you're able to take your ego out of it, then it becomes just what it is. What you were saying, Kim, it becomes just another situation.

If you can take your ego out of it or your friend take the ego out of it, so it's not personal.

[Speaker 1] (30:57 - 30:58)

No.

[Speaker 2] (30:58 - 31:01)

It's not personal at all. No. Yeah.

That's what I learned how to do.

[Speaker 3] (31:02 - 31:09)

So we can really take these opportunities that are so challenging as little gifts and opportunities to grow ourselves.

[Speaker 2] (31:09 - 31:43)

Not only that, it is the truth. That is the spiritual path. You know, we talked at a previous class about how everybody has their cross to bear.

And the truth is that when you confront an obnoxious boss or in difficult situations, therein lies your opportunity to build a spiritual muscle. To build or create or allow presence to come through in a way that you get to show who you are instead of being worried about what the other person is doing.

[Speaker 1] (31:43 - 32:02)

Yes. So difficult people or ego-controlled people have a very important spiritual function in this world. Eventually, they will become so unhappy that they will also go beyond that.

But in the meantime, they are there as practice material for others.

[Speaker 2] (32:03 - 32:07)

That's right. Because if everything was wonderful all the time, you would have no practice, no way to practice.

There would be no growth.

[Speaker 3] (32:09 - 32:10)

Good way to look at it.

[Speaker 2] (32:10 - 32:26)

Talk to you soon. Bye. Bye-bye.

Very nice. Interesting about the practicing of the spiritual muscle. Yes.

Now, notice when I was calling my former boss a jerk, and you said that's not who he is. Do you ever encounter obnoxious people in your life?

[Speaker 1] (32:26 - 32:30)

No, you do. I encounter obnoxious people. It's a question of looking...

[Speaker 2] (32:30 - 32:32)

Do you have only love for them?

[Speaker 1] (32:33 - 32:34)

Not necessarily.

[Speaker 2] (32:34 - 32:35)

Okay, good.

[Speaker 1] (32:35 - 32:35)

No.

[Speaker 2] (32:36 - 32:38)

Okay. But it's a question of what? Did you say?

[Speaker 1] (32:39 - 33:03)

Of whether one is able to look through this overlay of ego or heavy pain body, which can be very strong, whether you're able to go through that. It's very hard to describe this process. When you are not judging the person mentally, not calling him or her anything, you still know that this person is obnoxious.

Yes. You know that.

[Speaker 6] (33:03 - 33:03)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (33:03 - 33:28)

You still know that this person is controlled by the ego. You know it even without formulating a concept in your mind. But you also know that beyond there is a being...

Right. ...that is pure and innocent and as close to God as anybody.

[Speaker 2] (33:28 - 33:29)

As anybody.

[Speaker 1] (33:29 - 33:34)

So... Okay. ...is it possible to look through the ego in others?

[Speaker 2] (33:34 - 33:37)

Yeah, but Eckhart, you still don't have to want to deal with that person.

[Speaker 1] (33:37 - 33:45)

No. You may want to remove yourself. Right.

And if that is possible, then that often is the best thing to do.

[Speaker 2] (33:45 - 33:49)

That's right. Because you can still say, I can bless you in your beingness...

[Speaker 1] (33:49 - 33:49)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (33:50 - 33:53)

...but what you're showing me now is not what I want to deal with.

[Speaker 1] (33:53 - 34:29)

Or you can walk out of a job if it's insane. The environment is insane. And the more present you are, the more certain you will be...

About what to do. ...of what to do. Absolutely.

But we talked about this in one of the sessions, the realization of what you have to do comes from a powerful but peaceful place where you're present. That's right. So when you're walking out of the office, you're not walking out in anger when it comes through presence.

You're walking out, you're being... You're peaceful with everybody and say, that's it, I'm walking out of here. That's it.

There's power, but no negativity.

[Speaker 2] (34:29 - 34:30)

Right, I got that.

[Speaker 1] (34:30 - 34:33)

I got that. So that's... it's beautiful when that happens.

[Speaker 2] (34:34 - 34:36)

When you say, I have had enough.

[Speaker 1] (34:36 - 34:36)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (34:37 - 34:40)

I have had enough. And that comes from your inner purpose...

[Speaker 1] (34:41 - 34:41)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (34:41 - 34:43)

...as opposed to your outer.

[Speaker 1] (34:43 - 34:43)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (34:43 - 34:44)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (34:44 - 35:05)

Now, there may be other situations when you are forced, for some reason you are forced into... Now, an extreme example is that you're in an elevator and it gets... the elevator gets stuck.

And there you are with an obnoxious person for one hour in the elevator. Or some people are stuck with somebody, for some reason they can't go, leave the situation. You're maybe in a prison cell.

[Speaker 2] (35:05 - 35:08)

Or lots of people are in... they have to keep jobs.

[Speaker 1] (35:08 - 35:08)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (35:09 - 35:12)

Where they are dealing with bosses who are obnoxious.

[Speaker 1] (35:12 - 35:12)

That's right.

[Speaker 2] (35:12 - 35:18)

Yeah, as we just heard Kimberly say. You have to keep a job. You have to earn a living for yourself and your family.

[Speaker 1] (35:18 - 35:27)

Yes. And there's the question of accepting that this is where this person is at without getting into reactivity. And resisting it.

Resisting it. Right. Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (35:28 - 35:44)

I did it the right way because I was in that situation for quite a long time and literally would... just accepted it. And I would have friends say, how can you put up with that?

How can you tolerate that? Because I know this too shall pass. And so...

Trouble doesn't last always.

[Speaker 1] (35:45 - 35:46)

Intuitively you did that.

[Speaker 2] (35:46 - 35:59)

Intuitively I knew that I wasn't going to be there forever. Kippy is an American who teaches gifted students at an elementary school on a U.S. Air Force base outside Tokyo, Japan. How do you say hello in Japanese?

Is it konnichiwa?

[Speaker 1] (36:06 - 36:10)

And the same to you. Mushi, mushi. Mushi, mushi.

On the telephone.

[Speaker 2] (36:12 - 36:13)

Hi, Kippy. What is your question?

[Speaker 5] (36:15 - 36:36)

Okay. Eckhart, on page 301 you wrote, enthusiasm means there is a deep enjoyment in what you do plus the added element of a goal or vision that you work toward. My question is, is how can we have goals or visions if we are to always remain in the present?

Good question.

[Speaker 1] (36:37 - 36:38)

Good, yes.

[Speaker 2] (36:38 - 36:39)

Good question.

[Speaker 1] (36:39 - 36:39)

Yes.

[Speaker 5] (36:40 - 36:40)

Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (36:41 - 39:20)

So the goal or vision is inside you as if it were already a reality. And in fact, on some level, it is a reality inside you already. So a goal that is powerful when you're in touch with your own power is not a goal that you project yourself mentally to and say, I would like to achieve this or that at some future point.

I need that. I want that to complete myself. You're reaching out towards that goal.

You're losing yourself. You're not present. But if you are, if you realize that whatever vision you hold is already a reality inside you, I give an example now of the power of now.

Before I ever wrote the book, I had this vision of that book was already, on some level, already there, had already been written. And so I felt all I'm doing is I'm externalizing what's already there. But I had this strong inner feeling that the book already exists inside me.

I saw it as a reality already. I didn't try to achieve writing a book. The book was already there.

And all then I had to do was be open to this energy movement coming from within to manifest what was already there on a deeper level. And that's why Jesus said, whenever you ask for anything, believe that you already have received it and it will be yours. So if you believe that you already have received it, it means it must already be a reality inside yourself.

So you're not coming from lack or scarcity or neediness because then you're not, there's no power behind your vision or your goal. You're already coming from fullness. So the goal is already a reality inside.

You already feel as if you had it. Right. It's already a reality.

And what you feel about it is the fullness that is already there in the present moment. And then you don't lose yourself. Then you are fully there as you begin to respond to this inner impulse.

You manifest it in your life, in the present moment. So it's not a future thing, really. A powerful goal when you visualize, a powerful goal is you're not visualizing in order to achieve something in the future.

You're visualizing in order to bring something out that's already inside you.

[Speaker 2] (39:21 - 40:00)

Wow. Okay. That's powerful, but I can understand why a lot of people would be confused by it because then how do you ever achieve anything in the future?

Isn't that what you're saying too, Kippy? Right, right. How do you ever achieve anything in the future?

Say, I want to be an actress. There are a lot of people, you know, have day jobs where they really want, I want to be an actress. That's a future goal.

I want to be an actor or an actress, or I want to get a job working for a major corporation. How do you, you know, how can you not hold that as a vision for yourself?

[Speaker 1] (40:01 - 40:36)

You can, but what you're visualizing is not yourself in some future state. The power that is there inside you that will manifest externally in time and in the future is already there. Get in touch with the power.

What would it feel like if you were an actress already successful? What does that feel like inside you? And where does the power come from with which you can make a difference in people's lives when you are doing something like that?

Where does the power reside?

[Speaker 2] (40:36 - 40:45)

Yeah, because you say, instead of saying I want to be a great actress is how do I use this talent to manifest in such a way that causes people to feel a certain way?

Yes. Yeah. Yes.

So it's already a reality inside you and then you can take steps towards implementing that, but it comes from fullness rather than neediness. The mistake is not finding the place of power that is in the present moment and believing that something else that is not in the present moment is going to bring you to the place of power. Okay.

It won't.

Okay. I just got it, Kippy. I just got it.

I just got it. What he's saying is that whatever goal that you have or vision that you have must come from the place of being or consciousness. And if it comes from a place of being or consciousness and not as an external goal that you have for yourself, I think I'm getting it right, right?

If it comes from being or consciousness, then it comes through you out into the world instead of you reaching out into the world saying, this is what I want for myself. And so all things, and I can use the example of myself, I have always wanted to do exactly what I'm doing here with all of you. I've always felt that deep inside me, this is what I was meant to do.

I was meant to be a teacher. I was meant to use television as a platform for helping people to better know themselves. And knowing that, knowing that deep inside myself is what has helped bring this into fruition.

You see what I'm saying?

[Speaker 5] (42:16 - 42:17)

I do, yes.

[Speaker 2] (42:17 - 42:48)

That it comes from the inner part of you. There's a feeling that comes from the consciousness part of yourself, the being of yourself that says, this is what I now need to do. And that's why you're saying it doesn't matter what you do.

No. It's how you do what you do. And it doesn't matter what you do.

Everything that you do has to be fueled by consciousness or the spirit of God, which is another way of saying it, by consciousness or the spirit of God. Otherwise, it has no real meaning in your life.

[Speaker 1] (42:49 - 42:56)

And the place of power is in the present moment. You can only touch that power in the present moment. That's right.

So if you're not...

[Speaker 2] (42:57 - 43:08)

And so you said last week, it's about this step, the step today that it takes to get to the next step, then the next step, and the next step, and the next step. You don't get there by thinking, let me, you know.

[Speaker 1] (43:08 - 43:36)

And even if you are doing something at the moment that life has given you that doesn't seem to be part of your vision, let's say you are working in a restaurant, but your vision is being a great artist. Right. You still need to honor whatever it is that you are doing at this moment fully and completely, because it may, in some way, it may arise out of that.

That may also be part of it. That's right.

[Speaker 2] (43:36 - 43:44)

Because every step leads you to the direction. It's the means and not the end that counts. The means and not the end.

[Speaker 1] (43:45 - 43:45)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (43:45 - 43:46)

You follow that, right, Kip?

[Speaker 5] (43:47 - 43:48)

I do. Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (43:48 - 44:17)

That's interesting, because everything always comes back to that same point of whatever sense of presence or being, Holy Spirit, Spirit of God, whatever you choose to call it, name, because it doesn't have an ego, so it doesn't get hung up on what it's being called. That when you bring that into your life, it fuels everything that you do. And as you said last week, the evolutionary impulse of the universe rises up to meet you.

Yes. And so the question to ask yourself, it's a very simple question, am I okay with the present moment? You need to be deeply okay with the present moment to find the power of the present moment, which is your own power or the power of the universe or the power of God.

Am I okay? If you're not okay with the present moment, let's say you're working in a restaurant, but while you're working in the restaurant, you would rather be somewhere else, you're not empowered. You're only empowered that even while you're working in the restaurant, and for some people, that's their life purpose, to work in a restaurant and to spread that presence through whatever they do, people they meet there, and that's beautiful.

[Speaker 2] (44:57 - 45:20)

And what you're saying in this book is, is that whatever you do, wherever you do, whatever you do, can have deep meaning and purpose to it and for the rest of the world if you bring your presence to it. Yes, yes. And we all have encountered that, the difference between people, whether it's a waiter or the toll booth operator, or you know.

Yes, enormous.

[Speaker 2] (45:22 - 46:31)

In every one of our life circumstances. All right, let's talk about, you say that the alignment of your outer purpose with your inner purposes, which we talked about last week, the inner purpose must fuel the outer purpose. Otherwise, ultimately, it's not going to work for us.

But the alignment of our outer purpose with the inner purpose is called awakened doing, and that awakened doing is the next stage in the evolution of consciousness on our planet. There are three modalities of awakened doing, acceptance, enjoyment, and enthusiasm. On page 295, you write, each modality represents a certain vibrational frequency of consciousness.

That is, you need to be vigilant to make sure that one of them operates whenever you are engaged in doing anything at all. This is key, folks. From the most simple task to the most complex.

If you are not in a state of either acceptance, enjoyment, or enthusiasm, look closely and you will find that you are creating suffering for yourself and others. So let's explain each one of them. You touched on it a little bit earlier, that acceptance does not mean condonement.

It means I accept this moment for what it is.

[Speaker 1] (46:31 - 46:49)

Yes. And so when you're doing something, you'll be amazed if you become aware of this and observe people around you, how many people are constantly in a state of disharmony because they cannot be in either acceptance, enjoyment, or enthusiasm about what they're doing.

[Speaker 2] (46:49 - 47:03)

You use the example in the book of changing a flat tire. Now, you don't have to enjoy changing the flat tire, that you would have reached another level of consciousness where you can enjoy changing it, which I'm sure you could. You maybe could change it with enthusiasm.

[Speaker 1] (47:03 - 47:05)

I'll let you know when it happens.

[Speaker 2] (47:06 - 47:26)

Okay. But so you don't have to enjoy changing the flat tire, but at least to accept the tire is flat, you will have a much better experience rather than cursing the fact that you've had a flat tire, which is what most people do. The first time you get the flat tire, everybody goes, damn, flat tire.

I can't believe it.

[Speaker 1] (47:26 - 47:29)

And even more so if it's at night in the pouring rain.

[Speaker 2] (47:29 - 47:29)

That's right.

It's never convenient. No. Yeah.

So the question then is you have to check inside to see what is your inner state of consciousness that you're bringing to this action, to whatever you are doing. What is this inner state of consciousness? What state am I in?

And then often you will realize that you are in a state of denial of the present moment. Okay.

[Speaker 2] (47:54 - 47:59)

So you said acceptance, you just said this to Beth, is just saying what is, is.

[Speaker 1] (47:59 - 48:06)

Is. And if this is what I have to do at this moment, then I might as well do it without resistance.

[Speaker 2] (48:06 - 48:13)

And that is the same as if it's a flat tire or if it is as my friend Kimberly was saying earlier with the girl and her boss.

[Speaker 1] (48:13 - 48:14)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (48:14 - 48:15)

My boss is obnoxious.

[Speaker 1] (48:15 - 48:16)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (48:16 - 48:17)

That is what is.

[Speaker 1] (48:17 - 48:17)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (48:18 - 48:22)

I'm not going to change that. So let me figure out how to deal with that.

[Speaker 1] (48:22 - 48:47)

Yes. And the acceptance really has to be applied only to the present moment. If the boss is there, sitting there, saying whatever he says.

Right. At this moment, am I able to accept this? Am I bringing acceptance to this?

That's right. Now here we are talking more specifically about when you're performing some kind of action. Right.

And what is the question is, what energy flows into the doing?

That's right. That's the question.

[Speaker 1] (48:49 - 49:46)

Is it the energy of denial or negativity? And once you have developed a little bit of sensitivity, you can very easily tell by observing other people whether the energy that flows into what they do is contaminated with negativity or whether it's presence or consciousness that flows. Totally qualitative difference is enormous.

I mentioned the waiter as an example. How does he put the plate on the table? Is he just doing a job because he wants to get out of there as soon as possible or just making a living?

Or is he honoring this moment? And by honoring this moment, he's honoring you. He's honoring life.

And something flows into the simple movement of putting a plate on the table, just as one simple example. Right. That changes the entire environment around him too.

Yeah. Okay.

[Speaker 2] (49:46 - 49:55)

And the reason you've come into acceptance again is because of the energy that you're bringing into it. And the next modality for awakening is enjoyment.

[Speaker 1] (49:56 - 49:56)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (49:56 - 49:58)

That's a notch above acceptance.

[Speaker 1] (49:58 - 50:02)

Yes. Different frequency, vibrational frequency.

[Speaker 2] (50:02 - 50:04)

Because everything is about vibrational frequency.

[Speaker 1] (50:04 - 50:05)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (50:05 - 50:09)

People are bringing energy to everything that they do.

[Speaker 1] (50:10 - 50:10)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (50:10 - 50:10)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (50:11 - 50:26)

Now, enjoyment is a higher frequency. Right. Some things are easier, of course, to do in the state of enjoyment.

One might almost say you do them naturally in a state of enjoyment. Things that you like doing.

[Speaker 2] (50:26 - 50:36)

Yeah. I love this quote, Eckhart. On 297, you say, on the new earth, enjoyment will replace wanting as the motivating power behind people's actions.

[Speaker 1] (50:37 - 50:37)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (50:37 - 50:38)

When's that going to happen?

[Speaker 1] (50:38 - 50:43)

Well, not in the collective, but it can happen in the individual already now.

[Speaker 2] (50:43 - 50:49)

Where we do things because we enjoy them. And not because you want more and want more and want more.

[Speaker 1] (50:49 - 50:49)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (50:49 - 50:57)

Because so many people have expressed how you get more things and get more things and you want more things and want more things and that leaves you with an empty space.

[Speaker 1] (50:57 - 51:29)

Yes. Trying to fill your life up with things, eventually you come to an empty space and you feel completely unfulfilled. Right.

And so the wanting is the usual thing that comes out of the egoic state of scarcity or lack, which is always there when the ego predominates. So I need that in order to fulfill myself, in order to find satisfaction. I need to achieve this in order to be fully myself.

This is the underlying assumption.

[Speaker 2] (51:30 - 51:30)

Right. Of wanting.

[Speaker 1] (51:31 - 51:39)

And that is the old energy of wanting. And so you go out and it becomes very stressful because you're trying to arrive at that point.

[Speaker 2] (51:39 - 51:39)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (51:39 - 51:44)

Always trying to get away from this moment because the next one promises greater fulfillment.

[Speaker 2] (51:44 - 51:44)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (51:45 - 51:53)

The next one never comes because when it comes it's the now again, which is a place you want to get away from. Completely insane, but normal.

[Speaker 2] (51:53 - 52:00)

Okay. So getting to the place where you can have enjoyment from things because enjoyment does what?

[Speaker 1] (52:01 - 52:11)

Enjoyment brings an enormous empowerment to what you do and it flows into what you do. And this is the beginning of creativity, which comes out of that.

[Speaker 2] (52:11 - 52:29)

When the creative power of the universe becomes conscious of itself, it manifests as joy. You don't have to wait for something meaningful to come into your life so that you can finally enjoy what you do. There's more meaning in joy than you will ever need.

The waiting to start living syndrome is one of the most common delusions of the unconscious state.

[Speaker 1] (52:30 - 52:41)

That's important because many people are trapped in that delusion. They are waiting for something to come into their lives, which will finally give them joy or a sense of aliveness.

[Speaker 2] (52:41 - 52:54)

The misperception that joy comes from what you do is normal and is always dangerous because it creates the belief that joy is something that can be derived from something else, such as an activity or a thing. Don't people do things that bring them joy?

[Speaker 1] (52:55 - 53:08)

That's what it looks like, but it's the same process that we talked about a little earlier when we talked about manifesting something from within. The joy is there. It comes from the fullness of life that you already sense within you at this moment.

The misperception that joy comes from what you do is normal, also dangerous, creates a belief that joy is something that can be derived from something else. You then look to the world to bring you joy, to bring you happiness, but it cannot do that. That is why people live in constant frustration because the world's not giving them what they think they need.

You will only enjoy any activity in which you are fully present, any activity that is not just a means to an end. It isn't the action you perform that you really enjoy, but the deep sense of aliveness that flows into it. That aliveness is one with who you are.

I got that. Yeah. Right.

But is that enjoyment the same as pleasure?

[Speaker 1] (53:48 - 53:55)

No. Pleasure comes from something without outside of you. Okay.

So you derive pleasure from something outside of you.

[Speaker 2] (53:55 - 54:14)

And I ask that because you say this means that when you enjoy doing something, you're really experiencing the joy of being in its dynamic aspect. That's why anything you enjoy doing connects you with the power behind all creation. I read that and I thought, what about people who enjoy gambling or enjoy...

These are pleasures.

[Speaker 2] (54:15 - 54:22)

Okay. Sex or enjoy being sadistic or enjoy harming other people.

[Speaker 1] (54:22 - 54:24)

Yes, or enjoy things that...

[Speaker 2] (54:24 - 54:26)

The power of creation isn't behind that.

[Speaker 1] (54:26 - 54:36)

No, we sometimes call that enjoy, but there is no true joy in it. It's being addicted to a pleasure, something outside that feeds the ego or the plain body.

[Speaker 2] (54:36 - 55:05)

And pleasure by the definition means pleasing me. Yes. Which would be ego.

Yes. Got it. Got it.

When you become more awakened, everybody, things begin to flow in your life in a way that they had not before. And that's what's supposed to be happening. These, you know, you talk in the book about, serendipitous encounters.

I don't think you use the word, but things just start happening. They line up.

Yes, yes. You have to be there for this to happen. If you're not there, you have to be there in the now so that life can work for you.

You can't, if you deny life by denying the now, life can't work. It's like shutting, closing the shutters. The sun can't come in.

The sun doesn't mind, but the sun, why not open the shutters and let the sun shine in? The strange thing is that it's when you no longer deny the present moment, then not only do you see all the things that are lining up there to support you, it also means more things are coming into your life.

Absolutely.

[Speaker 1] (55:49 - 55:50)

To be of assistance.

[Speaker 2] (55:50 - 55:58)

Absolutely. And so that's wonderful once you- The evolutionary impulse of the universe. Yes, yes.

Rises up to me. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (55:59 - 56:21)

It does not mean that you will never again encounter challenges. Right. Or if you want to have a certain course of action, you want to go from here to there, always, of course, being conscious that the step you're taking at this moment is the most important step, but you might still want to go from here to there.

But it does reduce the fear. Oh, yes.

[Speaker 2] (56:21 - 56:22)

It does reduce the fear.

[Speaker 1] (56:22 - 56:22)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (56:23 - 56:27)

Because you know, you can always bring your sense of presence to whatever the moment is.

[Speaker 1] (56:27 - 56:27)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (56:27 - 56:28)

And that you'll be all right.

[Speaker 1] (56:28 - 56:28)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (56:29 - 56:29)

That's right.

[Speaker 1] (56:29 - 57:05)

And as soon as you encounter a challenge, not resist it, but immediately come to an acceptance of the new situation and then see how that- Very often it turns around and becomes actually helpful. Yes. In the same way that a martial arts master always uses the opposing energy.

He never- The martial arts master does not fight against. He uses the opponent's energy and gives into it. And he wins by yielding to the oncoming energy.

[Speaker 2] (57:05 - 57:13)

Knowing how to surrender to the oncoming energy. Yes, absolutely. Well, let's go to the third modality, which is we've talked about acceptance.

[Speaker 1] (57:13 - 57:13)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (57:13 - 57:33)

If you can't bring acceptance, enjoyment or enthusiasm. And enthusiasm, which is what Kipi from Tokyo had brought up earlier, is the higher vibration modality for awakening. That whenever you are enthusiastic, that there is something else that comes into play.

There's an energy field created that's bigger than you are.

[Speaker 1] (57:33 - 57:56)

Yes. It's particularly- It's an energy that is of a creative kind. An energy that creates something, brings something into this world.

I wouldn't say it's necessarily of a higher frequency. It's a more powerful frequency because it's the outgoing movement that is connected, however, with the source.

[Speaker 2] (57:56 - 58:09)

Yeah. And again, we say that that is the kind of enthusiasm that's just not wild, external enthusiasm, but enthusiasm born of the spirit. Enthusiasm born of consciousness.

[Speaker 1] (58:09 - 58:44)

There are no clear dividing lines between these three modalities. Sometimes acceptance suddenly shifts into enjoyment. And sometimes enjoyment shifts into enthusiasm.

So let's say you're doing something that before you would have resented and suddenly you're able to realize, okay, there's resentment and denial inside me. Let's see if I can accept that I have to do this right now. And so suddenly you bring acceptance to it.

And as you bring acceptance to it, and you're actually beginning to enjoy what you're doing.

[Speaker 2] (58:44 - 58:47)

Do you ever have problems, Eckhart? Do you have problems?

No, I don't create problems. Challenges happen always. You don't get...

Life will always challenge you in one way or another. And that is good. But there's no need to transform the challenges of life into problems by dwelling on things mentally.

If you cannot take any action at this moment to turn things around in your mind, which is where worry comes in, related to... Worry is problem making. It's the mental problem making.

So I don't have problems, not because there are no challenges in my life, because no matter what stage in life you reach, there's always some kind of challenge. Right. Life is designed in that way.

The world is not here to make you conscious. Sorry, the world is not here to make you happy. Right.

It's here to make you conscious.

[Speaker 2] (59:39 - 1:00:03)

And when you bring consciousness into your life, for all of those who have been conflicted over the past weeks about their religious beliefs, when you bring consciousness into your life, what you're really saying is that you're bringing in, allowing the spirit of that which is God to flow through you and be the preeminent force in your life. Isn't that what you're saying?

[Speaker 1] (1:00:03 - 1:00:07)

Yes. Yes. Yes.

It's no longer the little me.

[Speaker 2] (1:00:07 - 1:00:14)

Not the little me. Yeah. You are connecting yourself to the bigger source, to the source of all things.

[Speaker 1] (1:00:14 - 1:00:41)

Yes. And let it then flow through you. And then this is, for example, where creativity comes into your life.

True creativity can only come in when you let that dimension into your life. So the source energy manifests through you. And creativity can start with a little thing, like even a tiny creative thought or some new way of looking at something is already a sign of creativity.

But most important, it's recognizing that when you can be conscious of the consciousness, when you bring the presence of that which is consciousness or the spirit of a higher power or the spirit of God into your life and you allow that to direct your path, that then all things come to you as they should. Yeah. That's how you create the flow.

[Speaker 1] (1:01:05 - 1:01:07)

Yes, that's the flow, entering the flow.

[Speaker 2] (1:01:07 - 1:01:16)

And that is how you say a new species is arising on the planet. It is arising now and we are it. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (1:01:17 - 1:01:45)

This is such an enormous shift in consciousness that's happening. It's almost, this is why I use that expression, it's almost as if we were transforming into a new species. For the first time, a conscious species.

It's almost as if humanity was only now beginning to actually wake up.

[Speaker 2] (1:01:45 - 1:01:59)

Yes. I marvel at how you were able to put these sentences together in such a way that they have connected to me and to all of you all around the world. So thank you for this experience.

[Speaker 1] (1:02:00 - 1:02:10)

Thank you. And everybody else, of course, is also that in essence, you are the opening for that dimension to come into this world.

[Speaker 2] (1:02:10 - 1:02:21)

That's right. And anything that we do that is creative or is successful or is good comes from that source flowing through us. It is not of our doing.

[Speaker 1] (1:02:22 - 1:02:22)

No.

But of the greater doing. Yes. Of consciousness.

There's no greater gift than sharing it. That's why I wanted to share it with you all. There's no greater gift than sharing it with somebody that you care about and having their lives also be awakened and transformed by the words that point you in the direction of the experience of awakening.

So thank you all. And again, as Gandhi said, let's all go out in the world and be the change we want to see. Thank you.

Hey, Super Solars. Looking for a great new read or listen? Well, that's why we're so excited about Oprah's new book, The Path Made Clear, Discovering Your Life's Direction and Purpose.

Eckhart Tolle A New Earth : Awakening to Your Life's Purpose (Chapter 1) gid : [//art19-episode-locator/v0/fZvBNB27zvUFC5iE-QNdT6lsCLnQIdtKdYCI8366WSw]

Hello to all you podcast listeners. We're bringing you something really special. One of the great spiritual thinkers of our time, Eckhart Tolle and I, are giving you a chapter-by-chapter class on what I believe is his groundbreaking masterpiece, Eckhart's best-selling book, A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose.

This book resonated with me in such a profound way. I truly think that it's the most important book I've ever read. It's changed the way I live my life, so much so that I always have a copy on my nightstand, because I constantly give myself a refresher course.

And now more than ever, we need to create what Eckhart calls A New Earth, inside our personal lives, in our communities, and the world. Give it a listen, and over 10 episodes, you too will be opened up and learn how to quiet your mind, get your ego in check, live a fully more present life. We're talking deep, big picture, even delving into consciousness and the reason why we're all really here.

My greatest hope is that Eckhart's quiet wisdom and patient teachings will resonate with you as they have with me. Each podcast episode will start with my conversation with Eckhart about a chapter, and then Eckhart answers questions from people who are reading along in the book. So I encourage you to get your own copy of A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose, and join us for a thrilling, enlightening, and spiritual experience.

Now, in this first class, to kick things off, Eckhart teaches some very practical ways for us to learn how to be more present, because as he says, things, this is his quote, things cannot give you happiness, because happiness comes from a deeper place within you that you can only access in the present moment. I'll tell you, this chapter, I believe, is going to make you want to get outside and see the world through a different lens. I know it did that for me.

I started seeing everything differently. So here we go. Week one, A New Earth.

Of course, I'm honored to introduce the author of this great book, A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose, Eckhart Tolle.

[Speaker 1] (2:26 - 2:28)

Thank you. Good to be here.

[Speaker 2] (2:28 - 2:52)

And many people are saying that they look at flowers differently now. I can certainly say that I do. And one of the things that you said that struck me when you said that they are representatives of the spiritual realm, and that when you are still, allow yourself to be still with a flower, or a crystal, or a bird, or really anything of nature.

[Speaker 1] (2:52 - 2:53)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (2:53 - 2:55)

But you used a flower specifically because?

[Speaker 1] (2:55 - 3:55)

Yes. Because a flower is, nature on the whole is a beautiful access point into inner stillness if you can be there for the present. But a flower is even...

You're saying messengers from another realm. Yes, like messengers. A flower is much more fragile than a plant.

It is more fleeting, ethereal, I think is the word, more ethereal. So it has less density to it than most other things. And because of the lack of density, it's almost as if spirit could flow through it more freely.

So when you contemplate a flower without too much interference of the thinking mind to actually truly look, which is what Jesus said by the way, in churches you hear Jesus saying, look at the lilies of the field. Yes. And so when he said that, he wasn't just saying look at the lilies of the field.

[Speaker 8] (3:55 - 3:56)

Aren't they pretty?

[Speaker 1] (3:56 - 4:32)

Yes. He said, look, you really have to look because there is something that they embody something that you also have, but because of all your anxiety about tomorrow and you're thinking, that's what I'm translating very freely now, what Jesus said. These flowers are not anxious, they are not concerned about tomorrow and see how beautiful they are, how God clothes them in such beauty.

And you can live like that also. So he used this natural realm and flowers to get people in touch with the dimension of depth within them.

[Speaker 2] (4:33 - 5:38)

Well, what's very interesting to me about all of this is that when I read that the first time, I thought it was a beautiful passage. And then I read it a second time and awakened a little bit more and started to look at nature differently in California. And I always just appreciated the garden.

Aren't they lovely and all the different colors and the roses and all that. And then I decided to move into the garden without naming it. What if I were like a babe?

What if I were a babe learning what a flower was for the first time? What if I went out under the oaks that I love so much, but I didn't know it was an oak. I didn't know what to call it.

That for the first time, and I've loved trees all of my life and the sense of power and stillness they represent. But by not naming those things in nature, that I felt a magical presence. I felt a sense of majesty and power and strength and connection that I'd never felt before.

[Speaker 1] (5:38 - 5:38)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (5:38 - 5:40)

Because I didn't give it a name.

[Speaker 1] (5:40 - 5:41)

Yes. That's the key.

[Speaker 2] (5:41 - 5:48)

Yes. I didn't give a name or have a reference for everything that a tree is meant in my life. That's right.

Isn't it?

[Speaker 1] (5:48 - 6:08)

That's right. So being present with the perception. And this theme runs, is perhaps the main theme running through the whole book is that state where the compulsive naming of things.

And you start with nature because it's easier to let go of the naming. Later we'll be talking about that in some future session.

[Speaker 2] (6:08 - 6:09)

Stop labeling people.

[Speaker 1] (6:09 - 6:54)

Yes. That's more difficult because people invite the labels because there's so much mind in everybody and they label you and you label them. So, but with nature, this is the starting point to find a different relationship to nature.

It doesn't mean that you need to forget what you have learned about trees or about flowers when it's necessary. You can get that knowledge and you'd use it. Right.

But not to be totally in the grip of what you have learned of mental labels, of interpreting mentally, but being able to perceive. One could call it, perceive the flower, see it through a background of just stillness. Just stillness.

Which is really consciousness.

When you start to walk through a park or walk in your backyard or begin to, and you're right, it's easier with nature than with people. And pretend that you don't know, or just let yourself be in the space without labeling the things. It's just, everything's vibrating and it's like, you know, scintillating.

Everything's exciting. Everything's exciting. A walk through the park becomes exciting and it's the same path you've always taken.

[Speaker 1] (7:25 - 7:47)

Yes. And before, when you were involved in your mind, perhaps you didn't even see it. Never saw it.

I see. Yeah. And so many people are so trapped in this continuous mental noise that absorbs their whole attention all the time.

Every thought absorbs the stream of thinking, absorbs their attention. They don't see that the world around them is vitally alive.

[Speaker 8] (7:47 - 7:47)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (7:48 - 8:10)

So you become, gradually, as people then grow older, the world around them becomes more and more lifeless and dead. Right. Right.

And that happens to them also. And why is that? Because...

That is because you are run by mental abstraction. All the concepts and the thoughts in the head are abstractions.

[Speaker 2] (8:10 - 8:19)

It's not life. So you can't take in the information that's there to be received all around you because you're in your head.

[Speaker 1] (8:19 - 8:21)

You're in your head. You're not present.

[Speaker 2] (8:21 - 8:22)

All right.

[Speaker 1] (8:22 - 8:27)

So you're lost in thought. I could say that the human condition is being lost in thought.

[Speaker 8] (8:28 - 8:28)

Hmm.

[Speaker 1] (8:29 - 8:36)

And people don't... And that, of course, is the famous, what we call the voice in the head. The voice in the head.

Some people have been asking about.

[Speaker 2] (8:36 - 8:38)

Which we'll be talking a lot about the voice in the head.

[Speaker 1] (8:38 - 8:43)

So some people say, what voice in the head? It's that one. It's that one.

[Speaker 2] (8:44 - 8:51)

All right. So Kelly from Alton, Illinois, joins us. Kelly, hi.

Hi. Hi, Oprah. Hi.

[Speaker 3] (8:51 - 8:53)

What's your question? Thank you for having me.

[Speaker 2] (8:53 - 8:55)

Oh, good. Okay. What's your question?

[Speaker 3] (8:55 - 9:26)

Well, my question is regarding religion and spirituality. I had a Catholic upbringing. I married a Catholic, and we're raising our children this way.

In reading books such as Tully's, it's really opened my eyes up to a new way of thinking, a new form of spirituality that doesn't always align with the teachings of Christianity. So my question is to you, Oprah, how have you reconciled these spiritual teachings with your Christian beliefs?

[Speaker 2] (9:26 - 12:55)

Oh, the question's to me. I was resting knowing it was going to be about him. I've reconciled it because I was able to open my mind about the absolute, indescribable hugeness of that which we call God.

I took God out of the box because I grew up in the Baptist church, and there were rules and belief systems and doctrine. And I happened to be sitting in church in my late 20s, and I was going to this church where you had to get there at 8 o'clock in the morning, or you couldn't get a seat, and a very charismatic minister, and everybody was just into the sermon. And this great minister was preaching about how great God was, and how omniscient, and omnipresent, and God is everything.

And then he said, and the Lord thy God is a jealous God. And I was caught up in the rapture of that moment until he said jealous. And something struck me.

And I was like, I think about 27 or 28. I was thinking, God is all. God is omnipresent.

God is all. And God's also jealous. God is jealous of me.

And something about that didn't feel right in my spirit, because I believe that God is love, and that God is in all things. And so that's when the search for something more than doctrine started to stir within me. And I love this quote that Eckhart has.

This is one of my favorite quotes in chapter 1, where he says, man made God in his own image. The eternal, the infinite, and unnameable was reduced to a mental idol that you had to believe in and worship as my God or our God. Now, I think that's very eloquently put by Eckhart Tolle in chapter 1.

But that is exactly what I was feeling when I was sitting in church that Sunday, listening to the preacher. And it's been a journey to get to the place where I understand that what I believe is that Jesus came to show us Christ's consciousness, that Jesus came to show us the way of the heart, and that what Jesus was saying to show us the higher consciousness that we're all talking about here. Jesus came to say, look, I'm going to live in the body, in the human body, and I'm going to show you how it's done.

These are some principles and some laws that you can use to live by to know that way. And when I started to recognize that, that Jesus didn't come in my belief, even as a Christian, I don't believe that Jesus came to start Christianity. So that was also very helpful to me.

There was a wonderful book called Discover the Power Within You by Eric Butterworth, which helped me reconcile the two. So that might be really good for those of you who are Christian and trying to balance the two. What would you say?

Because one of the things that Eckhart says in the beginning of this book on page six is that this book's main purpose is not to add new information or beliefs to your mind or to try to convince you of anything, but to bring about a shift in consciousness, that is to say, to awaken. How do you advise people to reconcile this with their religious beliefs?

[Speaker 1] (12:55 - 14:29)

Well, religion can be an open doorway into spirituality and religion can be a closed door that prevents you from going deeper. I love reading the New Testament and I also read the Old Testament. Sometimes there's some incredible jewels in there.

And when I went through this inner transformation and for the first time, accidentally, I picked up a copy of the New Testament at my mother's place and I started reading and I immediately recognized the deep truth that is there. And I realized the truth that is deeper, that is expressed in what Jesus said, is much deeper than how the church interprets it. There is a depth to it and it reflects your own depth when you read it.

So there's no conflict between this teaching, which is purely spiritual, and any religion, because if you go deep enough into your religion, then you all get to the same place. It's a question of going deeper. So there's no conflict here.

The important thing is that religion doesn't become an ideology. So it's, I believe this, and the moment you say, only my belief or our belief is true, and you deny other people's beliefs, then you've adopted an ideology. And then religion becomes a closed door.

But potentially, religion can also be an open door.

Well, let me share this with you too, Kelly. There is another book by a woman named Elizabeth Lesser. It's called The Seeker's Guide, where she talks about the new spirituality versus the old.

So I just wanted to, this is on page 51 and 52 of Elizabeth Lesser's book called The Seeker's Guide. And she talks about old spirituality versus the new spirituality. And she says the old was, the old way is the hierarchy has the authority.

Church authorities tell you how to worship in church and how to behave outside of church. The new spirituality is that you are your own best authority as you work to know and love yourself. You discover how to live a more spiritual life.

The old is God and the path to worship him have already been defined, and all you need to do is follow the directions. The new is being able to listen within for your own definition of spirituality. Your deeper longings are your compass on the search.

And the old says exactly what Eckhart was saying, that there is only one path. It's the right way and all other ways are wrong. And the new spirituality says that many paths lead to spiritual freedom and peace.

You have a rich array of gems from which to draw illumination, the world's religious traditions, mythology, psychology, healing methods, scientific wisdom, your own experience, and that you can begin to string a necklace all your own. Then she lists, you know, other old and new. And so it's really a question of what you were saying to us earlier, that this material strikes a chord within you, something in you opens up and once, you know, feels alive and is awakened to that.

And yet there is the ideology that says what to you? What is the conflict for you?

[Speaker 3] (16:23 - 16:45)

Just thoughts on the afterlife, things like that. In a lot of books, such as Tully's, we get teachings from Buddhism or Hinduism. And those thoughts don't go along with, you know, what I was raised to believe as a Christian.

So that's been the biggest thing that I've struggled with, I think.

[Speaker 2] (16:46 - 17:02)

Well, I am a Christian who believes that there are certainly many more paths to God other than Christianity. So I'm a free-thinking Christian who believes in my way, but I don't believe that it's the only way with 6 billion people here on the planet.

[Speaker 1] (17:03 - 17:15)

Another author who might appeal to you, who uses Christian terminology, but goes very, very deep using Christian language and Christian teachings, Joel Goldsmith.

[Speaker 2] (17:15 - 17:15)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (17:16 - 17:18)

So any book... Joel Goldstein? Goldsmith.

[Speaker 2] (17:18 - 17:19)

Oh, Goldsmith.

[Speaker 1] (17:19 - 17:27)

Joel Goldsmith. Any book by Joel Goldsmith, I think you would try that and can see how deep the Christian teaching can be.

[Speaker 2] (17:28 - 17:38)

Okay. Well, thank you very much. Thanks, Kelly.

We've got Erica, who lives on a U.S. military base in Landstuhl, Germany. Hi, Erica.

[Speaker 4] (17:39 - 18:22)

Hi, Oprah. Thank you so much. What is your question or comment to us?

My question is for Mr. Tully. I, too, grew up in the Baptist church, just like Oprah and so many others. And you talk about the voice in my head.

And I had a situation where I no longer attend that church because the behavior didn't line up with the teaching. But on Sundays when I'm at home with my family and we're enjoying a nice day and we decided not to go to church, that voice in my head says things like, you didn't go to church today. That's not how you were raised.

When your mom calls, what are you going to say? Can you help me with that on explaining why we have the voice in the head that says things like that?

[Speaker 1] (18:22 - 18:23)

Yes.

[Speaker 4] (18:24 - 18:27)

Yes, he can help you, Erica.

[Speaker 1] (18:29 - 21:10)

Now, the voice, of course, is the conditioned thinking. The voice, what the voice says, is conditioned by your past, by your childhood, by your upbringing, by the surrounding culture. All those things condition your thought processes.

And sometimes it happens when you awaken, maybe not completely, but when the awakening process begins, a lot of the old voices in the head, the old thoughts still come up. They still come up. And the essential thing is to recognize them as conditioned thought processes.

And to see, because the fact that you're asking the question means there's already an awareness there that these are the voices in your head. So you are not totally identified. Because if you were totally identified with the voice, you would say, I feel so terrible.

I really think I should be doing this. But you realize it's the voice in the head that's doing it. And then you can allow it and say, okay, there's an old thought.

And allow it to be there and be the awareness behind the thought. And anybody, this is not just for your particular case. There are many other instances where people have the movement of thought.

Telling them this or that. Interpreting events and people according to the old conditioning. When you meet people, telling you immediately, judging somebody according to your old conditioning with prejudices, with all the old conditioning.

The only way you can gradually go beyond the conditioned thought processes is simply to be there as the witness. You don't need to act on it or say, go away. I don't want to be thinking this.

That doesn't work. It would only give it more energy. That's right.

So again, a vital thing, and this will be going throughout the book and the teaching is, as much as possible, be aware of what your mind is saying. And realize there's only a small part of the consciousness, the totality of consciousness that you are. Many people don't know that yet.

They're totally one with the voice. They are the voice. They're so identified with every thought that comes.

There's no space between them and the thought. So the essential thing is this, realize there's thought processes and here I am as the space for the thought. As the awareness or the space for the thought.

And that the thought is only a part of... a small part. It's the conditioned part of who you are.

[Speaker 2] (21:10 - 21:10)

Who you are.

[Speaker 1] (21:11 - 21:19)

And that's time bound. It's conditioned by the past. There's a more essential part of who you are.

And that is the awareness that knows that there's a voice.

The awareness of the thoughts. Yes. Which we're going to get into in further detail.

But also, Erica, let me share this with you. Part of what you and our first caller from Alton, Illinois, was also talking about is trying to reconcile the two. The reason why the voice keeps repeating is because, of course, of what Eckhart is saying, it's conditioned thinking.

But also the guilt is you haven't made a decision for yourself about what is real or true for you. So you're still being led by the conditioned thinking and haven't made a decision. And for me, that came when I was able to do exactly what Eckhart said earlier.

I didn't phrase it the way he did. I asked God to use me. That has been my prayer for many years.

You know, Eckhart says, ask life what is its purpose for you. But I would pray on my knees to God and ask to be used and to be a servant and to allow his spirit to work through me and to not to just be on television, but to be able to use television for a purpose that was greater than my own personality and to collect shoes in my closet. It didn't mean I wanted to give up the shoes, but I would if I had to.

So when I started to ask that question of God, how can I be used? God, how do you want me to live? How would you have me be?

I let go of the guilt of did I make it to church or I didn't make it to church? Because the majesty and power and omniscience of this force that we call God cannot be contained in a church. You're right.

Cannot be contained in a church and does not just want to be served in a church. But if church allows you to feel like you are being of service, then use it that way. But the bigness is what Eckhart was saying in that quote in the book, man-made God in his image, the eternal, the infinite and unnameable force that is God, that is all consciousness, that is universal energy, I don't believe wishes to just be served on Sunday at 11 o'clock service.

And so that's what you're trying to reconcile with yourself, the voice in your head versus what you really should be doing. That's it. Yeah.

Thank you.

[Speaker 8] (24:09 - 24:10)

That's it.

[Speaker 2] (24:10 - 24:11)

You need to make that decision for yourself.

[Speaker 8] (24:12 - 24:13)

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (24:13 - 24:27)

And start asking that question of God. Okay. All right.

I'll do that. Thank you. Thank you, Erika from Lundstuhl, Lundstuhl, Germany.

We have Adam from Redmond, Washington. Hi, Adam.

[Speaker 6] (24:28 - 24:40)

Hi, thank you so much, both of you. Go ahead. Oh, gosh.

What role do you see community or joining with others with the intention of sharing this consciousness playing in the flowering of human consciousness?

[Speaker 1] (24:42 - 25:42)

Good. Good question. Yes, to have a group of people who practice being present, perhaps listen to a spiritual talk or have a little reading, enter stillness, be present is extremely helpful because an energy field is generated when people come together and enter the state of presence together.

And this is happening here also, although people are not physically together. And yet there is an energy field now that is generated all over the planet of presence, a different level of consciousness being generated. So it's extremely helpful to join with others.

Also, it needs to be said not to become dependent on any group. It is still your responsibility to bring this new consciousness into everyday life. Whenever you go about your business in your family.

Once you become dependent upon the group, then you've now.

[Speaker 1] (25:46 - 26:24)

Then you always need to go back to the group and you cannot live presence in your daily life. So the important thing, yes, go to the group to generate more presence. And then your responsibility is to live it in your everyday life, where most of the time, perhaps you will not yet be surrounded by people who are present.

You will be surrounded by the old egoic consciousness. So there that is and this is the challenge for everybody now who is awakening that, yes, more and more people are beginning to awaken. And yet there's still vast numbers of people on the planet who are not.

This is the arising of a new consciousness that he speaks about, Adam.

[Speaker 6] (26:30 - 26:52)

Well, it certainly is. And it's, you know, it's it's very pleasurable to spend time with others and sharing this consciousness. You know, like you said, when you were under the tree and you felt the you felt that oneness and that majesty.

Well, imagine if you had someone sitting there next to you to share that experience with. I think it makes it even that much more sacred.

[Speaker 2] (26:53 - 26:55)

I did have my two dogs. Luke and Layla were there.

[Speaker 6] (26:56 - 26:57)

Oh, wonderful. Wonderful.

[Speaker 2] (26:59 - 26:59)

Thanks, Adam.

[Speaker 6] (27:00 - 27:01)

It's a sacred moment. Yes, thank you.

[Speaker 2] (27:01 - 27:15)

Thank you, Adam. One of the things that really struck us so was that so many people responded to this. Page 13.

You don't become good by trying to be good. You don't become good by trying to be good.

[Speaker 1] (27:16 - 27:17)

And carry on.

[Speaker 2] (27:18 - 27:18)

OK.

[Speaker 1] (27:19 - 27:20)

There's more to that sentence.

[Speaker 2] (27:20 - 27:37)

Yes, there is. I must go to page 13 to find it. You don't become good by trying to be good, but by finding the goodness that is already within you and allowing that goodness to emerge.

But it can only emerge if something fundamental changes in your state of consciousness.

So what that means, if nothing changes in your state of consciousness, the ego has many ideas. It says, I want to be a spiritual person. I want to be recognized as a spiritual person.

I want to be more spiritual than all these people. And I'm definitely more spiritual than you. So the ego has all kinds of ideas of what it wants to be, it might even say, yes, I want to be good, because it wants to have a better image of itself.

But on that level, the essential dysfunction of the ego is still operating. So this is why we have the phrase, the road to hell is paved with good intentions. Because no matter how good your intentions are, when you're still trapped in the ego, it will always take you into conflict eventually.

Yes. So you must. It's the realm of opposites.

[Speaker 2] (28:34 - 28:34)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (28:34 - 28:51)

So you have to go deeper beyond the realm of opposites where there's good and bad and reach a place within yourself that is unconditioned, that is what I sometimes call the formless, formless consciousness.

[Speaker 2] (28:52 - 28:52)

What I call spirit.

[Speaker 1] (28:53 - 30:20)

Expressed beautifully in the Old Testament, in the little saying, be still and know that I am God. And that's in the Old Testament. It contains the entire wisdom of religion in those few words.

Be still, meaning go to that place where the mind is no longer operating, where you are just conscious without thinking. And that is the level where the eternal resides. So the eternal, the formless, the spirit is the essence of every human being.

No matter how insane or conflict ridden they seem to appear on the surface, within every human being, that remains untouched. There's nothing that anybody could have done to you or nothing that you could have done to others to destroy that. It's always there.

It's always there. And that is the grace of being here. And no matter how much madness there has been in your life, that remains untouched.

So it's getting in touch with that deepest place within. And you can only do that by becoming still.

[Speaker 2] (30:20 - 30:57)

The way you begin to feel that is to look at nature. If you were to go out and just be with a tree, and I don't mean hug a tree, we're not talking about now you got to go hug a tree and eat granola. But if you were just to be with anything in nature, I like trees because they're so majestic.

They're so powerful and visual. And if you're with it for a time, you start to sense the presence of it, the stillness of it, and begin to recognize that stillness within yourself.

[Speaker 1] (30:58 - 31:01)

Yes. So what you sense in the tree is also in you.

[Speaker 2] (31:02 - 31:03)

And it's always in the tree.

[Speaker 1] (31:03 - 31:03)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (31:03 - 31:05)

When the wind is blowing and there's a storm.

[Speaker 1] (31:05 - 31:05)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (31:06 - 31:06)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (31:06 - 31:18)

And that is also a sacredness that is there in the tree. Our world doesn't know much. It's sacred.

It has become an abstract concept. Nobody seems to know what sacredness is. Until you can feel it.

[Speaker 2] (31:18 - 31:19)

Until you can feel it.

[Speaker 1] (31:19 - 31:36)

When you feel, then you don't need a definition. People ask, please define what sacred is. You don't need a definition of what sacred is, because sacred is the essence of who you are.

So it's sensing that. And you can sense it when you're still enough. You sense it in the tree.

[Speaker 2] (31:36 - 31:41)

Now, isn't it interesting that you first came to recognize this when you were about to kill yourself?

[Speaker 1] (31:41 - 32:02)

Yes. Yes. Sometimes you have to reach a limit.

Humans have to reach a limit. The human species as a whole is reaching that limit. But also on a personal level, sometimes people have to be pushed to the limit.

My ego was so obstinate and my pain body was so strong. I had to be pushed to the limit before it cracked open.

[Speaker 2] (32:03 - 32:09)

Well, before we go into any further, share that moment that you talk about in the beginning of The Power of Now, when you were about to kill yourself.

[Speaker 1] (32:09 - 33:01)

Yes. Feeling so much pain. Dreadful suffering at night.

I would often wake up in extreme feeling of dread and fear, consumed by dread and fear. The whole world seemed alien. And I saw the thought one night.

I woke up again. The thought came, I can't live with myself any longer. I just can't live with myself any longer.

It's so painful. And that thought repeated itself a few times. And then suddenly something happened inside me.

And I looked at the thought. That was, of course, awareness. I didn't know that at the time what it was.

I became aware of the thought. And I said, I cannot live with myself. That's strange.

So there must be I and there must be myself. Am I one or two? I seem to be two.

Because if I can't live with myself, there must be two of me.

[Speaker 2] (33:01 - 33:09)

Well, and everybody has felt that. Not to kill themselves. But everybody has felt or heard you say to yourself, I said to myself.

[Speaker 1] (33:10 - 33:10)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (33:10 - 33:11)

I said to myself.

[Speaker 1] (33:11 - 33:38)

Yes. And of course, the entire what we call the voice in the head, we could also call it self-talk, where you talk to yourself. And most people address themselves as you.

So the voice says, you shouldn't have done that. Or you should better. So there's a constantly there's a separation inside human beings, which is the essence of ego.

Right. That there's a here's an image of who I think I am. And then there's a me.

And they get mixed up together.

[Speaker 2] (33:39 - 33:46)

OK, I'm sorry I interrupted you on that thought, though. But you use getting ready to kill yourself said, I can't live with myself any longer.

[Speaker 1] (33:46 - 33:46)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (33:47 - 33:48)

Said that several times in your mind.

And then I became aware of the structure of the sentence. And I said, if that's the case, then who is the self that I cannot live with? And who am I?

Wow. And at that moment, a separation happened completely between the essential I, which is the essential consciousness that I am beyond past and future, the eternal stillness. But awake stillness and all my thought processes, which were ego, which was all my thought process, but that created the dreadful suffering.

The mind created entity. The unhappy me was continuously fed by my thinking. It consisted of thinking, a stream of thinking.

So did you just decide that night, I guess I'll wait to see if I will kill myself?

[Speaker 1] (34:36 - 34:52)

No, the I kind of it was a kind of spiritual suicide. So the ego died. Instead of me having to jump off a bridge, fortunately, the ego died.

The ego dissolved. The ego as the unobserved mind dissolved.

The ego.

[Speaker 1] (34:53 - 34:56)

The false self, the me, the unhappy story.

[Speaker 2] (34:56 - 34:57)

Oh, got it.

[Speaker 1] (34:57 - 35:25)

Me as the unhappy, my identity as me and my unhappy story. Died. Died, dissolved.

Because the I behind it suddenly woke up and said, who is that self that I can't live with? And when you fully look at that self, it actually dissolves because it cannot survive in the light of intense consciousness. And so the next morning I woke up and I didn't know.

I thought that was strange. What happened? Well, there was still I felt myself.

[Speaker 2] (35:25 - 35:25)

Were you drinking?

[Speaker 1] (35:26 - 35:28)

No drinking, no drugs.

[Speaker 2] (35:29 - 35:31)

No, I had a couple of sips or something.

[Speaker 1] (35:32 - 35:47)

Nothing, just it just happened. And the I felt like being drawn into a kind of vortex. And then I went to sleep.

And the last thing I felt, there was still some fear. A voice said, don't resist or resist nothing.

[Speaker 2] (35:48 - 35:49)

Resist nothing.

[Speaker 1] (35:49 - 35:54)

Don't resist. Resist nothing. And so I must have gone to sleep then.

[Speaker 2] (35:54 - 35:55)

You had your first good night's sleep in God.

[Speaker 1] (35:56 - 36:24)

Yes. And the next morning I woke up and looked around and looked. Everything looked so fresh.

All the old furniture, the pencil, everything looked fresh and alive. And I could hear birdsong outside. Wow.

As if I'd never heard it before. Wow. Because the mind had become still.

And there was simply the beautiful perception of everything. The sunlight coming through the curtains. Incredible.

I said, I'd never seen that before.

[Speaker 2] (36:24 - 37:01)

Part of what you're describing is what I came close to that. When I decided to go outside without naming things or labeling things. It's what I was describing earlier.

Walking through the park. Walking around my house, which is like a park. And everything was vibrating.

And it was the colors and everything. The sense perception was very different because I wasn't in my mind thinking about it. I was just there to experience it.

So that's how you get to that place.

[Speaker 1] (37:01 - 38:53)

That's right. So when you're then, you're no longer there when you walk through your garden in that or wherever. And you're not naming every flower.

You're not naming. And also, you're not carrying the burden of a heavy me, a personality, a person with its problems, with its past. You're not thinking about anything.

So you are basically, you've become a conscious presence perceiving the beauty around you. Yeah, it's fascinating. There are many little things you can do to access the power of the present moment.

For example, a very simple thing, ask yourself, am I still breathing? Now, what does that mean? To find out if you're still breathing, your attention needs to move from the thinking into here.

And you suddenly feel the air flowing into your body and out of your body. Yes, I'm breathing. At that moment, you've entered the state of presence.

Even if it's only five seconds, you've entered that. You've become present. In the moment.

In that moment. So another thing I suggest is when you do habitual everyday motions like washing your hands or walking across the room or walking down the stairs or the slightest thing, taking a cup out of the cupboard. Do it consciously.

Do it being present of how you feel. For example, you wash your hands, feel the water, smell the soap, sense perceptions, becoming acutely conscious of sense perceptions, which means looking, hearing, touching. It also brings you into the present moment.

[Speaker 2] (38:53 - 39:26)

How is that going to help me? Because I started doing that going up the stairs. I was going one foot on the stairs.

There's another foot on the stairs. There's another foot. OK, I'm at the top of the stairs now.

I was present walking up the stairs. What does that do for me, Eckhart? Were you present?

Yeah, I think I was. There's a foot on the stairs. I'm just there.

The movement of feeling the motion of my body and how many parts of my body have to move to get me up the stairs. You know, oh, I used my thigh muscle there.

[Speaker 1] (39:26 - 39:26)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (39:26 - 39:28)

I used the back of the leg, my ankles.

[Speaker 1] (39:28 - 39:35)

It was presence. I wasn't sure from the way you said it. I thought you were repeating mentally, here's one step and here's another step.

But you were not.

[Speaker 2] (39:35 - 39:40)

No, I was not. I was feeling every part of what it took to get me up the stairs.

[Speaker 1] (39:40 - 39:40)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (39:41 - 39:41)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (39:41 - 39:44)

So now the mind says, what's the point in that?

[Speaker 2] (39:44 - 39:48)

Yes, the mind then said, OK, now you were present getting up the stairs.

[Speaker 1] (39:48 - 39:51)

And the mind says, I've got more important things to think about.

[Speaker 2] (39:51 - 39:52)

Yes, it did.

[Speaker 1] (39:53 - 40:12)

The mind said, now what did that do you? Now to the mind, that kind of thing is completely meaningless. Because you're inviting a different state of consciousness into your life, which the mind cannot understand.

But this is how you bring in awareness. This is the end of the old conditioning.

[Speaker 2] (40:12 - 40:12)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (40:12 - 40:26)

And you bring in a consciousness that is totally fresh and new that comes out of the present moment. And the more you bring those moments of presence into your life, the more your old conditioning becomes eroded gradually.

[Speaker 2] (40:26 - 40:38)

I see. So learning to do it with washing your hands, I just got this. Simple things.

Just learning to do the simple things begins to retrain your mind.

[Speaker 1] (40:38 - 41:00)

Yes. And another thing is most simple things that you do, which actually fill up most person's everyday life. Because the whole day consists of simple things that you have to do.

Right. They're all relatively simple. Right.

And the way most people live is that everything you do is a means to an end. And the end is where you want to get to, the next moment. Right.

[Speaker 2] (41:00 - 41:02)

So you're never thinking about the moment.

[Speaker 1] (41:02 - 41:12)

No. Because you want to get to the next one. You're washing your hand in order to already do that.

While you're making a cup of coffee, we really want to be drinking it.

[Speaker 2] (41:12 - 41:24)

Yeah. Jon Kabat-Zinn says in his book, Coming to Our Senses, that most people, every morning, people take a shower or they bathe. But most people are in the shower, but they never actually get to experience a shower because they're thinking they're already in the office.

[Speaker 1] (41:24 - 41:24)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (41:24 - 41:25)

Already in the office.

[Speaker 1] (41:25 - 41:34)

And then everything you do is a means to an end. The end is always the next moment in the future, which never arrives. Because all you ever have in life is the present moment.

[Speaker 2] (41:34 - 41:43)

Present moment. So you're constantly frustrated. Yes.

Creating anxiety for yourself. And stress. Because you can't just be present now.

[Speaker 1] (41:44 - 42:05)

And the power can only flow into your life when you are present completely, totally, with what you're doing now. And this is why most people's lives do not have this power. Because they're always living for the next thing.

So they- Trying to get to. They devalue the present moment.

[Speaker 2] (42:05 - 42:08)

Got it. And so- That's why walking up the stairs, being with the stairs.

[Speaker 1] (42:09 - 42:09)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (42:09 - 42:12)

Teaches you how to be present with other things.

[Speaker 1] (42:12 - 42:27)

Yes. And then gradually, you can be present with- even when you are with other human beings, you can be totally present in whatever work you do. So that the work is not a means to an end.

But you're totally there with what you do. Your attention.

[Speaker 2] (42:27 - 42:31)

Casey in Asheville, North Carolina, has a question also for Eckhart. Casey?

[Speaker 7] (42:32 - 42:55)

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Mr. Tully. So my question is this.

When I put out into the universe, when I ask God for things, for hopes and dreams and material things, and a lot of times I get them, those material things, I think they may be coming from the ego. And I just wonder, Mr. Tully, is that wrong?

Okay. Well, it's not wrong. You can always easily recognize that something is coming from ego because when you get it, it doesn't satisfy you.

That's always a sign that it's coming from ego. It may satisfy you for a little while, and then something- Oh, I need more. I need something else.

So that's a good learning process. You can manifest things, and if you see, oh, that's not satisfying, that must have been the ego. So there's nothing wrong with manifesting things.

The only illusion would be to expect things to provide some ultimate satisfaction in your life. Things can't do that. The world of form can't ultimately satisfy you.

You can enjoy the world of form, but the true satisfaction doesn't come from there. The world can't do that. The world can't make you happy.

Things cannot give you happiness because happiness comes from a deeper place within you that you can only access in the present moment. So it's fine to- We live in the world of things. Why not manifest things?

It is part of the game of in this life, the game of form. But if you expect some kind of satisfaction, then you will always be frustrated.

WINFREY OVER TO DR. GARRETT-JONES Which is going to be- I think we get into that a lot in Chapter 3. DR. GARRETT-JONES Yes. In Chapter 2 and Chapter 3.

DR. GARRETT-JONES I love Chapter 2. Not allowing yourself- Oh, love Chapter 2. DR. GARRETT-JONES Oh, so good. Not allowing yourself to be defined by the things. To be in the world and not of it, is how I describe it. To not allow- to have things.

I have lots of beautiful things, and I love beautiful things. And later on, in one of the chapters, he talks about when you say that you're not defined by things, what happens to you if you were to lose any of those things? The depth of your grieving or sorrow or so-called suffering determines how attached you were to those things.

[Speaker 1] (45:02 - 45:02)

DR. GARRETT-JONES Yes.

[Speaker 2] (45:02 - 45:05)

And for many people- DR. GARRETT-JONES It doesn't matter to me until somebody steals your car.

[Speaker 1] (45:05 - 46:34)

DR. GARRETT-JONES That's right. And for many people, that's a very important lesson. When suddenly they do lose something, it can be a wonderful spiritual lesson, and then you- perhaps you suffer, and then your attachment gets broken, and suddenly you go beyond the attachment.

So there have been people who've lost everything and suddenly become free of the ego because the ego had nothing left to identify with. So this can happen. And another important thing to mention with regard to manifestation is the basis for your life is the present moment.

You need to- first of all, the very basis for everything is to come to an acceptance of this moment as it is. Gratitude is part of that. Of course, we'll be talking about that in more detail.

So that there's no neediness when you manifest. The neediness that- there's dissatisfaction, for example, in your life. There's dissatisfaction.

That is not a good place, not a good starting point for changing your life. The ego may tell you that, but it isn't. You need to find a place of acceptance, which is- Wow, that's powerful.

DR. GARRETT-JONES No matter where you are, come to terms and become friendly with the present moment. Because if you do not become friendly with the present moment, you're not friendly with life. If you're not- because life is only now.

If you're not friendly with life, life cannot support you.

[Speaker 2] (46:35 - 46:40)

OPRAH WINFREY But did you just say that being dissatisfied is not a good time or place to change?

[Speaker 1] (46:40 - 47:10)

DR. GARRETT-JONES It's first- you can see the totality of the situation. Let's say, I use the example in The Power of Now, you're stuck in the mud. DR. GARRETT-JONES You're walking somewhere, and suddenly you get deep into the mud up to your knees. OPRAH WINFREY Right. DR. GARRETT-JONES Now, you wouldn't say, okay, I'm satisfied with this situation. You can't be satisfied with this situation, and you know that you need to get out.

But you say, okay, here I am stuck in the mud, and I need to get out. There is no negative reaction. OPRAH WINFREY Yeah, there's no- DR. GARRETT-JONES Cursing.

[Speaker 8] (47:10 - 47:11)

OPRAH WINFREY Damn this mud!

[Speaker 1] (47:11 - 47:15)

DR. GARRETT-JONES Yes. OPRAH WINFREY Yeah. DR. GARRETT-JONES Or struggle against. OPRAH WINFREY Yeah. DR. GARRETT-JONES Because if you struggle against, you get in deeper.

[Speaker 2] (47:15 - 47:17)

OPRAH WINFREY You're just going to get more mud on you.

[Speaker 1] (47:23 - 47:32)

DR. GARRETT-JONES Acceptance of what is first. DR. GARRETT-JONES Then action comes out of the acceptance. It no longer comes out of resistance.

OPRAH WINFREY Got it.

[Speaker 1] (47:33 - 47:44)

DR. GARRETT-JONES Which is a totally different energy flows into what you do when it comes out of an acceptance of this is what is, and then action happens. That is actually empowered by life itself.

OPRAH WINFREY I think that explained it, Casey. DR. GARRETT-JONES Thank you. OPRAH WINFREY I think so, too.

Thank you so much. That's amazing. DR. GARRETT-JONES Thank you so much. I just wanted to go back to spirituality and religion for a few moments and the few moments we have remaining, because I know that's still such a major issue with so many of you. And you say on page 17 that the more you make your thoughts or beliefs into your identity, the more cut off you are from the spiritual dimension within yourself. And you also say on page 18, how spiritual you are has nothing to do with what you believe.

[Speaker 1] (48:16 - 48:16)

DR. GARRETT-JONES Yes.

[Speaker 2] (48:16 - 48:19)

OPRAH WINFREY But everything to do with your state of consciousness.

[Speaker 1] (48:19 - 48:58)

DR. GARRETT-JONES Yes. How spiritual you are means how present are you at this moment. Are you in your thoughts or are you there as the awareness behind your thoughts?

OPRAH WINFREY Which is your spirit. DR. GARRETT-JONES Yes. OPRAH WINFREY Yeah.

DR. GARRETT-JONES Stillness. So often in newspapers and the media, they always ask, well, what do you believe in? That is not an important question, what I believe in.

It's the important question is, are you present at this moment? Not what your belief structures are.

[Speaker 2] (48:58 - 49:04)

OPRAH WINFREY I think people want to know what you believe so that they can label it and decide whether they're going to like you, accept you or not.

[Speaker 1] (49:04 - 49:04)

DR. GARRETT-JONES Yes.

OPRAH WINFREY Yes.

[Speaker 1] (49:04 - 49:09)

DR. GARRETT-JONES And they want to know, do you believe the same thing that I believe? Because if you don't, you're my enemy.

[Speaker 2] (49:10 - 49:13)

OPRAH WINFREY Yeah. And you're laughing at that. Okay.

[Speaker 1] (49:13 - 49:15)

DR. GARRETT-JONES Well, it's mad. It's better to laugh at madness.

[Speaker 2] (49:16 - 49:24)

OPRAH WINFREY Yes, yes. I just wanted to mention this person, Maria from Doha, Qatar. I just wanted to say Doha, Qatar.

[Speaker 1] (49:24 - 49:26)

DR. GARRETT-JONES In? OPRAH WINFREY Yes. DR. GARRETT-JONES In what country?

[Speaker 2] (49:27 - 49:27)

OPRAH WINFREY Qatar.

[Speaker 1] (49:27 - 49:28)

DR. GARRETT-JONES Qatar. Okay.

[Speaker 2] (49:29 - 49:44)

OPRAH WINFREY Qatar. Okay. She says, do you think that people are ready and willing to set aside time to be quiet each day?

Is this possible in a global sense? Would anyone who thinks their life is fine be willing to waste time just sitting in order to raise their consciousness level?

[Speaker 1] (49:44 - 50:04)

DR. GARRETT-JONES Well, better, I would change the question a little bit to make it more vital and more relevant, is ask, am I ready? The only question you really need to answer is, am I ready to do this? DR. GARRETT-JONES You don't need to know whether other people are ready to do it. Only you can have the answer, am I ready to be still?

[Speaker 2] (50:04 - 50:05)

OPRAH WINFREY Very good, Ms. Qatar.

Am I ready? DR. GARRETT-JONES That's the vital question. And only you can answer that.

I can't answer that. Are you ready? Or are you so fascinated by the things of this world and your mind that perhaps you need to pursue those things for a few more years until you suffer a bit more, and then you're ready?

[Speaker 2] (50:25 - 50:30)

OPRAH WINFREY What about the people who are struggling, particularly in this first chapter with the book?

[Speaker 1] (50:31 - 51:50)

DR. GARRETT-JONES The first chapter is a little bit more conceptual than the other chapters and less practical. I wanted to give a general context for where the book fits into the general context of the spirituality on the planet, the transformation of consciousness on the planet. So just read through.

There are already very important pointers in the first chapter. If you can see them, we'll run through the whole book, presence and so on. Just carry on, but not only the first chapter.

Anywhere in the book, don't expect to immediately understand everything that's not necessary. And besides, understanding the book is not the essential thing. It's secondary.

The first thing is to experience the truth of it, rather than conceptual understanding the essence of what's in the book, but in any case cannot be understood conceptually. For example, presence. People say, can you explain to me what presence is?

I've already given a few pointers. It's pointless to go beyond that and give further definitions. You can only know what presence is by being present.

You must have at least a glimpse of presence, and this is why it's not understanding that's the essence. So when you don't understand, just read on. It's a process.

Reading this book is a process.

[Speaker 2] (51:50 - 51:59)

Yes. And this book, as you say, again, as I said in the beginning, this isn't about creating more information for you to believe in. No, no.

And you don't want to be anybody's guru.

[Speaker 1] (52:00 - 52:32)

No, no. So it's not through your mind, really, that you can get it. And anybody who finds this book meaningful, and this is the important thing, is already awakening.

If you're not awakening already, this book will be completely meaningless, or any other truly alive spiritual book will be meaningless. If you want to understand it, or you say, there's not much there, I don't know, it doesn't make sense to me. If it does make sense, and especially if you feel something from within responding, and you say, wow, yeah.

There are a lot of people who are expressing, they're getting it, they're awakening, they're feeling more alive and excited, and then you want to go share it with somebody else, who perhaps hasn't read the book, doesn't feel the same as you, and then they feel frustrated.

[Speaker 1] (52:47 - 52:47)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (52:47 - 52:52)

And I guess you would say the same thing as you say to the woman in Qatar, just worry about yourself.

[Speaker 1] (52:53 - 52:54)

Yes. And so if other...

[Speaker 2] (52:54 - 52:55)

Concern yourself with yourself.

[Speaker 1] (52:56 - 53:17)

That's right. And if friends or relatives say, it doesn't make sense to me, that's fine. Perhaps in a few years' time, they'll be ready.

We don't know. So it's to accept that it's not yet for everybody. Accept it.

First. Accept. Accept.

Don't demand that, or don't make it into an ideology, and then try to convince people that they must be present.

[Speaker 2] (53:17 - 53:39)

Right. I got it. Before we say goodbye, I want to thank you for being with me, all of you out there, being able to talk with you all and share this kind of information that allows all of us to get closer to who we really are, so that we can do honor our life's purpose and calling here while we're on earth.

Thank you, Eckhart.

Thank you.

[Speaker 5] (53:41 - 54:21)

Hey, Supersolars. Looking for a great new read or listen? Well, that's why we're so excited about Oprah's new book, The Path Made Clear, Discovering Your Life's Direction and Purpose.

Hello to all you podcast listeners. We're bringing you something really special. One of the great spiritual thinkers of our time, Eckhart Tolle and I, are giving you a chapter-by-chapter class on what I believe is his groundbreaking masterpiece, Eckhart's best-selling book, A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose.

This book resonated with me in such a profound way. I truly think that it's the most important book I've ever read. It's changed the way I live my life, so much so that I always have a copy on my nightstand because I constantly give myself a refresher course.

And now more than ever, we need to create what Eckhart calls A New Earth, inside our personal lives, in our communities, and the world. Give it a listen and over 10 episodes, you too will be opened up and learn how to quiet your mind, get your ego in check, live a fully more present life. We're talking deep, big picture, even delving into consciousness and the reason why we're all really here.

My greatest hope is that Eckhart's quiet wisdom and patient teachings will resonate with you as they have with me. Each podcast episode will start with my conversation with Eckhart about a chapter and then Eckhart answers questions from people who are reading along in the book. So I encourage you to get your own copy of A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose and join us for a thrilling, enlightening, and spiritual experience.

Hello everybody and welcome to week six of our New Earth series. I am thrilled about this material. This is a book that's always on my nightstand.

So that's what's so exciting about this material. Eckhart always meets you where you are. So last time he introduced us to the concept of the pain body.

It's an accumulation of all the pain and negativity from our past, the stuff that's really hard to let go of. Simply put, your emotional baggage. According to Eckhart though, the pain body is the source of all the friction in our lives.

We all carry our own to one degree or another. For some people it's stronger than others and we've all met people with some heavy, heavy, heavy pain bodies. But the good news is you can free yourself from the pain body after all.

Chapter six is called Breaking Free. So today we explore what triggers that pain body and how we can begin to free ourselves from its grip. We're also going to look at how the pain body affects children.

How you pass it on. So parents, you don't want to miss this. Let's get to it.

Open up your books. Here's a New Earth chapter six. Welcome again, Eckhart Tolle.

Thank you. Thank you. One of the things that we both look forward to every week is the energy that we feel from all of you out there.

I consider this to be a sacred moment when we can all come together and in community this way and share in this work. So wherever you are right now, I thank you. Eckhart Tolle thanks you for awakening with us.

One of my other favorite books is a book that Eckhart Tolle had written, I don't know how many years ago.

A few years ago.

[Speaker 2] (3:27 - 4:19)

And it's a little book with wonderful passages in it. And it's called Stillness Speaks. It really speaks to just on a different level what we've been talking about in New Earth.

It says stillness is your essential nature. What is stillness? The inner space or awareness in which the words on this page are being perceived and become thoughts.

Without that awareness, there would be no perception, no thoughts, no world. You are that awareness disguised as a person. I just love that.

That you are the awareness. That's what we've been saying week after week here, is that you're not your thoughts, you are the awareness of your thoughts disguised as a person.

[Speaker 1] (4:19 - 4:38)

Yes. And you're not your sense perceptions, you are the awareness that makes all sense perception possible. You are not your emotions, you are the awareness that makes all these emotions possible.

So that's the dimension where you are timeless. Everything else is time.

[Speaker 2] (4:39 - 6:55)

So when you lose touch with your inner stillness, you lose touch with yourself. When you lose touch with yourself, you lose yourself in the world. Your innermost sense of self, of who you are, is inseparable from stillness.

This is the I am that is deeper than name and form. You are the awareness disguised as a person. Yes.

All right. That is beautiful. So everybody, we're discussing chapter six, Breaking Free.

Let's start with an overview of what this chapter is really about. In chapter five, as you all know, we met the pain body. And that's, we all know what that is.

That part of us that's addicted to negativity and unhappiness. And Eckhart says that the beginning of freedom from the pain body lies, first of all, in the realization that we all have a pain body. That was chapter five.

We did that last week. Now in chapter six, we're going to explore what triggers the pain body in our everyday lives, and whether it's a situation or certain things other people do or say. Eckhart shows us how that we can actually use those triggers to enter a more heightened state of awareness.

And also, this chapter is about breaking free of the pain body so you don't have to continually carry the past and everything that happened in the past and what people did to you, your story. You can release that. Tonight is about breaking free.

At the beginning of the chapter on page 162, you say that when you disidentify with the pain body, the energy that was trapped in the pain body, you say, then changes itself, its vibrational frequency, and is transmuted into presence. In this way, the pain body becomes fuel for consciousness. This is why many of the wisest, most enlightened men and women on our planet once had a heavy pain body, you say.

So, what I wanted to ask is that so many people today medicate themselves. Any uncomfortable feelings that you have, you go to a psychiatrist or counselor, remember, the first thing they do is prescribe medication for you. Does medication get in the way of using the pain body as fuel for enlightenment?

[Speaker 1] (6:56 - 8:10)

To a large extent, it does. There may be certain extreme cases when medication is necessary. And for people who already are on medication, it's certainly not advisable to go off medication without the advice of a doctor.

So, if you feel that it's time for you to get off, talk to a doctor who is relatively conscious and can help you gradually to get off the medication. So, it's really a question of not giving in to this culturally conditioned behavior that says whenever you feel some discomfort inside yourself, emotional disturbance, immediately to seek some external help in the form of a substance that you ask your doctor to give you. Rather, learn to be with inner discomfort that arises, learn to be with emotional pain that arises.

Rather than wanting to eliminate it, learn to accept it. Acceptance is one of the main focal points of this teaching. Learn to accept whatever emotion arises in you rather than run away from it or wanting to eliminate it.

[Speaker 2] (8:10 - 8:28)

But why, this is the thing, Eckhart, why would I want to accept it? That's why people are medicating themselves. That's why people eat, they gamble, they overwork themselves, they live in denial, they become unconscious because they don't want to deal with the pain.

That's what we're all trying to get away from. It's the pain.

[Speaker 1] (8:28 - 9:42)

Yes. Now, if you medicate it, it doesn't actually go away. It dulls the pain so that you're not conscious of it anymore.

It's still there in the background. It's the same thing for many illnesses. For example, I had a heavy cold a couple of weeks ago.

Yes. I didn't take anything. Some people take things so that the symptoms are suppressed of the cold.

It doesn't suppress the cold. The cold is still there. So why accept it?

It's because it is here at this moment. So it's part of bringing this inner yes to whatever arises in the present moment. It is part of becoming friendly with the present moment, even if on the surface the present moment doesn't look that great.

So we are bringing, and this is where the awareness begins to come into the emotion. If we bring acceptance to whatever we feel at this moment, rather than not wanting to feel it, the equivalent of that would be an external situation that arises, and then I resist it because I don't want this situation to be as it is, but it already is.

[Speaker 2] (9:42 - 9:50)

And then you just cause stress, and that's what you say in this book and also in The Power of Now. Wanting something to be different than it is is what causes stress.

[Speaker 1] (9:50 - 10:06)

And creates further negative emotion. If there's some emotion in you that is not pleasant, and then you don't want to be feeling what you feel, creates on top of the emotion that's already there another negative emotion that wants to deny what's there.

[Speaker 2] (10:06 - 10:21)

So the best thing to do is to feel it, accept it, allow the feeling to do whatever it's going to do to you, make you feel sad or angry or upset or whatever, and then choose to do something about that.

[Speaker 1] (10:21 - 10:32)

Yes. Or not. Yes.

Realize first that you are the awareness for that emotion. You are the space for it. You are the awareness disguised as a person.

You are not the emotion.

[Speaker 2] (10:32 - 10:33)

You are the awareness. Not the emotion. Okay.

[Speaker 1] (10:34 - 11:35)

So then already a shift has happened. Because if you completely identify with the emotion, then the emotion will very quickly rise into your mind, and it will control your thinking. So...

And you will think it's you. Yes. Yeah.

You will think it's you. So you will be identified with the emotion. Let's say it's anger that arises.

Yes. A slight trigger, triggers enormous anger, and immediately you start to think angry thoughts. Correct.

Or if it's sadness or depression, you immediately start to think thoughts that reflect the emotion. And the pain body loves that because the pain body will feed on the energy of your thinking. That's right.

And once you are trapped in the vicious circle between emotion and emotional thinking, when all the self-talk in your head, that everybody experiences most of the time, the self-talk in the head then becomes the voice of the pain body that is talking in your head. And then all your interpretations of other people, of events, will be totally distorted and very negative.

[Speaker 2] (11:36 - 12:05)

Because you say at the bottom of page 162, when you realize that pain bodies unconsciously seek more pain, that is to say, they want something bad to happen, you will understand that many traffic accidents are caused by drivers whose pain bodies are active at the time. When two drivers with active pain bodies arrive at an intersection at the same time, the likelihood of an accident is many times greater than under normal circumstances. So is it always the pain body that attracts accidents and other bad things?

[Speaker 1] (12:05 - 12:17)

No. No. No.

That's just one factor that is often there. But there are many other factors that could attract an accident. Many people are not fully present when they drive.

[Speaker 2] (12:17 - 12:20)

Well, Dave is from Madison, Wisconsin. Dave, thank you for joining us.

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Eckhart.

[Speaker 2] (12:23 - 12:24)

Hi. Your question is?

[Speaker 4] (12:24 - 12:50)

First off, I just want to say thank you, thank you, thank you to both of you. You are welcome. Welcome.

My question is, when my wife and I have a disagreement, she comes back hours or days later wanting to rehash that disagreement. And she always feels there has to be a wrong or a right to it. How can I get her to live in the present and get the ego out of the way?

[Speaker 1] (12:51 - 13:26)

Now, you need to see what is your role when you have disagreements at home. I assume that your wife has a pain body that becomes active at that time. And when you have disagreements, is your pain body also a contributing factor at home?

Or do you feel that it is just your wife's pain body? In other words, what is your part in the disagreement and in the energy field there?

[Speaker 2] (13:26 - 13:29)

Yeah, how are you playing into the drama of it, Dave?

[Speaker 4] (13:30 - 14:04)

I don't play into the drama of it. And that seems to initially increase it more on her behalf. And then, but lately, after going through the book, I find that I look for a single thing.

Her eyes are beautiful. And I just think of those and I take to a different place inside myself. And it seems that it kind of it just diminishes on her behalf then.

Mm-hmm.

[Speaker 1] (14:04 - 14:22)

Now, when you disagree or you have an argument, that means to some extent you must be identified with a mental position. And because if you don't have a mental position that you identify with, there is no argument. Correct.

[Speaker 2] (14:23 - 14:25)

That's why I said, hmm, today.

[Speaker 1] (14:25 - 15:03)

Yes, this is why Oprah was a little bit skeptical when you were talking. So it's perhaps before we talk about your wife, maybe there's something that you can do so that you let go of identification with mental positions when you discuss things. You can still discuss the practicality of certain things that you need to talk about, but don't become identified with a mental position of rightness that makes you right.

And because that is what the ego thrives on and that is what feeds the pain body.

[Speaker 2] (15:03 - 15:06)

Whenever you identify with anything, it's the ego.

[Speaker 1] (15:06 - 15:38)

Yes, whatever you identify with becomes ego. So perhaps bring more vigilance into, especially when you see a situation is developing that is going to become an argument. Or you can see that the pain body in your wife is becoming active again.

And then it's a time of being particularly alert and vigilant inside yourself so that you do not get drawn into opposing her in any way.

[Speaker 2] (15:39 - 16:10)

And even, Dave, the reason why I said, hmm, and was skeptical because of what Eckhart just said, if I may reiterate, if there's no drama involved at all with you, if you just become peace, then the argument has to dissolve. Like the woman, the story that he tells in the book of the woman who came and was so upset and carrying all the papers and the bills and the so forth. And as he sat there just listening, taking it in, she finally said, this doesn't really matter, does it?

And left and went home. You remember that?

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (16:11 - 16:50)

And I understand what you're talking about because often when you start reading this material and you start to awaken yourself, we become a little self-righteous about it. So perhaps maybe there's a little bit of that still remaining with you where you want to say, I am so, because I know this happened with Stedman and myself. We're in a discussion and I'm feeling, well, I am very awakened.

I'm a very evolved person. So what you're saying is not going to upset me. But that attitude, the energy of that, my ego and my self-righteousness is what contributed to the drama.

You see what I'm saying? I do. Yeah.

[Speaker 4] (16:51 - 16:51)

I do.

[Speaker 2] (16:51 - 16:59)

Your need to be right or your need to feel like, you know, I'm a little bit more superior because I'm not engaging in this and you are.

[Speaker 1] (16:59 - 17:06)

Yes. Yes. So that's then alertness and vigilance is very important on your part.

[Speaker 2] (17:06 - 17:34)

I think what you just said here is so important for every one of us who's trying to continue to wake into this process, that whenever there's an argument or disagreement, the thing is, is to not, and it's not to ever make it about the other person, even though it seems to be. The question is not, what can I do for my wife, for my partner, for my boss, for my co-worker? But it is what can I do in the situation?

[Speaker 1] (17:35 - 17:36)

Yes. Right. That's all.

[Speaker 2] (17:36 - 17:38)

What is my contribution to it?

[Speaker 1] (17:38 - 17:57)

That's right. That's primary. And then your wife, I don't know whether she has any interest in spiritual teaching or the pain body.

Have you ever mentioned to her the pain body? Not while there's a pain body attack happening, but when the pain body is...

[Speaker 2] (17:57 - 17:59)

Because you said nobody hears you when you say it.

[Speaker 1] (17:59 - 18:30)

No, because when you cannot talk to the pain body about the pain body, that was actually dangerous because the pain body will throw something at you. So does your wife... What?

I love it when you get tickled. Go ahead. I know pain bodies.

So is your wife sometimes relatively more open to this than at other times, or is she always not open to this in your view?

[Speaker 4] (18:31 - 18:51)

She's not open to it to this point. But when I was running off the sheets for this week's class, she picked them up out of the printer and she read them over and she said, hmm, you're talking about me. So maybe that opens the book.

Yes, yes, yes.

[Speaker 2] (18:51 - 18:54)

Opens the door. Dave, thanks so much for your question. Thanks so much.

[Speaker 4] (18:54 - 18:56)

Thank you. Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (18:56 - 19:08)

Well, many acts of violence, you say on page 163, are committed by normal people who temporarily turn into maniacs. Does this mean that you think people are not responsible for what they do when possessed by the pain body?

[Speaker 1] (19:08 - 20:56)

No, that's what I say. They are not responsible. As we mentioned Jesus on the cross when he said, they know not what they do, meaning they are so unconscious.

They are in the grip of an energy field at which they cannot control. They don't even know that they are in the grip of this energy field because it has taken complete possession of them. So in that sense, I say they are not responsible, which does not mean that they do not suffer the consequences of their actions.

So it almost looks like a little bit of a paradox. Yes, no, they are not responsible. Nevertheless, karmically, they will suffer the consequences of their unconsciousness because human beings are, our purpose is to evolve into conscious beings.

So if we are not evolving into conscious beings, then we suffer. Right. The more close we are to this evolutionary impulse of evolving into conscious being, of the flowering of consciousness, the more close we are to this, the more we suffer.

And so these people who inflict violence on others, who make others suffer, also make themselves suffer. And they suffer the consequences karmically and sometimes the karmic consequences come in the form of the legal system. So they are put away and so that represents for them at that time karma.

And then there's always the possibility when they are in deep suffering because of something that they did in a state of complete unconsciousness, when they then are in deep suffering, perhaps in prison, whatever they may be, there's always the possibility then of awakening through the suffering that they inflicted on themselves, on others also.

Because you say on page 164, when you can't stand the endless cycle of suffering anymore, you begin to awaken. So the pain body too has its necessary place in the larger picture. But there are a lot of people who never awaken.

They just, you know, the pain body just, they die with it.

[Speaker 1] (21:15 - 21:38)

Yes, that is true. Then there's always a chance that the unawakened consciousness awakens in some other form, in some other situation. So, but the entire universe is going in the direction of awakening.

So it is, the more we are open to this...

[Speaker 2] (21:38 - 21:39)

Because we have to, or we're going to die.

[Speaker 1] (21:40 - 22:20)

Yes, as the human species now, the impulse, the awakening impulse has been there for a million years, longer. But for us now, we have arrived at this critical point where humanity, if humanity does not embrace this new state of consciousness, the awakened state, then humanity is not going to make it. On a cosmic scale, even that doesn't matter.

And whatever gain there has been achieved in the awakening of conscience on this planet is not going to be lost. There's only one consciousness throughout the entire universe. And that one consciousness is awakening in millions and billions of life.

[Speaker 2] (22:20 - 22:23)

And so if we don't survive as a human species...

[Speaker 1] (22:23 - 22:31)

That's not the greatest tragedy either. In relatively speaking, it is tragic. But in absolute terms, that's fine too.

[Speaker 2] (22:32 - 22:34)

Yeah, and it's really, it's our decision.

[Speaker 1] (22:34 - 22:50)

Yes, yes. The fact that we are here at this very moment engaged in this work is a very good sign. It's a sign.

Because here, at least we know that right now, here, the awakening is happening.

[Speaker 2] (22:51 - 22:57)

Yeah, for the hundreds of thousands of people who are joining us around the world. Yes. Danielle, who's joining us now from Ireland.

Hi, Danielle.

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Akash.

[Speaker 2] (22:59 - 22:59)

Hi.

[Speaker 5] (23:00 - 23:24)

My question's about ego, and I'm just going to read it out. And I've been practicing trying to stay in the present moment for over three years now, but I've come to some sort of block because my ego keeps on telling me, if you get rid of your ego, you will lose the world as you know it. You will lose your relationships with the friends you've built up for years, and you want to give up your career you've worked so hard for, and you'll be isolated from the rest of society because they are all living in ego.

How can I overcome this?

Thank you. Excellent question. Now, as you may have noticed, these are thoughts that arise in your mind.

These thoughts that arise in your mind are telling you something. Now, what these thoughts are saying may be very far from the truth. What the thought that if you awaken, if you become really present, you're going to lose your friends, life is not going to be fun anymore.

You have to see, is that the truth, or are these just thoughts that my egoic mind is producing in order to stop me from being present? Do I believe in those thoughts, or do I believe in first-hand evidence that I have? Because if you've been practicing being present, then you realize it's actually quite joyful to be fully open to the present moment.

It doesn't take away from the fun of being alive. It actually makes you more intensely alive when you are fully present in the now, rather than always looking to some next moment that's going to be better than this one. This is how most of the world lives.

So, I'm sure you've already had glimpses, or more than glimpses, of how the quality of your life actually becomes enhanced through being fully present to life now, because life is now. So, and your mind is, please, a question?

[Speaker 5] (25:07 - 25:22)

Oh no, I definitely have, but I think it's just the ego keeps on sweeping in, or else you'll be in a situation where your friends expect you to act the same way that you've always acted, like in ego. Like your friendship, a lot of friendships are kind of bound through ego.

[Speaker 1] (25:22 - 25:22)

Yes.

[Speaker 5] (25:22 - 25:33)

You know, it's your personality, and you'll try and be in the present moment, and then they'll be like, come on, come on, you know, let's go and do something, which is obviously trying to escape from the present moment.

[Speaker 2] (25:33 - 26:07)

But isn't it true, Danielle, when you come to the state where you feel more alive, and awakened, and willing to be more present with yourself, that that means you might have to let go of some of the things that used to bring you a false sense of happiness. That maybe the same people you used to hang around with and do things with, who are not ready to follow your path, not willing to be a part of some of the things that you now recognize that matter, maybe it means letting some of those friends go. That's the whole point.

Maybe just a comment on this. Usually what happens when people become more present, some of their friends are actually drawn into that also, because whatever state you're in will affect the people around you. So usually it happens that some of your friends will actually join you and also grow in presence and awaken, and others may drop away who are not ready yet.

That is usually the case. And your career actually can only improve because the quality of anything that you do in full presence is so much greater, and there's so much power available to you that is not there when you're always looking to some...

If you're on track, I used to run track, and if you just take the moment to look back and see where the other guy is, that energy is so draining and causes you to lose your own footing and lose your own concentration and focus. So that's what you're saying.

[Speaker 1] (27:10 - 27:18)

Yes, and that's also put this into this sense that you're competing against others as part of the ego energy. That's right. And that also takes power away.

That's right. Instead of just run the race, run your own race.

[Speaker 1] (27:21 - 27:22)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (27:22 - 27:28)

Now, what's the best way for us to sense the pain body? It's very... Thank you so much, Danielle, joining us from Dublin.

Thanks.

[Speaker 5] (27:28 - 27:29)

Bye.

[Speaker 2] (27:29 - 28:00)

Thank you. Bye. Thank you.

It's very easy for all of us to spot the pain body in other people, and I've actually heard the word come up many times this week. Ooh, that was his pain body. That was his pain body.

So thanks for introducing it to our culture. So it's easy to see it in other people. What's the best way, number one, to spot it in yourself, and how do you stop ourselves from acting out when we're in its grip?

Are there simple, you know, exercises or something we can do to break the grip when you feel yourself going there?

[Speaker 1] (28:00 - 28:24)

Yes. So the important thing is to catch it as it first arises, in the first, because before it takes over your mind, when it's there as an emotion, and usually it's the pain body when the emotional reaction is out of proportion to the triggering event. So a relatively minor thing triggers an enormous amount of unhappiness in whatever form.

That's right. A small thing happens and you flare up.

[Speaker 1] (28:26 - 30:47)

Yes. Yeah. Yes.

And so then, after a while, you realize the kind of situation that triggers your pain body, and then you can be actually more vigilant when such a situation happens. And you can see a very important thing is to be able to have some attention inside your body. If you're able to bring consciousness into the body, you can more easily feel an arising emotion inside you, whether it's a very heavy emotion of deep sadness, or whether it's a fiery emotion of anger, or whatever it is, or the emotion of intense fear, that contraction.

Then you can... There are so many people these days who are completely out of touch with their emotions because they live only in the head. Yeah.

So being able to feel an emotion as it arises, and then recognizing it as the beginning of the pain body, my pain body. And as long as you know this is the pain body, you are not identified with it, because the knowing is the awareness. So if you can catch it early on, and then it may still grow, suddenly the fear may become very intense, or the anger, or whatever form the pain body takes, but you will be there as the awareness in the background while it happens.

And one thing that then doesn't happen is that the pain body cannot control your thinking, because you're shining the light of consciousness on it. It cannot then creep into your mind and suddenly make your mind think what it wants to think. So remain there as the awareness for it, and say, oh, there's the pain body.

Then it cannot renew itself, and it also cannot control your behavior, your actions. All it is that you have contained it, not through holding it down, but you have contained it there through your presence. Okay.

And then it can't renew itself in that situation. So suddenly it comes up, but it cannot renew itself, and then it will subside again. But the pain body being very clever, it will then wait for a more suitable opportunity when you are less conscious than at that moment, and then it will come up again.

It will try again. And for example...

[Speaker 2] (30:47 - 30:48)

It's like you're always being tested.

[Speaker 1] (30:49 - 31:02)

Yes. The pain body is like a little wild animal or something. It's always there in the background saying, okay, am I going to come out now, or is the situation not right?

He's too conscious.

[Speaker 2] (31:02 - 31:05)

Is the pain body also your ego, Eckhart?

[Speaker 1] (31:05 - 31:22)

The pain body is the emotional aspect of ego. So when you identify with the pain body, it becomes part of the ego, because whatever you identify with becomes part of the ego. When you don't identify with it, it's no longer part of the ego.

[Speaker 2] (31:23 - 31:25)

All right, because what you identify with is the ego.

[Speaker 1] (31:25 - 31:25)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (31:25 - 31:46)

I like this question from Lorraine from Vancouver, British Columbia, who writes, I attract negativity. It seems that my whole world is one big fight. I just want people to stop instigating fights with me.

I don't deliberately go out and begin conflict, but it comes to me. I hate it. I just want peace.

What's the problem? Isn't that interesting?

[Speaker 1] (31:46 - 32:20)

Yes. Yes. Now, this is whatever you experience repeatedly and frequently externally is a reflection of your inner state.

So you attract certain things into your life that reflect your state of consciousness. So for Lorraine, it's very important to become much more aware of whatever state she is in at any given moment. Become more aware of what emotion she is feeling at any given moment.

[Speaker 2] (32:20 - 32:23)

Because Lorraine could not be attracting fights and conflict.

[Speaker 1] (32:23 - 32:23)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (32:23 - 32:25)

Unless she was emanating that energy.

[Speaker 1] (32:26 - 32:26)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (32:26 - 32:45)

And you say on 162, every human being emanates an energy field that corresponds to his or her inner state. Most people can sense it, although they may feel someone else's energy emanation only subliminally. That is to say, they don't know that they sense it, yet it determines to a large extent how they feel about and react to that person.

[Speaker 1] (32:45 - 33:19)

Yes. Yeah. So there are two aspects to your inner state.

There's the emotional aspect to your inner state. What is the energy of the emotion that you feel? And there's a mental aspect.

What kinds of thoughts is your mind producing at this moment? Is your mind producing negative thoughts? What kind of thoughts?

So you need to be there as the awareness. Become aware of what is it that I feel right now? What is my state at this moment?

That's a good question to ask yourself. What's my inner state at this moment?

[Speaker 2] (33:19 - 33:21)

At the moment that somebody instigates to fight with her?

[Speaker 1] (33:22 - 33:22)

No.

[Speaker 2] (33:23 - 33:23)

No.

[Speaker 1] (33:23 - 33:42)

Normal moments when you're not being challenged. Okay. Because all these accumulate, your normal state of consciousness eventually produces some external event.

So as much as possible and in any situation, it's always more important what your inner state of consciousness is than the external situation.

[Speaker 2] (33:42 - 33:42)

Got it.

[Speaker 1] (33:43 - 34:11)

The external situation is always secondary. So what am I feeling now and what am I thinking now? These are the important questions.

So become an alertness then arises. You become suddenly realize, what's my mind saying? Most of the day, what kind of thoughts is my mind producing?

How many negative thoughts do I have every hour, every minute? You become aware particularly of, because the ego loves negative thinking.

[Speaker 2] (34:11 - 34:32)

And so what you're saying then, it would be impossible for Lorraine to be a peaceful person, to say, she says here, I just want peace. What's the problem? It would be impossible to just be a peaceful person, minding your own business, having peaceful, loving thoughts, and people want to pick a fight with you all the time.

[Speaker 1] (34:32 - 35:13)

Yes, that would not be possible. So there's something in her that she needs to become aware of. And that's not her true self.

It's a form of conditioning. Her true self is the awareness, which is already perfect. It's fine.

There's nothing wrong with who she is in her essence. Be vigilant as much as possible. Have maybe put little signs at home, little reminders, so that you remember to be conscious of what's going on inside me.

What's going on inside me? Very important question.

[Speaker 2] (35:13 - 35:15)

What's going on inside me?

[Speaker 1] (35:15 - 35:17)

What thoughts is my mind thinking?

[Speaker 2] (35:18 - 35:18)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (35:18 - 35:20)

What is it that I'm feeling right now?

[Speaker 2] (35:20 - 36:27)

I wanted to go back to page 162 again, where you say, every human being emanates an energy field that corresponds to his or her inner state. And most people can sense it, although they may feel somebody else's energy emanation only subliminally. That is to say, they don't know that they sense it, yet it determines to a large extent how they feel about and react to that person.

I had an encounter with somebody recently where their energy thing was so strong, I walked into the room and felt it so strong, I had to remove myself from the room. Yes. Yeah.

Yes. Some people are most clearly aware of it when they first meet someone, even before any words are exchanged. That's what had happened there.

A little later, however, I love this part. A little later, however, words take over the relationship and with words come the roles that most people play. Attention then moves to the realm of mind and the ability to sense the other person's energy field becomes greatly diminished.

Nevertheless, it is still felt on an unconscious level. And that's why kids can sense it. Little kids can sense it because they don't have the words or the language.

Isn't that true?

[Speaker 1] (36:27 - 36:41)

Yes. And animals can sense it. And animals can sense it too.

Very acutely, because they don't have the conceptual mental realm, so they can feel much more acutely a human energy field.

[Speaker 2] (36:41 - 36:52)

That's right. And after they're introduced to you, your title means nothing to them. Yes.

Your title or your position or your label, the role that you're playing means nothing to them.

[Speaker 1] (36:52 - 36:52)

No.

[Speaker 2] (36:52 - 37:32)

So once they sniff you and they don't like you, they don't like you. Well, on page 170, you talk about children and you say, suppressed pain bodies are extremely toxic, even more so than openly active ones. And that psychic toxicity is absorbed by the children and contributes to the development of their own pain bodies.

So people who are, I think about this all the time, arguing in their families. When you argue in front of your children, I remember this, the little girl said, when my mommy and daddy argue, I go and hide under the covers. When you argue in front of your children, you are creating and reinforcing their pain bodies.

[Speaker 1] (37:32 - 37:48)

Yes. I did that as a child. I was always trying to hide from my parents' pain body, which was there a lot of the time.

Active. So that's one way is when there's an active confrontation and the parents having a confrontation with their mutual pain bodies.

[Speaker 2] (37:48 - 37:52)

It shocked us when you said you started thinking of killing yourself when you were at a very young age, nine or 10.

[Speaker 1] (37:52 - 39:01)

Yes. Because of your parents. Yes.

That was the general environment that I was in. I perceived it as extremely unpleasant. That was the environment of my parents.

Not that they were not loving parents, but they both had heavy pain bodies. I loved them, but I didn't know at the time why that was continuous conflict. I just knew it was dreadful to be around them.

And of course, I was also unhappy at school because I never liked having to study things that I wasn't interested in. It wasn't done in an interesting way. So, yes.

So the children then absorb. One way they absorb the pain body from their parents is when there's open conflict between the parents' pain bodies. But another way is also when some parents say, we mustn't fight in front of the children.

And nevertheless, there's an intense emotional negativity. They may not be saying anything, but there's an emanation of intense negativity in the parents.

[Speaker 2] (39:01 - 39:24)

That's right. I know a couple stayed together 24 years in order until the last child was grown and had gone to college. All the children are completely messed up.

One problem after another problem. Drugs and drinking and all kinds of problems because the children stayed in that house and absorbed all the energy that was in that house.

[Speaker 1] (39:24 - 39:25)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (39:25 - 39:25)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (39:26 - 39:50)

And sometimes it's the case if the parents repress that because they don't want to fight in front of the children or they may have an image of themselves as religious and they mustn't. That's right. And so they are not even admitting to themselves, perhaps, that there's intense negativity.

And then the children grow up in that. And sometimes it's then the children who are forced to act it out in the world. That's right.

[Speaker 2] (39:51 - 40:20)

And the interesting about that, when you try to repress it, when you're not fully realizing the truth of who you are and you say the truth of who you are will set you free, when you allow the repressed bad energy to go on in the household, the energy is still there. It goes back to what I was saying on page 162. The energy is always there.

And children more so than even adults, children who don't have the language for it, pick up on the energy.

Yes, yes.

[Speaker 2] (40:21 - 40:25)

And often blame themselves because they don't have the language to explain.

[Speaker 1] (40:25 - 40:25)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (40:25 - 40:35)

Okay. So we'll go to a caller on this topic from Melbourne, Australia. Hello.

She has a 10-year-old daughter. Her name is Wendy. Wendy, hi.

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Echard.

[Speaker 1] (40:35 - 40:35)

Hi.

[Speaker 3] (40:36 - 41:23)

I have a question. Echard, on page 178, you state that someone who in childhood was neglected or abandoned by one or both parents will likely develop a pain body that becomes triggered in any situation that resonates even remotely with their primordial pain of abandonment. So I see this pain in my 10-year-old daughter whose father no longer sees her and hasn't really had much of a relationship with her.

And my question is, how do I help her through her feelings of abandonment? And how do I guide her through people-pleasing behavior? Because I noticed she has a strong tendency to people-please just to be accepted or liked.

I would really love some help on this one as I'm often at a loss on how to help her through it.

[Speaker 1] (41:23 - 41:41)

Can you give an example of how this, what you see as a sense of abandonment, how it manifests in her now? Can you give a situation where this happens? How does she behave in such a situation?

Well, often there's been occasions when they have little parties at school and children get invited. And she's one of the kids that's excluded because obviously not everyone gets invited to everyone's birthday party. She's so traumatized by it.

She cries and she doesn't understand. And she comes and she says they don't like her or they don't love her. And then she'll try to often buy the friendship.

She'll take things to them, you know, take gifts or take Easter eggs lately and things like that. And I just think, oh, how do I get her through this? She wants to be liked all the time.

She wants approval. So your child- It's a case of intense tears and trauma.

[Speaker 1] (42:21 - 42:24)

She is now 10 years old?

[Speaker 3] (42:24 - 42:25)

10 years old, yes.

Yes. Perhaps you can gradually over the next few years explain to her that she cannot be liked by everybody. Nobody is liked by everybody.

I think if you explain it gently, she will begin to understand that some, it is impossible in this world to be liked and accepted by everybody. And it is not necessary to be liked and accepted by everybody. And especially if you do things that are of any significance in this world, as when she grows up, the more significant things you do in this world, the more you will find there are certain people who don't like what you do.

[Speaker 2] (43:09 - 43:09)

Correct.

[Speaker 1] (43:09 - 43:18)

And even Oprah has people who don't like what she does. I don't know why, but the- I don't either. Yeah.

Yes. And the more successful you become, the more people you have who don't like what you do. So you have a, and I used to be, listen, as you're describing your daughter, I used to be this little 10 year old girl who had such a desire to please.

I was always taking all of my notebook paper and giving it to everybody else, whatever I had. Even in college, nobody liked me. So I would spend all my money because I was working in TV from the time I was a sophomore in college.

And everybody else was jealous of me for having a job and, you know, and having a job on TV. And so I would take my money and buy pizzas for everybody and try to make everybody like me. And, you know, listen, I hope you, I was 40 something before I figured it out.

[Speaker 1] (44:04 - 44:20)

So I hope your daughter gets it before then. I think some gentle explanations, just a little bit here and there. Now she's 10.

And then over the next few years, the behavior will continue for a while. You cannot just undo old conditioning in another person.

[Speaker 2] (44:20 - 44:28)

Yeah. The pain body is I was not wanted by my father. That's what the 10 year old is feeling.

I was not wanted by my father.

Yes. Yes. And the pain body, if your daughter gets taken over by intense negative feelings that are out of proportion to the triggering event, which is a sign that this is the pain body, if this happens and when this happens after, I'll describe it in a new earth, after a pain body episode is over, the next day, for example, you talk to what your daughter felt at that time.

Yesterday, when you behaved in such a way, when you did this, when you said that, what did it feel like? Ask her questions about, so that she begins to put attention on her own emotions and she can detect them. Ask questions about, after a pain body episode in your daughter, ask her what it feels like so that the awareness grows in her of this.

And next time, when it happens again, say, oh, there's the, that old thing has come back. She might even, you may even encourage her to give it a name, the pain body.

[Speaker 3] (45:33 - 45:33)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (45:34 - 45:52)

And then she can identify it when it happens again. So gradually the child can be, instead of at the mercy of these arising emotions, the child can already learn at an early age to be there as the awareness of the emotion, rather than to be taken over by the emotion.

[Speaker 2] (45:53 - 45:57)

Actually, I think children can learn this a lot easier than adults can, because we're so overly conditioned.

[Speaker 1] (45:57 - 46:03)

Yes. And that should be the, one of the main things that children learn at school, but so far that's not happening.

[Speaker 2] (46:03 - 47:03)

Right. And also, Wendy, I might suggest this, you know, I think one of the things that would have helped me a lot, and I found this with my girls in Africa, who come from really disadvantaged backgrounds. They're disadvantaged.

And one of the things I want to teach them is a life of service. You always feel better about your life when you can be of service to someone else's. And so if your daughter, even at 10, is exposed to children who are less fortunate than she is, children who are orphaned or abandoned or, you know, in poverty, I don't know what the situation is in Melbourne, but children who have less than she does, and she is able to see that her situation really isn't so bad, and allowed to feel a sense of gratitude for who she is and where she is and what she has, and yet also empathy and compassion for people who have less than she does. I think that that will also, even at 10 years old, begin to offer some perspective for her.

Yes, absolutely.

[Speaker 2] (47:04 - 47:04)

Yes, I agree.

[Speaker 1] (47:05 - 47:05)

Absolutely.

[Speaker 2] (47:05 - 47:09)

Thank you so much for your call. Thank you very much. Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (47:09 - 47:10)

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (47:10 - 47:19)

So, breaking free, how do we do it? You say, how long does it take to become free of the pain body on page 183? Tell us how long.

[Speaker 1] (47:21 - 47:47)

The important question, as I say, is not how long it takes to become free of the pain body, but how long does it take for me to stop identifying with the pain body. That's because it's more important to stop identifying with it, because in one sense, you're already free. The pain body may still be there in you for a while, but when you stop identifying with it, that's freedom already.

[Speaker 2] (47:47 - 47:59)

You say the answer is, of course, that it depends both on the density of an individual's pain body, some are more dense than others, as well as the degree or intensity of that individual's arising presence.

[Speaker 1] (47:59 - 48:00)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (48:00 - 48:19)

So, the more you're able to bring that sense of awareness, or as I said in the beginning, that you, you who is disguised as awareness, that awareness is you disguised as a person, the more you can be present with that, the more it dissipates. It doesn't happen instantly.

No, but every time you disidentify, every time you are there as the awareness, the energy of the pain body already diminishes. So, every time there's a little bit less of it, and it's the, what happens to the energy? It's all, energy is all one.

There's only one energy, but it appears in different frequencies, and the pain body energy has a certain frequency. It's contained, it's rigid, it's tight, and it becomes freed, and it contributes to the arising awareness.

[Speaker 2] (48:56 - 49:00)

And you say, but it's not the pain body, but identification with it that causes the suffering.

That's right. The pain body itself is only- Has no power over it. No, it's not suffering anymore when you don't identify with it.

Then it's only an unpleasant feeling inside you. You can hardly call it suffering, but it's suffering when you become it, or it becomes you. That's suffering.

[Speaker 2] (49:19 - 49:36)

It's not the pain body, but identification with the pain body that forces you to relive the past again and again and again, and keeps you in a state of unconsciousness. I'm on page 183, everybody. So, a more important question to ask would be, how long does it take to become free of identification?

Yes, that's the key. And the answer to that, of course, is it doesn't really take any time, because all it requires you is to be aware at this moment as it arises, in the moment it arises, to see it and recognize it. Be the awareness for it.

Be the space for it, is another word, another expression we can use. Are you able to be the awareness for the pain body, to be the space for the pain body and say, oh, there it is? That means you've broken the identification.

All it requires is for you to be present in the now as the awareness.

[Speaker 2] (50:15 - 50:25)

And to remember that the past, no matter what it is, no matter how awful it was, how horrifying, how much suffering, the past has no power over the present moment.

[Speaker 1] (50:26 - 50:48)

Because what arises out of the present moment is the dimension of consciousness that we call presence or awareness. It's a dimension that was already there in you always, but had been covered up by density of emotion and density of conditioned mind structures, thinking.

[Speaker 2] (50:48 - 50:51)

And the way you get to that is to bring yourself back to the present moment.

[Speaker 1] (50:52 - 51:40)

Get still. Yes. Get still.

Get still. And then that arises, that dimension that then arises is, we could call it, goes beyond who you are as a person. It is transpersonal.

It is a transpersonal dimension in you. And that's the only thing that can free you from the purely personal realm, which has its place, but is very limited. And it's the only thing that can free you from the past and the heaviness of the past.

And the past cannot prevail against it. It is impossible, because it is the only power there is. So it is also the timeless dimension in you.

When we talk of presence or awareness, there is no past and future in presence or awareness.

[Speaker 2] (51:40 - 51:49)

I got that. When you say on page 184, when you feel the pain body, don't fall into the era of thinking there's something wrong with you, making yourself into a problem.

[Speaker 1] (51:49 - 51:49)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (51:50 - 51:51)

Because the ego loves that.

[Speaker 1] (51:51 - 51:51)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (51:51 - 52:38)

Okay. The knowing needs to be followed by accepting. We talked about that a lot tonight.

Anything else will obscure it. Accepting means you allow yourself to feel whatever it is you're feeling at that moment. You can't argue with what is.

Well, you can, but if you do, you suffer. That's how we suffer. Through allowing, you become what you are, vast and spacious.

You become whole. You're not a fragment anymore, which is how the ego perceives itself. Your true nature emerges, which is one with the nature of God.

And then you say, Jesus points to this when he says, be ye whole, even as your father in heaven is whole. The New Testament's be perfect is a mistranslation of the original Greek word, which means whole. This is to say you don't need to become whole, but be what you already are, with or without the pain body.

[Speaker 1] (52:38 - 52:41)

Yes. Yes. You already that.

[Speaker 2] (52:41 - 52:54)

Now, this brings us to the question that Denise in Michigan asks. She says, is Eckhart perfect? Eckhart, you seem to be almost perfect, although I know nobody is.

Do you ever yell? Do you ever get angry or feel sad?

[Speaker 1] (52:55 - 53:45)

I'm not perfect because the form cannot be perfect. Every form, by the very fact that it has form, is one thing, but not the other. So whole, yes, I feel that I'm aligned with something far greater than the little person.

And that is where I rest. And that is where inspiration comes from, where the teaching arises. This is presence.

And it goes far beyond this little person. This little person is insignificant. It doesn't matter very much to me.

So I don't look for perfection. I don't look for perfection in myself because that would be terrible frustration. I do things that people perhaps would regard as not perfect.

[Speaker 2] (53:46 - 53:48)

I'm waiting to hear.

[Speaker 1] (53:50 - 54:30)

I have a glass of wine. I drink, I like my glass of wine occasionally. I drink coffee at Starbucks almost every day.

And sometimes people come up to me and say, you are drinking coffee, you shouldn't be drinking coffee. What do you need coffee for? I say, why not?

I enjoy it. So I enjoy all kinds of things. I don't have many negative emotions.

I can't think the last time I even had a negative emotion, but it's possible. I perhaps remember maybe some years ago, yes, I was watching and people were mistreating an animal and I suddenly felt anger. So it can happen.

And what did you do when you felt the anger?

[Speaker 2] (54:30 - 54:35)

What did you do with that anger? Did you say, oh, I'm feeling anger? You noticed the anger?

[Speaker 1] (54:36 - 55:11)

Yes. And the situation, somebody else interfered at that very moment. Otherwise, I had already taken steps towards stopping it.

And so the anger was there. I felt it. And it was in my system for a couple of minutes as a vibrational, intense vibration in the body.

And then it dissipated. I let it go. So you don't just like little things don't upset you ever?

No, no. I've let go. I had so much of that in the past.

So much suffering with all kinds of little things. It's not worth it.

[Speaker 2] (55:11 - 55:20)

Yeah, I never understand this because I'm not, I don't get triggered by automobiles or driving or stuff. I never understand the people, the road rage.

[Speaker 1] (55:20 - 55:23)

That's pain body, right? Yes, and the continuous...

[Speaker 2] (55:23 - 55:28)

I never understand why not getting in a, not being led in a line or being cut off, why that would cause you to be so crazy.

[Speaker 1] (55:29 - 55:48)

I don't understand it either. But for many people, that is something they personalize the traffic. So it's an egoic phenomenon.

So when somebody does something, they regard it as a personal insult to them, to their dignity or whatever. So, and of course, if it were...

They personalize the traffic.

[Speaker 1] (55:50 - 56:46)

They wouldn't perhaps do it with the weather. If some hail or rain hits your windscreen, then you would, perhaps you wouldn't get angry. But if a driver cuts across, then you suddenly get angry.

But it's the same thing. It's just an energy field cutting across. Why personalize it?

And I'm amazed that people suffer so much stress in traffic because if you don't react, then there's no stress. If you don't personalize other drivers, as if they had some personal disagreement with you, it's nothing to do with you. They don't even know you.

If you don't personalize things, it's actually quite stress-free. Or you get stuck in traffic and people get so frustrated getting stuck in traffic. Yes.

I know. And that can be a wonderful meditation. You can't move.

Why not be in the body, feel the intense aliveness in your energy field, and be there, enjoy.

[Speaker 2] (56:46 - 56:57)

And everybody who's listening has ever been stuck in traffic. You now, after reading the book, you know how ridiculous it is to be upset that you're stuck in traffic because there's nothing you can do to change it.

[Speaker 1] (56:57 - 57:10)

So just be with it. Wonderful opportunity for acceptance and surrender. And a wonderful opportunity for learning dysfunction.

If you observe you're not accepting and surrendering, then you can observe how dysfunction arises.

[Speaker 2] (57:10 - 57:14)

I love the way you answered that question from Denise in Michigan. You say you're not perfect, but you're whole.

[Speaker 1] (57:15 - 57:34)

Yes. So sometimes people on the spiritual path, they look for some kind of perfection. They have an image of how a perfect, evolved, spiritual human being behaves.

And then they try to conform that to that image. It doesn't work. It really accepts your own limitations, accepts your imperfections.

Do you have no attachment to, I mean, the way you even described your body, I asked you if you had any fear of dying. And I said this later to some friends. I've never talked to anybody to whom I've asked that question.

And there was such definitive resoluteness about it. How you were just like, I really believed you when you said you had no fear. I really believed you when you had no fear of death.

And you have no attachment to anything? Like, do you live in a nice house? Do you like nice things?

Oh, yes. Yes. I like nice things.

Now, for many years, I lived on a minimum because for many years, I didn't have a regular job. I was just doing some occasional counseling and occasional little workshops. So for many years, I lived on very, very little.

And I enjoyed that. I later on, I realized, oh, I must have lived for all those years below the poverty level. But I didn't feel that at the time.

I didn't regard myself as poor. I've enjoyed every moment of it. And then now I have relative wealth, especially compared to that time.

[Speaker 2] (58:38 - 58:38)

Mm-hmm.

[Speaker 1] (58:38 - 58:48)

I'm relatively well. And I'm actually enjoying that, too. I buy some nice furniture sometimes and enjoy it.

You like nice sheets? I like nice sheets. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (58:48 - 58:49)

Or do you care?

[Speaker 1] (58:49 - 59:19)

Well, I can sleep in any. But I like nice things. So.

But you're not attached to them? No, no. I'm not attached.

I enjoy having space around so that you don't have to listen to the neighbor's noise. That is quite nice. Perhaps the greatest thing that money can buy is space around you.

But if you don't have it, and if you have to live with neighbor's noise, it's a great opportunity for surrendering or for telling them to shut up.

[Speaker 2] (59:22 - 59:24)

If you want to summarize, I guess you just basically did.

[Speaker 1] (59:25 - 59:25)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (59:25 - 59:27)

Break free of it, lose the identification.

[Speaker 1] (59:27 - 59:29)

Yes, that's it. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (59:29 - 59:45)

I'm really excited about the next chapter because the next chapter is finding who you truly are. Because even if you haven't read the rest of the book, you can start really on page 185 with finding who you truly are and then work your way backwards. It's going to be so exciting.

[Speaker 1] (59:45 - 59:46)

Yes, I love it too.

[Speaker 2] (59:46 - 1:00:05)

I love it. I love it when you love it. Again, Eckhart and I thank you all for joining us around the world.

Get ready for next week's class, finding out who you truly are. If you're not who you think you are, well, then who are you? We're going to talk about that.

It's going to be so exciting next week. Again, I thank you.

[Speaker 1] (1:00:05 - 1:00:06)

Thank you, everybody.

[Speaker 6] (1:00:06 - 1:00:47)

Thank you. Hey, Super Solars, looking for a great new read or listen? Well, that's why we're so excited about Oprah's new book, The Path Made Clear, Discovering Your Life's Direction and Purpose.

Oprah has collected all of the lessons she's learned from thought leaders like Eckhart Tolle and Brene Brown and innovators like Jay-Z and Lin-Manuel Miranda, who all understand what it means to achieve the life of your dreams. The Path Made Clear is available now on Apple Books, Amazon, Audible, and at your local bookstore. It really is a game changer for anyone seeking to discover their true calling and start living it.

So what are you waiting for? Get the book now and begin your journey today.

Eckhart Tolle A New Earth : Ego : The Current State of Humanity (Chapter 2) [gid : //art19-episode-locator/V0/wlZ6ssc Gj2CN8fCV4Y pQf-3xH2Pd0LDcuVL Ot-3o]

Hello to all you podcast listeners. We're bringing you something really special. One of the great spiritual thinkers of our time, Eckhart Tolle and I, are giving you a chapter-by-chapter class on what I believe is his groundbreaking masterpiece, Eckhart's best-selling book, A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose.

This book resonated with me in such a profound way. I truly think that it's the most important book I've ever read. It's changed the way I live my life so much so that I always have a copy on my nightstand because I constantly give myself a refresher course.

And now more than ever, we need to create what Eckhart calls a new earth inside our personal lives, in our communities, and the world. Give it a listen and over 10 episodes, you too will be opened up and learn how to quiet your mind, get your ego in check, live a fully more present life. We're talking deep, big picture, even delving into consciousness and the reason why we're all really here.

My greatest hope is that Eckhart's quiet wisdom and patient teachings will resonate with you as they have with me. Each podcast episode will start with my conversation with Eckhart about a chapter and then Eckhart answers questions from people who are reading along in the book. So I encourage you to get your own copy of A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose and join us for a thrilling, enlightening, and spiritual experience.

Hi, everybody. Ah, today we start chapter two. We're taking on the biggest thing ever, the ego.

Now, for so many of us, Eckhart Tolle redefined the word ego because before Eckhart, I knew it as a way to describe someone who is really kind of full of themselves, you know, like so-and-so has a really big ego. Well, that is what the ego is. But as you're learning, if you're reading this book, it is also so much more.

According to Eckhart, it's the part of us that causes all of the friction and the pain and the suffering in our lives. It's the part that holds on to all that painful baggage from our past, and it's the part that makes us jealous, makes us angry, makes us depressed, and also fearful. Get that?

I mean, it's just, it's amazing when you do. Today, what we're going to do is focus on the first step of getting it, which is learning to recognize when your ego shows up. This was so big for me, big, big, big, big, big.

And the best part is that once you become aware of your ego, you start to develop some real spiritual muscle and a higher level of consciousness. I think that's just the biggest wow ever. It's an aha, bing, bing, bing moment.

So let's get going to be able to identify when that ego shows up. Since I read this book, I can just, the instant my ego shows up, I go, oh, that's the ego. Shut that thing down.

On to chapter two, the ego. Welcome again, Eckhart Tolle. Thank you.

Thank you. You shared with us how there are tools that we can use to bring ourself into the present moment. And you were saying from that first chapter and throughout this book that there is only the present moment.

And you were saying that if we would allow ourselves to take ourselves out of our mind and just go to our breath, that we could learn presence that way. That's how you begin to learn presence.

Yes. Yes. And I suggest that we all do that right now, which is to say we are taking our attention right now away from where it usually dwells, which is in the head and in the thinking mind.

And we direct our attention to our breath. And the simple question that one could ask is, or you could ask yourself is, am I still breathing? Let's just check if I'm still breathing.

Now, how do you find out whether you're still breathing? You have to take your attention away from the thinking mind and sense yourself breathing right now. And as you're taking attention away from the thinking mind, which always works using past and future, sustains itself by always generating past and future thinking, you also enter the present moment.

When you take attention away from thinking, direct attention to your breathing. You're always breathing, but usually you're not aware of it. And now we are bringing awareness to it, which means we are taking attention away from thinking.

So we are not losing consciousness. We are very conscious, but thinking much less or perhaps not at all.

[Speaker 2] (5:04 - 5:51)

Well, this is the most exciting chapter until you get to the next chapter. I think chapter two is the most exciting chapter. Chapter one is pretty conceptual.

You would agree. You're the one who wrote it. Pretty conceptual.

But in chapter two, title, Ego, the Current State of Humanity, we get into, I think, a way of understanding ourselves that perhaps so many people were not aware of until beginning to read this. So I would just like to just get right into this chapter. When you say, when you don't cover up the world with words and labels, a sense of miraculous returns to your life that was lost a long time ago when humanity, instead of using thought, became possessed by thought.

What do you mean by that? Yes.

[Speaker 1] (5:52 - 7:17)

Now, usually, and everybody can verify this in their own experience, we experience the phenomenal world, whatever we experience. We do not experience it directly. It is overlaid with self-talk, which are the mental processes.

So as you go about your life, you encounter situations, you meet people, you do your work. And most of the time, there is a voice in the head, which can be called the self-talk. It can be called the inner voice.

But it is the conditioned thought processes. And they are commenting and interpreting and mentally labeling whatever it is you're perceiving or experiencing. So there's always a running commentary in people's heads.

So they don't relate to the world directly and immediately, but through the veil of the self-talk. And this greatly decreases the sense of aliveness, the sense of how you relate to the outer world and especially to human beings. For example, if every time I meet another human being, I immediately have certain thoughts and judgments in my head that come up the moment I meet a person.

I'm already thinking something about this person.

[Speaker 2] (7:17 - 7:18)

That's right. You've already labeled.

[Speaker 1] (7:19 - 7:26)

I'm already labeled. And so I'm no longer really in communication with that person. I'm in communication with my own labels.

[Speaker 2] (7:26 - 7:56)

Yes. And what you said to us last week, and you also say in this chapter, even a stone and more easily a flower or a bird could show you the way back to God and the source to yourself when you look at it or hold it and let it be without imposing a word or mental label. And what you were saying in last week is that if you can learn to do that in nature first, stop labeling things, just feel the essence and presence of things, it allows you then to be able to gradually move into doing that with people.

[Speaker 9] (7:56 - 7:56)

That's right.

[Speaker 2] (7:56 - 8:10)

So often we don't engage in presence with people. We've already labeled them and labeled the situation. And so we're reacting out of the situations and not out of what's actually happening.

That's what you're saying.

[Speaker 1] (8:10 - 8:38)

Yes. We've already put people into mental boxes. And so we no longer experience them as in their full aliveness.

We have desensitized ourselves through this continuous mental conceptualization we have desensitized ourselves to the aliveness of other human beings, because the moment I put a label on another human being, I've already desensitized myself to their life.

[Speaker 2] (8:38 - 8:55)

So you say the quicker you are in attaching verbal or mental labels to things, people, or situations, the more on page 26, everybody, the bottom, the more shallow and lifeless your reality becomes and the more deadened you become to reality, the miracle of life that continuously unfolds within and around you.

[Speaker 1] (8:55 - 9:40)

I go for a walk every day in the little forest at home. And often I encounter people who are jogging or friends going for a walk. And most people, some are listening to things on their headphones, whatever it is, and they're talking to their friends.

And very few people are actually truly present there as they walk through this beautiful forest. And this is a spiritual practice. And I recommend that people, whenever they go out into nature, especially, practice being very alert so that they can perceive the trees, the flowers, the plants, the sky.

Without too much mental interference.

[Speaker 2] (9:40 - 9:43)

That's so interesting. Heather from Vancouver Island. Hello, Heather.

[Speaker 8] (9:44 - 9:48)

Hello, Oprah. I'm honored to be here speaking with you today.

[Speaker 2] (9:48 - 9:50)

I think this is fun. Okay.

[Speaker 8] (9:51 - 10:08)

Okay. Go right ahead. Mr. Tolle, I'd like to commend you on a spectacular book. I found it thought-provoking and questions arose for me. For example, when we get free of the ego, where does that energy go? Good question.

[Speaker 1] (10:09 - 11:23)

Good question. Yes, thank you. The energy that was used up by the ego.

Now, what is the ego? Basically consists of compulsive conditioned thought processes. So that we are not aware of.

So we identify so closely with our stream of thinking that we don't even know that we are thinking. So all this energy is used up in continuous, to a large extent, useless thinking. Even psychologists have found out that 90, even psychologists who are not interested in spiritual things, they looked at the nature of human thought and they discovered that 98 or 99% of our thoughts are quite useless and repetitive.

They're not really needed. So where does that energy go? That energy that then becomes freed from thinking and becomes presence.

Which is a new dimension. Well, not entirely new because almost everybody has had glimpses of presence. But it is a dimension of consciousness that most people still don't know exists.

And really, this is the essence of the whole teaching.

[Speaker 2] (11:23 - 11:47)

And everybody's had glimpses of it. I'm sure you have too, Heather, and everybody who's listening to us. Everybody's had just that little moment where everything is okay.

Where you have just a moment of bliss. Where there's nothing particularly going on that would cause you to feel that. But there's a sense of an awareness that causes you to have, as you said, a glimpse of something bigger than yourself.

[Speaker 1] (11:47 - 12:07)

Yes, it can come accidentally. Sometimes it comes into people's lives accidentally. And suddenly you feel a deep sense of inner peace and aliveness.

And all rightness. Yes, and not because something particular has happened. So there's no external cause for it.

It's causeless joy, one could say.

[Speaker 2] (12:07 - 12:15)

That's happened to you, Heather? Has that happened to you? Occasionally.

Yeah, occasionally. Yeah, and then you wonder, how did that happen so I could make that happen again?

[Speaker 1] (12:16 - 12:59)

Yes, it can also happen when you're engaged in very strenuous physical activity. So that requires all your attention, like climbing a mountain. So you need to be, when you're climbing a wall, you need to be totally present every moment.

If you lose presence and start thinking about what you're going to do when you get down from the mountain, you will probably have an accident. So certain activities, very strenuous activities, require absolute presence. And some people become actually addicted to dangerous activities because they feel much more alive in those moments.

Because you need to be fully present. Yes, the reason why they feel so much more alive is because they're thinking almost nothing at all.

[Speaker 2] (12:59 - 13:04)

Because you have to be present in order to climb a mountain or to do strenuous activities.

[Speaker 1] (13:05 - 13:07)

Your attention is absolutely there.

[Speaker 2] (13:07 - 13:29)

All right. All right, Heather, did that answer your question? Yes, it did.

Thank you. Thank you so much from Vancouver Island, Canada, Heather. Well, Heather introduces this whole idea of the illusory self that you talk about on page 27.

You say, the word I embodies the greatest error and the deepest truth depending upon how it is used. What do you mean by that?

[Speaker 1] (13:29 - 14:08)

Yes, usually when people say I, they refer to what I call me and my story. Yes. Which is your personal history that you identify with as yourself.

So everybody has a story, of course, because everybody has a past. Now, most people are completely identified with the story that is their successes, their failures, things that happened to them, things that they acquired. They see themselves as a victim.

They see themselves as successful. Whatever it is, there is a certain story that develops.

[Speaker 2] (14:08 - 14:19)

Because when you ask me, who am I? That's what I'm going to tell you, my story, my successes, my failures, where I was born, what I did, what my mother did or didn't do. That's who we think we are.

[Speaker 1] (14:20 - 16:22)

That's right. Now, what I'm saying is and what all spiritual teachings point to is that that ultimately is not who you are in your essence. It is no more than a collection of memories.

And of course, memories are thoughts. It is no more than a bundle of thoughts that you identify with and that you believe to be who you are. So that becomes an entity almost, a mind made entity, a self sense of self, like a phantom entity that lives with you, that you then refer to as myself.

So you have me and myself. For example, in Greek mythology, we have the interesting story of Narcissus. Narcissus was a young man who lived, how the story goes.

Mythology, of course, always embodies some truth that goes beyond the personal. Narcissus happened to be walking somewhere and he saw, suddenly he looked down and he saw his own image in a pool of water. At the time, of course, they didn't have mirrors at the time.

So it was a surprise for him to see himself reflected in a pool of water. And the story goes that he fell in love with himself. My view is that actually a better translation is of the story is that he became obsessed with himself.

And that to me signals the beginning of the human ego. It is to have a mental image in your head, ultimately, not out there. That's just the story.

A mental image in your head that you regard as yourself. And that mental image is the mind made me that consists of memories, things that happen to you, things, failures, successes, opinions, all kinds of things. I've described them in the book.

Together, make up this I.

[Speaker 2] (16:22 - 16:27)

Well, if I'm not the memories and I'm not the things that happen to me and I'm not my story, then who am I?

[Speaker 1] (16:28 - 17:45)

That's the question. And in fact, who am I is actually a question that in some spiritual, Eastern spiritual teachings is used as a kind of mantra or pointer that you repeat to yourself in a meditation setting. So you sit down and you ask yourself, who am I?

And you're not supposed to answer that question. You leave the blank after the question. In that blank, in that empty space, if it works, if this practice works as it should, you suddenly get a sense of your own presence.

It has nothing to do with your thought processes, your own sense of conscious presence, your beingness, your presence, part of which is actually also your physical presence, but as a sense of aliveness. Every cell of the body becomes part of that sense of presence and aliveness. So as we sit here, we can perhaps see if we can get a little glimpse of that, a glimpse of our own presence, which again is nothing to do with thinking.

It is deeper than thinking.

[Speaker 2] (17:45 - 17:47)

How do we get a glimpse of it sitting here?

[Speaker 1] (17:48 - 18:07)

We get a glimpse of it. I recommend that, see if you can feel the inner aliveness in your body as you sit here. Is there any sense in which you can feel that you're, that there is an aliveness in every cell of the body?

Now, if people...

[Speaker 2] (18:07 - 18:09)

But isn't my mind thinking that?

[Speaker 1] (18:09 - 18:12)

Your mind may be thinking, yes, of course I'm alive.

[Speaker 2] (18:12 - 18:23)

Like in the book, you say, feel the aliveness in your hands. When I go to feel the aliveness in my hand, I can't feel the aliveness in my hand unless I had a mind in which to feel that.

[Speaker 1] (18:24 - 18:39)

No. So if you close your eyes and you hold out your hand like this, and then the question... Feel the vibrating sensation in your hand.

Yes. You ask yourself, for example, I always have this exercise for people who have no idea what I'm talking about when I talk about inner body. Okay.

[Speaker 2] (18:40 - 18:41)

Well, there would be a lot of people listening right now.

[Speaker 1] (18:42 - 19:49)

Go ahead. So you hold your hand and close your eyes and then ask yourself, how, without touching anything and without moving my hand, how can I know whether my hand is still here? How can I know that?

Now, your mind might say, of course I know it because I remember seeing it just a few seconds ago. And I feel it right here. But that's it.

You need to, you feel the inside is alive. A subtle sense of warmth or tingling, a subtle sense of aliveness. That is the beginning of getting in touch with your inner body, the energy field.

But I need my brain to do that though. You need your conscious attention to do that, but not thinking. Not thinking.

No. That's the difference. You need attention, which is consciousness.

Yes, you need consciousness to feel it. But the consciousness then moves from where it usually is, just as it did when we started today with becoming aware of our breathing. Now the consciousness moves into the hand.

And if you can feel your hand, if you can feel one hand, you can also feel the other hand. If you can feel both hands at the same time, you can perhaps also feel your both arms.

Right.

[Speaker 1] (19:50 - 19:53)

And if you can feel the arms, perhaps you can also feel your feet.

[Speaker 2] (19:53 - 19:59)

Okay. And as I begin to feel that, and everybody who's with us around the world feels that, then what?

[Speaker 1] (19:59 - 20:26)

This means this, the inner body, which we also could call, this is what we are doing is we are practicing embodiment. This keeps you in the present moment and keeps you present. It keeps you out of your thought processes.

Thinking about what I need to do tomorrow. Yes. And it takes you out of ego, because the ego lives in your thought processes, consists of thought processes.

[Speaker 9] (20:26 - 20:27)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (20:27 - 20:59)

So the moment you enter the inner aliveness of a body, you sense there is a sense of self that is deeper than thinking. You are that aliveness that you feel. You are that alive presence.

And this applies whether your past or your personal history is a happy one or an unhappy one. For most people, it's a very mixed story. But no personal history is entirely happy.

Right. With very few examples. And then you just have to wait a little while until it becomes unhappy again.

[Speaker 2] (20:59 - 21:01)

Even the people who say, I had a great childhood.

[Speaker 1] (21:02 - 21:30)

No, personal histories are all very problematic. And it's not people think, oh, it's only me. It's everybody.

Everybody's personal history. That's what being a human is. Yes.

So to be able to step out and find a dimension that has nothing to do with your past and your history, or whether you are a miserable failure in the eyes of the world or your thought processes or greater, has nothing to do with that.

I love it when you say what you usually refer to when you say I, I'm on page 28, is not who you are. By a monstrous act of reductionism. Which is a great way of putting it.

The infinite depth of who you are is confused with a sound produced by the vocal cords or the thought of I in your mind and whatever the I has identified with. So what do the usual I and the related me, my, or mine refer to? You talk about when a young child first learns to identify my toy.

Yes. That's the beginning of ego. When the child starts to identify with an external object and you can see when the toy is taken away from a child after this identification has happened, after the child thought of it as my toy, there's enormous amount of pain in the child.

The child will start screaming and saying, it's mine, it's mine. So the toy has been taken away. Why is it so painful for the child?

Because it is the beginning of the ego. The ego has lost something that it had identified with. It's a misperception of who one is.

And so it's very painful.

[Speaker 2] (22:45 - 22:50)

The child thinks that the toy has something to do with them.

[Speaker 1] (22:50 - 22:51)

Who they are. It's who they are.

[Speaker 2] (22:51 - 22:57)

That's the identification. And that's why kids go into spasms over a toy and you're going, it's just a toy.

[Speaker 1] (22:57 - 23:09)

And two days later, they lose interest in it. Right. And so that's the beginning of it.

And then it's because they think the toy is them. They think it's a part of them. It adds something to their sense of self.

[Speaker 2] (23:09 - 23:11)

That's right. And when you take it away, they think it isn't.

[Speaker 1] (23:11 - 23:17)

Then it's like losing a limb because it became so much part of who they thought they were.

[Speaker 2] (23:17 - 23:20)

In the child's mind, that's a part of me.

[Speaker 1] (23:20 - 23:23)

And then we grow up. And of course the process continues.

[Speaker 2] (23:23 - 23:25)

When we grow up, our toys just get bigger.

[Speaker 1] (23:25 - 23:26)

They get bigger.

[Speaker 2] (23:27 - 23:29)

And we cry because I lost my...

[Speaker 1] (23:29 - 23:46)

Lost external possessions. Yes. But of course possessions is an important part of all the things that people identify with that become part of their identity.

But there are many other things apart from possessions. Right. For example, social position, how others see you.

[Speaker 2] (23:46 - 23:54)

Because you say other things the eye identifies with is nationality, race, religion, profession, mother, father, husband, wife, so on.

[Speaker 1] (23:54 - 24:01)

Roles they play. Roles they play. Opinions they hold.

You can see, for example, when people are...

[Speaker 2] (24:01 - 24:06)

But these are roles. They are actual roles. You know, people are mothers and fathers and...

[Speaker 1] (24:06 - 24:06)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (24:07 - 24:07)

You know.

[Speaker 1] (24:07 - 24:16)

Yes. Now it's important, of course, to fulfill the functions that you have in this world. And mother and father are important functions as opposed to roles.

[Speaker 2] (24:16 - 24:18)

Your nationality and your race and your religion.

[Speaker 1] (24:18 - 24:19)

It's fine.

[Speaker 2] (24:19 - 24:20)

You identify with those things.

[Speaker 1] (24:20 - 24:33)

It's fine to honor all these things. But if that's all you have, then you are lost in a surface reality that always turns into... becomes painful and turns into conflict.

[Speaker 9] (24:33 - 24:33)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (24:34 - 25:11)

You can see, for example, when people are discussing and if somebody questions somebody's opinion, very often, immediately, they become defensive. Right. Sometimes even aggressive or start shouting.

Right. And because opinions, again, is another thing that... Because my beliefs.

Mine. They identify with the thought they hold, a mental position, and then anybody who questions that mental position immediately becomes your enemy because you believe you're being attacked. You're not being attacked, but the image that you have of yourself and the opinion is part of that, the ego believes it's being attacked.

[Speaker 2] (25:12 - 25:35)

So you're saying that whenever you can see that that's what you're thinking, when you can see the illusion of that, the moment you can see the illusion of it, these are thoughts in my head, this is something I've told myself I believe, this is something I've told myself that I identify with, that when you can see that, the seer or the observer is who you really are.

[Speaker 1] (25:35 - 25:39)

Yes. And the seer or the observer is the presence or the awareness.

[Speaker 2] (25:39 - 25:42)

So you're saying there's two of us at all times.

[Speaker 1] (25:42 - 25:51)

Yes. There is the formless awareness and there is the form that a thought becomes. Thought is an energy formation.

[Speaker 2] (25:52 - 25:52)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (25:52 - 25:59)

And so that you've just mentioned, the essence is to be there as the awareness when it happens.

[Speaker 2] (25:59 - 26:05)

All right, I'm gonna go to Victoria. Victoria lives in Maui. Victoria, hello.

Aloha. Aloha.

Can't wait to get there. Thank you, Oprah and Mr. Toley for this awesome opportunity. I was diagnosed over 10 years ago with systemic lupus and RA, and I've been a really active person.

But two years ago, I gave up my business, my health deteriorated, and I got an aha moment in this book on page 51. I never realized that I had unconsciously clinged to my illness, and I'm taking this out of the book because I put it to myself, because it had actually become the most important part of who I perceived myself to be. How can I undo this identity?

And how can I stay focused when I'm in excruciating pain from the illness to have the peace constantly and not just fleeting moments? That's real.

[Speaker 1] (27:01 - 27:01)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (27:01 - 27:02)

That's real.

[Speaker 1] (27:02 - 29:30)

Yes. Now, the most important thing has already happened, which is you have become aware that up to now you had been identified with the idea of, I am a sufferer of such and such an illness. So the illness had become thought forms in your head, and you had identified with these thought forms and took them to be who you are.

And now the most important thing, your question is still valid, but realize that the most important thing has already happened, which is the awareness has arisen, so there's a space now between yourself and your thought processes and the image of yourself as a sick person. Now, another thing, of course, in addition you can do is, for example, no longer talk about your illness to other people except when you visit a doctor. Then otherwise the more you talk about it to your friends, acquaintances, family members, the more you keep that process going.

Empower it. He empowers the disease. That's right.

Yes. So if you just take the decision now that from now on I'm not going to talk about it and if people ask me about my illness, which they're going to do because they're perhaps used to you talking about it, you say, well, I'm doing all I can to find healing in this and I'm making good progress. Go as far as that and don't encourage people to ask you questions and just say that's how it is, no more mentioning my illness.

So you begin on the external level not to talk about it anymore except when, of course, when you need to talk to doctors and that will have also a certain influence on your thought processes and then you can gradually also refrain from thinking of yourself as a sick person and perhaps give less thought to your illness and focus attention more on well-being. Now you may ask, well, but if I don't feel good, if I feel it, how can I give attention to well-being? You can still do that.

One way is to see well-being around you in nature because nature is just an embodiment of well-being.

[Speaker 2] (29:30 - 29:32)

You have a lot of opportunity to do that in Maui.

[Speaker 1] (29:32 - 30:11)

Yes, you're in the best place and also there's well-being even if certain parts of your body feel unwell or painful and again we are coming back to the sensing the inner body. There are always parts of your body where you can still find well-being in your hands, your arms, wherever. Take some attention into the body and see where can I most strongly feel, get a sense of well-being in the body.

Then take your attention there. So you choose to direct attention to well-being rather than dwelling on the idea of illness.

[Speaker 2] (30:12 - 30:16)

That does not mean the pain is going to go away because she said she has physical pain.

[Speaker 1] (30:16 - 31:02)

The pain may still be there. As far as the pain is concerned, pain unfortunately requires surrender. You need to see that the pain is there so that you do not generate an additional level of psychological pain which complains about being in physical pain because if the mind starts to complain about being in physical pain, you have two levels of pain.

You have psychological pain and physical pain. Got it. Leave physical pain.

With physical pain you just, right now this is how it is. It's there. Don't resist it.

Don't resist it. Do what you can as far as treatment goes of course but don't resist it. Don't create psychological pain on top of the physical pain.

[Speaker 2] (31:02 - 31:05)

Are you following that, Victoria? Got it. Yeah, excellent.

[Speaker 4] (31:06 - 31:10)

Got it. Makes sense to you? You know, it really does.

It does, yes.

[Speaker 2] (31:11 - 31:31)

Let's move on to content and structure of the ego. On page 34. It's very exciting when you really get these concepts of the ego.

You say that there's the egoic mind is completely conditioned by the past. Its conditioning is too full. It consists of content and structure.

What do you mean by that?

[Speaker 1] (31:32 - 34:07)

Uh, content is whatever it is that you identify with and that then you take to be yourself. So that varies. Depends what culture you live in.

Depends on your upbringing. It depends on your personal circumstances. And content is different for everybody.

It differs for everybody. Although there are certain similarities in the same cultural field like there's certain similarities that in America or in France or whatever country you live in. There are certain similarities of things that pertain to that particular nationality that we would identify with.

Nevertheless, from person to person, yes, it differs. The content differs. One person may identify with very strongly held religious beliefs and believe that everybody else is evil who does not hold these religious beliefs.

That would be a very rigid ego. Or another person identifies very strongly with the company they work for. And they feel, I've heard stories in Japan where people, when they got dismissed from their job, they committed suicide.

They were so identified with their company that when they lost their job, which until recently was very rare apparently in Japan, you would keep your job for the rest of your life. So it became part of who you thought you were. And if they didn't commit suicide, they suffered dreadfully because their identity got taken away.

All that, of course, is pseudo-identity. It's not who you truly are. It's part of the ego.

And all that is content. The structure of the ego basically consists of identification. The ego seeks something or things to identify with.

What it is doesn't really matter. For one person, one person identifies him or herself with a very positive-looking ego, meaning I'm the greatest thing that ever lived. It might be a delusion, probably is.

Or another person might identify with a very negative ego image, like I'm the most wretched person that has ever lived. Life has treated me so unfairly. I've suffered so much more than you.

Let me tell you about it. Many egos are like that. They are just as strong as egos who think they are the greatest.

So the ego can be predominantly negative. It can be predominantly positive. But in either case, it's ego.

[Speaker 2] (34:08 - 34:17)

Capsulize for us what, you know, I know the whole chapter is about the current state of humanity being the ego. But can you put in a capsule what it is, the ego?

[Speaker 1] (34:18 - 34:34)

The ego is a false sense of self based on mental concepts. So that's... And our identification with form.

Identification with form. These are, these are, yes.

[Speaker 2] (34:35 - 34:53)

But why do we have it, though? Why do we have an ego? We're all human.

We all have one, right? We all have one. You say yours, last week you said yours died.

Does that mean you don't have one? You said yours died in that moment where you wanted to kill yourself. I am so miserable.

I can no, I can live with myself no longer.

[Speaker 1] (34:53 - 34:53)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (34:53 - 34:57)

You said in that moment, your ego died. It never came back. It died forever.

[Speaker 1] (34:58 - 35:26)

Yes. When we say that, it simply means it sounds like some great achievement or it's not. Yeah.

All it means is I'm no longer identified with my thought processes. I know when thoughts happen, I know they're just thoughts. I don't look for myself in some opinion that I hold of myself.

Some mental concept, including the concept that I am free of ego. I don't think in those terms because if I had this mental concept, I am free of ego, that would be ego again.

[Speaker 2] (35:27 - 35:28)

That would be ego again. Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (35:29 - 35:31)

And this can happen very easy.

[Speaker 2] (35:31 - 35:49)

So ego is any identification with form. Yes. Because what we really are is the awareness that we are identified with form.

Yes. And the more you can become aware that you are identified with things, you create a space that separates you from the things.

[Speaker 1] (35:49 - 36:02)

Yes. Because the question is, when you're aware that you're identified, who is it that is aware? What is it?

It's a new dimension of consciousness that comes from a deeper level of yourself.

[Speaker 2] (36:02 - 36:06)

But how do we live in the world without things? We have to have things. We have to live in a house.

[Speaker 1] (36:06 - 36:37)

Fine. We have transportation. Nothing wrong with things.

We have clothes. We have to be clothed. Nothing wrong with things.

Nothing wrong with thoughts. Nothing wrong with opinions. But the moment you identify with opinions, then you need to defend them.

They become part of your pseudo image. There's nothing wrong with possessing things. But when you become identified, then first of all, if you lose something, immediately you will suffer.

[Speaker 2] (36:37 - 37:56)

I love when you say the people in the advertising industry know very well that in order to sell things that people don't really need, I'm on page 35, everybody, they must convince them that those things will add something to how they see themselves or are seen by others. In other words, add something to their sense of self. They do this, for example, by telling you, you will stand out from the crowd by using this product.

And so by implication, be more fully yourself. You say in so many cases, you're not buying a product, but an identity enhancer. I thought that was so fantastic.

Designer labels are primarily collective identities that you buy into. They are expensive and therefore exclusive. If everybody could buy them, they would lose their psychological value.

And all you would be left with would be their material value, which likely amounts to a fraction of what you paid. Interesting. Okay.

I want to go back to the identification with things because that is an issue for so many people. The unchecked striving for more, for endless growth, you say, is a dysfunction and a disease on page 37, like the cancer cell whose only goal is to multiply itself, unaware that it's bringing about its own destruction by destroying the organism of which it is a part. Okay.

We have Joyce from Minnesota. Joyce, what is your question? I thought this applied to you.

[Speaker 3] (37:57 - 38:16)

Yeah, yeah, it does. And fortunately, it applies to my son as well. He came home from kindergarten and I said, I'm so happy to see you and I'm in such a good mood.

And he said, oh, good. Does that mean we get to go shopping? And I thought, it's rubbing off on him.

So what my question is, is how do I reverse that process in him?

[Speaker 2] (38:16 - 38:27)

Oh, well, first of all, let me ask you this. You're reading the book, correct? Yes.

Right. So you've gotten through chapter two already? Yes.

Yeah. So when you read that, did you see yourself in the pages?

[Speaker 3] (38:28 - 38:37)

I did. The aha for me was in seeing of who you are not, your real self emerges through something along those lines.

[Speaker 2] (38:37 - 38:51)

One of my favorite quotes in this chapter is, when you can no longer feel the life that you are, you are likely to try to fill up your life with things. Would that be what you're trying to do?

[Speaker 3] (38:51 - 39:25)

That was me. Since I've started reading this book, I've gotten so much better. I'm not searching for that thing anymore.

I think I was trying to find my identity in things. And since I've stopped that, and I really don't have any interest in that anymore, I've discovered so much more about myself. I'm artistic and I'm doing sculptures and just things I never did before.

So it's working out great. I just want to know how to enforce that in my son as well, since he's only five.

Oh, well, now the most important change has already happened in you. So you've become aware of the old pattern. You've gone beyond it.

And it's inevitable that now this will, even if you don't say anything, it will transmit itself to your son also. When after a while your son sees that the importance that you give to acquiring things has diminished, then he will also reflect that this is how it works with young children.

[Speaker 2] (39:56 - 40:16)

It will take some time. Yes. Since he's been a baby, you've been a shopaholic.

And so that's what he has seen. That's what he's taken in. That's what he identifies with as pleasure.

And when you say I'm in a good mood and things are going well, well, let's go shopping, mommy. Because that's what mommy's always done.

[Speaker 1] (40:16 - 41:15)

Yes. Another thing that perhaps you could do is to point out things to him that are of intrinsic value that you cannot buy. So, for example, the natural world.

Whatever you see out in nature is of infinite intrinsic value and you can't buy it. Don't pick flowers, for example. Don't encourage him to, because that's the acquisition instinct.

The instinct to, oh, I want that for myself. Why not allow the flower to be there and enjoy it for a few seconds as you look at it? So point out things and engage in activities perhaps that involve nature and see that is of greater value than anything that you see in a shopping mall.

And it doesn't mean that you don't buy anything anymore. Occasionally, you may come across something that looks truly beautiful, that speaks to you, and you may acquire it, but it's no longer compulsive.

[Speaker 2] (41:15 - 41:22)

You say we need to honor the world of things, not despise it, but we cannot honor things if we try to find ourselves through them.

[Speaker 1] (41:22 - 41:22)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (41:23 - 41:24)

And how do we honor them?

[Speaker 1] (41:24 - 42:08)

You honor them by giving them attention. I sometimes, I have a few possessions that I love and sometimes I just hold them, look at them, they're beautiful to look at. If somebody stole them, that's fine.

Somebody else wants them more than I, it's fine, you let go. There's no identification, but there can be enjoyment in things. You can enjoy a beautiful, you might come across a beautiful picture and you buy it.

You might come across a beautiful fabric, whatever it may be, you see beauty there. And sometimes it will be enough to acknowledge beauty in a shop window and say, oh, isn't that beautiful? Of course, I don't need it.

And you walk on and you can, and that's what, there's a lot.

[Speaker 2] (42:09 - 42:10)

That's a thought I never had.

[Speaker 1] (42:11 - 42:12)

There's a lot of freedom in that.

[Speaker 2] (42:12 - 42:19)

It's beautiful, let's leave it there. I can just admire its beauty. What about that, Joyce?

It's beautiful, let's leave it in the window.

[Speaker 1] (42:19 - 42:22)

It's the same as the flower, you don't need to pick it.

[Speaker 3] (42:22 - 42:25)

That's a thought, yeah. Yeah, that's a good one.

[Speaker 1] (42:25 - 42:43)

You can walk around, occasionally I don't do it anymore, but I sometimes would enjoy walking around a few stores. Or when I lived in London, I would sometimes walk down Regent Street, all these beautiful stores. Window shop.

Window shopping, look in, oh, nice. Would I want to buy it? No.

[Speaker 2] (42:45 - 42:48)

Even if I- You can just accept that it's beautiful and let it be.

[Speaker 1] (42:48 - 42:49)

And then let it be.

[Speaker 2] (42:49 - 43:19)

Thank you, Joyce. Thank you, Joyce, so much. You talk about the illusion of ownership on page 42.

You say the ego tends to equate having with being and lives through comparison. And you use a quote from the Bible that Jesus said, blessed are the poor in spirit, Jesus said, for theirs will be the kingdom of heaven. What does poor in spirit mean?

No inner baggage, no identifications. I never knew that's what poor in spirit means. How did you come to that interpretation of what poor in spirit means?

[Speaker 1] (43:19 - 44:11)

There was a time after I went through this inner shift, it must have been three years later, I was visiting my mother and she had a New Testament on her shelf. I picked it up and I started reading. I could suddenly see the truth that was hiding there and that in many cases, the conventional interpretation was the superficial one of what Jesus had said.

And that was one of the things that I immediately saw when he said poor in spirit, I realized it's to do with not carrying stuff inside so that your spirit is very light. It has no burden. And so there were many things at that time I read and I suddenly saw, oh, he was talking about awakening and about living in that free state of consciousness.

Wonderful, suddenly to be able to read it and suddenly it all makes sense, which before hadn't made sense.

[Speaker 2] (44:11 - 44:20)

You also talk about renunciation of possessions will not automatically free you of the ego, that there are people who have renounced all possessions but have a bigger ego than some millionaires.

[Speaker 9] (44:21 - 44:21)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (44:21 - 44:30)

So if you take away one kind of identification, the ego will quickly find another. For instance, I'm a more spiritual person than you are. You see this all the time.

[Speaker 1] (44:30 - 44:32)

Yes. So it's identification.

[Speaker 2] (44:32 - 44:34)

People use their religion to say I'm better than you are.

[Speaker 1] (44:34 - 45:11)

That's right, yes. Or even an image of myself as a spiritual person. I'm more spiritual than you.

Yes. For example, there could be theoretically, you could have a man driving a Rolls Royce and then in the same street, a man riding a bicycle and it is quite possible, not necessarily, of course, it could be the other way around, but it's quite possible that the man on bicycle may have a bigger ego than the Rolls, if he thinks of himself as spiritually superior to the man in the Rolls Royce. And so the ego compares itself always to others.

Yes. In order to find some superiority somewhere.

[Speaker 2] (45:11 - 45:20)

Yes, because another favorite quote is that anytime you feel yourself superior or inferior to anybody, it is always your ego.

[Speaker 1] (45:20 - 45:53)

Yes. And that's very interesting. You can observe yourself then in many situations because the ego always looks out when you come into a group of people or you meet new people and it wants to position itself somewhere.

Am I better looking than this person? Or am I more knowledgeable than this person? Or am I more wealthy than this person?

Or is this person more wealthy than me? So it tries to position itself and that then leads either to a sense of superiority Yeah. or inferiority and both are ego.

[Speaker 2] (45:54 - 46:16)

Yes. Well, what made me also think about one of the situations in our country in particular here in the United States is that people live lives in debt. They're indebted, credit card debt, overwhelmed by debt because of what you talk about on page 46, wanting the need for more.

Wanting keeps the ego alive much more than having. Yes. Let's talk about that.

Now that's again a structure of the ego.

[Speaker 2] (46:19 - 46:19)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (46:19 - 46:43)

Because we've been talking about content and structure and one of the main structure of the ego is it is never satisfied. So for example, when you have attained a goal or attained something that you wanted. I got a nice house.

Not a nice house. Nice things in the house. And after a little while, it no longer satisfies you and that's always a sign that it was an egoic goal.

[Speaker 2] (46:43 - 46:44)

Because I now need nicer things.

[Speaker 1] (46:44 - 47:15)

Yes. And I need more square footage. Yes.

Yes. So nothing satisfies the ego for long and therefore it needs to continue to look for more. And of course, and this is to do also with the ego's need for future because it's only by attaching undue importance to the future because it's looking for more in the future moment.

It seeks to complete itself at some point and it wants to attain something in addition to what you already have.

[Speaker 2] (47:15 - 47:22)

So how do we stop that and begin to be satisfied where we are with what we have and who we are?

[Speaker 1] (47:23 - 48:32)

Well, first of all, to see the illusion of seeking fulfillment in the future. Sometimes people need to have lived for a while to see that that's actually true. Right.

That no matter what you achieve or what you attain, you're not satisfied for long. So what do we do about this? We realize that the thing that is of prime importance in our lives, we had always overlooked and that's the ego in us had always overlooked that.

And that thing that is of absolutely prime importance in our life is the present moment. The present moment is actually the easiest exit point out of the ego state of consciousness because when you're absolutely present in this moment, the ego can't survive. There's only conscious presence.

The ego lives through past and future. It identifies with the past, but it's not a very happy identity. And it looks to the future where it wants this, that or the other to complete itself.

[Speaker 2] (48:32 - 48:39)

Well, someone's asked me, what about our past memories that are pleasant? You have happy times, the pleasant memories.

[Speaker 1] (48:39 - 49:38)

Okay, and when you remember those memories, it's also the present moment. So no matter what you remember from the past, when those things happened, whether pleasant or unpleasant, did they happen in the past? That's what we say, okay, these things happened in the past, but of course they happened in the now because nothing can happen in the past.

There is only the now. And when you remember something from the past, when do you remember it? Now.

And when you think of something that may happen in the future, when do you think of that? Now. And when that thing actually happens, when does that happen?

Now. So there is no life apart from now. And that is a very important realization for people to have because the ego continuously overlooks the now.

It thinks past and future are more important. It gives much more importance to past and future. And the now is just almost as if didn't exist.

[Speaker 2] (49:38 - 49:58)

And what you're saying is that if we can learn to recondition ourselves to be present now, then we can be more alive to do whatever it is going to be in the future because even when the future gets here, it will only be now.

[Speaker 1] (49:58 - 50:04)

Yes. The now is the foundation for the rest of your life because the rest of your life will also be the now.

[Speaker 2] (50:04 - 50:11)

Got it. Madeline from Pennsylvania is 13 years old and is on the phone with a question. Madeline?

Hi. Hi.

[Speaker 1] (50:11 - 50:12)

Hello.

[Speaker 6] (50:13 - 50:28)

Hello. On page 47, at the end of the second paragraph, the sentence reads, intense wanting that has no specific object can often be found in the still-developing ego of teenagers, some of whom are in a permanent state of negativity and dissatisfaction.

[Speaker 9] (50:28 - 50:29)

Yes.

[Speaker 6] (50:29 - 50:41)

By stating this, are you implying that teenagers cannot be awakened, that although I'm reading this book, I may have no chance in reaching consciousness merely because I'm 13 and my ego is not fully developed?

[Speaker 2] (50:42 - 50:49)

Go, Madeline. Go, Madeline. I just think the fact that you could ask the question is pretty darn good.

[Speaker 1] (50:49 - 50:54)

Yes. Now, the first thing, you are more advanced than I was at 13.

[Speaker 2] (50:54 - 50:55)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (50:56 - 51:47)

Than most of us, I'd say, yeah. I would not have been able to read or understand that book when I was 13. So it certainly does not mean that you cannot be awakened because you're already awakening, because if you are not already awakening, the book would be completely meaningless to you.

Okay. So there is a new generation growing up and there are more youngsters now than before who may not have to go through the extreme egoic delusion that we had to go through in our generation and you may be one of them. It doesn't mean perhaps that your ego will not develop at all.

Your ego will develop, but I don't believe that you will be as trapped in ego as I had to be. I can't speak for Oprah. I know Oprah is fine now.

[Speaker 2] (51:47 - 51:47)

Oprah was trapped.

[Speaker 1] (51:48 - 51:49)

She was very trapped, Madeline.

[Speaker 2] (51:50 - 51:51)

She was very trapped.

[Speaker 1] (51:51 - 51:56)

So your chances are excellent. You're already awakening. It's wonderful to see.

[Speaker 2] (51:57 - 52:28)

Let me ask you this though, Madeline. When you just read us that passage at the bottom of page 47, intense wanting that has no specific object can often be found in the still developing ego of teenagers. So what you're saying there is that the ego of teenagers is still in the process of becoming.

And also, Madeline, don't you see it in your friends? This sort of intense wanting? Yeah, all the time.

Okay. So I think that's what he was talking about. Yes.

He was talking about all of your friends, but not you, Madeline.

[Speaker 1] (52:28 - 52:32)

Now, Madeline, do you detect intense wanting in yourself?

[Speaker 2] (52:32 - 52:33)

Yeah, occasionally.

[Speaker 1] (52:34 - 52:34)

Occasionally.

[Speaker 2] (52:35 - 52:35)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (52:35 - 52:40)

But you're not totally identified because you know it's there. There is an awareness there, isn't there?

[Speaker 2] (52:41 - 53:29)

Mm-hmm. Okay. Are you understanding the book, Madeline?

Yeah, it makes a lot of sense, actually. Wow. What grade are you in, actually?

I'm in eighth grade. Eighth grade, okay. Well, great to hear from you.

Thank you so much. Thank you. Keep reading.

Thank you. Thank you. That's pretty cool, isn't it?

Thirteen. I couldn't have listened. I was in so much trouble at 13.

I didn't have... Me too. Yes.

Okay. As we make our way in the world, this is from Japan, Toyohashi, Japan. As we make our way in the world, being confident, assertive, our characteristics that help us get a job, that big promotion, I realize now that these are traits that are associated with ego.

And so the question then becomes, how then does one move beyond the ego? Great question. How does one move beyond the ego?

[Speaker 1] (53:31 - 53:34)

Become aware of the ego is the first step.

[Speaker 2] (53:35 - 53:52)

But can't you still be the biggest jerk on earth and still just be aware of it and say, well, I'm a jerk. Boy, that sure is some big ego of mine. You know, you were talking earlier, I was thinking, you know, you can be in the moment, still being one of those road raging people.

Road raging jerk in the moment. What?

[Speaker 1] (53:52 - 53:59)

And aware that you are road raging jerk in the moment. It's unlikely that at that moment you are actually aware.

[Speaker 2] (53:59 - 54:00)

Really?

[Speaker 1] (54:00 - 54:08)

Because if you're aware, then you cannot be totally possessed. By? By the ego, by the form, the thought form or the emotional form.

[Speaker 2] (54:08 - 54:11)

Okay. Usually that's the pain body that's taken over.

[Speaker 1] (54:12 - 55:45)

Yes. If the dimension of awareness is present, you are not totally in the grip of ego. And so, but the quickest way out of ego is to practice as much as possible living in the present moment, which means to give more attention to this moment than to the future or the past.

To make this moment the primary factor in your life rather than future and past. Of course, you still use future and past for practical purposes. It helps to make an appointment, to go from here to there.

It's all fine. It works very well. But it means being present?

As much as possible, being open to whatever arises in the present moment. The word that I use, and I think it may be helpful for many people, is make friends with the present moment. Because the ego doesn't come to that.

The ego always is antagonistic. It wants, at best, it uses the present moment as a stepping stone because it wants to get to the next moment which promises greater fulfillment at best. But in many cases, the ego actually resists the present moment.

So if you can make the present moment into the primary focal point of your life and live, then ego will very quickly diminish in you because it cannot survive the present moment. So the ego...

[Speaker 2] (55:45 - 55:45)

That's how you do it.

[Speaker 1] (55:46 - 55:48)

That's how one moves beyond the ego.

[Speaker 2] (55:48 - 55:48)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (55:48 - 56:18)

The ego... Present. So the ego lives as if...

People who are possessed by the ego live as if the present moment were their enemy. They're stressed. They want to get somewhere else.

Whenever you need to, they're doing something, but they really already want to be at the end of their doing. Yeah. They don't want to be where they are.

They'd rather be somewhere else. They don't want to be who they are with. They don't...

There's always a striving away from now internally. Yeah. And that's, of course, the dysfunction.

[Speaker 2] (56:18 - 56:31)

I just had a moment like that today because I was waiting on somebody to get something ready and they said, sorry, we're so sorry. We're going to hurry up. We're waiting.

And I go, no. I took the lesson from the book. No, I'm just here being with myself.

[Speaker 9] (56:31 - 56:31)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (56:31 - 56:37)

Not waiting on anything because if you're waiting, you're in anticipation and you're wanting to be out of that moment.

[Speaker 1] (56:37 - 57:01)

That's right. Waiting means you don't like this moment. Right.

You'd rather have another moment. So whenever you are waiting, so to speak... Why not practice being rather than waiting?

Which means completely inhabit this moment and feel your body, perhaps. Feel the energy. And that's very pleasant to feel that you're alive.

[Speaker 2] (57:01 - 57:10)

All right. We have one last phone call. A question from Michelle in Philadelphia.

Hello. Hi, Oprah. How are you?

Hi. Good, good.

Yeah. Hi, Eckhart. Hello.

I'm just like a little bit so excited that you called me. My question was that I'm a little bit confused with chapter two. I understand the quote, if someone takes your shirt, let them have your coat as well.

But where do you draw the line without getting walked all over? I do not want to be an egotistical person, but at the same time, I don't want to get taken advantage of. Good question.

So I was having a little bit confusion with that.

[Speaker 1] (57:36 - 57:36)

Thank you.

[Speaker 7] (57:37 - 57:37)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (57:37 - 57:37)

Good, good, good.

[Speaker 7] (57:37 - 57:38)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (57:38 - 58:46)

All it says is sometimes letting go, there's more power in letting go than in clinging or hanging on to something. So there are situations when you actually become empowered when you let go rather than when you cling. It does not mean that people walk all over you.

In fact, I say there are situations when you have to say no very clearly to a situation or to a person. But even that no can be of two different kinds. Usually the no is very negative when you say no to a person.

Person says, I'll give you a ride home and you see the person is drunk. Of course, you wouldn't say yes just to be pleasant. You say no.

Now, do you say no with negative energy and in a state of resistance or do you say no that is positive where it simply means clear and straightforward? No, I won't do that. This is very different from the resistance no.

Yeah. I call that the no that is not negative, a high quality no too.

[Speaker 2] (58:46 - 58:53)

So you're saying be able to be in the state of presence and awareness so that you can surrender whatever needs to be surrendered.

[Speaker 1] (58:53 - 58:54)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (58:54 - 59:05)

That does not mean, and surrender does not mean allowing yourself to be walked over but to be fully present so that you can be conscious of what's always going on.

[Speaker 1] (59:05 - 59:05)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (59:06 - 59:20)

So it means in some cases it's fine to say, here, you want it, take it. In other cases, it's not, depending upon what the situation is. That's right.

Based upon the truth of who you are in any given moment. Yes. Yeah.

[Speaker 9] (59:20 - 59:21)

Okay.

[Speaker 2] (59:21 - 59:32)

I got that, Michelle. Thank you for asking the question. It helped me to get it.

So let's close with the piece that passes all understanding that you talk about on page 56. What is that piece?

[Speaker 1] (59:33 - 59:50)

That piece comes when you live in internal alignment with the present moment, which means what is, whatever is. When you no longer argue with what is, when you don't fight it internally, this present moment already, always is.

[Speaker 2] (59:50 - 59:52)

Even if it's a situation that you don't want.

[Speaker 1] (59:52 - 1:00:39)

Even if you don't want it, it is. You must accept it first. You accept first and then you take action.

Because that was the mud example you used last week. Yes, you get... Even if you're stuck in the mud.

This is where I am right now. I'm here. And then you take action.

But that action no longer arises out of negativity, which is there when you don't like to be where you are, when you don't like this moment. Always friendly with the present moment. Accepting the is-ness of the present moment.

Then move on from there. Then whatever action you take is actually empowered by life itself. When you're in a state of negativity or resistance, your action is not empowered by life.

So it's not inspired and much less effective than action that comes out of the state of non-resistance. Right.

[Speaker 2] (1:00:40 - 1:00:55)

Before we say goodbye, I'd like to thank you for being with Eckhart and with me. Spend this week rereading and thinking about Chapter 3. Chapter 3 is all about the core of ego.

Thank you again, Eckhart. Thank you. This is just the coolest.

Yes.

[Speaker 5] (1:00:57 - 1:01:37)

Hey, Supersolars. Looking for a great new read or listen? Well, that's why we're so excited about Oprah's new book, The Path Made Clear, Discovering Your Life's Direction and Purpose.

Hello to all you podcast listeners. We're bringing you something really special. One of the great spiritual thinkers of our time, Eckhart Tolle and I, are giving you a chapter-by-chapter class on what I believe is his groundbreaking masterpiece, Eckhart's best-selling book, A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose.

This book resonated with me in such a profound way. I truly think that it's the most important book I've ever read. It's changed the way I live my life, so much so that I always have a copy on my nightstand, because I constantly give myself a refresher course.

And now more than ever, we need to create what Eckhart calls A New Earth, inside our personal lives, in our communities, and the world. Give it a listen, and over 10 episodes, you too will be opened up and learn how to quiet your mind, get your ego in check, live a fully more present life. We're talking deep, big picture, even delving into consciousness and the reason why we're all really here.

My greatest hope is that Eckhart's quiet wisdom and patient teachings will resonate with you as they have with me. Each podcast episode will start with my conversation with Eckhart about a chapter, and then Eckhart answers questions from people who are reading along in the book. So I encourage you to get your own copy of A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose, and join us for a thrilling, enlightening, and spiritual experience.

Thanks for joining me again as we continue exploring one of my favorite books ever, Eckhart Tolle's A New Earth. Today, Eckhart and I dig into Chapter 4, and it's all about role-playing and the many faces of the ego. Shows up in lots of different ways.

Think of all the roles that you might identify with. Parent, daughter, son, perfectionist, victim, the list goes on and on. Today, we'll discover how defining ourselves by roles and labels actually feeds the ego, keeps that thing going all the time, and can keep you feeling stuck.

And if you're an animal lover like me, you're going to love what Eckhart has to say about the greatest lesson our pets can teach us. They're not just there to be pets. Big lessons there.

And here we go. Chapter 4 of Eckhart Tolle's A New Earth. Welcome, everybody, to week number four of our New Earth class.

Thank you again for joining us as we come together to study and to discuss Eckhart Tolle's A New Earth. I am just so happy that so many of you around the world are making time, you're giving time to yourself every week to be awakened, and we're all doing this together. It is really my deepest hope that our collective consciousness will begin to create a powerful transformation, not only in our individual lives, but in the future of our planet.

So welcome to you all, and welcome, sir.

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (3:14 - 3:25)

Yes. Let us begin here on Chapter 4, which is a very long chapter. Yes.

When you wrote this, you must have been at it for a while.

[Speaker 1] (3:25 - 3:33)

Yes. And in a way, it reflects all the main themes in the book that are actually already contained in that chapter. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (3:34 - 4:02)

The chapter is called Roleplaying the Many Faces of the Ego. So before we really begin, I'd like to take a moment and talk about one of the most frequently asked questions. So many people who are committed to the book and becoming aware of a new way of thinking, a new way of consciousness, want to know how they can relate to people in their lives who are not yet on this path and don't think they need to be.

[Speaker 1] (4:03 - 5:55)

Yes. The main thing is that the shift can only happen inside you. So not to expect other people to also change or to expect or say, I cannot change unless somebody close to me also changes.

The main thing is to take responsibility for your own state of consciousness and allow other people, especially people that you are close to, to be where they are. Not to demand that because something is happening inside you and you are beginning to change, not to demand that others should also change. Change does not come about in others by trying to make them change.

The most powerful way of bringing about change in others is not trying to bring about change in the other, but to completely accept the other as he or she is. So that is absolutely vital. There are even schools of psychotherapy that recognize that.

So you give the other person complete acceptance. And that's part of this change that's happening in us is that we step out of the judgmental mind that continuously judges the other. So we step out of that and if we step out of the judgmental mind, we are able to simply accept your partner, a close friend, a family member, a relative.

This is where they are at right now. They are still going through their old behavior patterns. What has changed is you are no longer resisting their pattern and reacting to, and by reacting, reinforcing their pattern.

That's right. That's right. So you're not taking part in that game anymore.

[Speaker 2] (5:56 - 6:09)

So part of your change has to be your willingness not to judge, you know, to sit back and to be an observer in your own life and then to more clearly see the ego in others as you also see it in yourself.

[Speaker 1] (6:10 - 6:10)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (6:10 - 6:11)

Don't judge it.

[Speaker 1] (6:11 - 6:11)

No.

Just know that that's what it is.

[Speaker 1] (6:13 - 6:38)

Yes. And don't mistake what you're observing, the behavior that people manifest. As them.

That's not who they are. And that's a vital distinction because if you mistake that for who they are, then you will perpetuate that kind of behavior. So that's not, it won't work.

Acceptance is vital. Acceptance.

[Speaker 2] (6:38 - 7:00)

And isn't it sort of like, I mean, all of you who've asked that question, it's kind of like when people join the church or are, quote, born again, or, you know, we've heard about being born again in the church, or you find Jesus or you find Buddha or you discover a new way of being for yourself. And now you want everybody to go to Jesus. Yes.

And you want everybody to believe what you believe.

[Speaker 1] (7:00 - 7:00)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (7:00 - 7:04)

That is part of your ego that now wants people to believe what you believe.

[Speaker 1] (7:04 - 8:00)

Yes. And so that's a trap one can fall into even with this teaching, which isn't really based on belief at all. So it's not a new belief.

We're not trying to find some new belief. It's going beyond the thinking mind into awareness. But there is always the danger when you discover something new that you want to talk about it to others.

And sometimes it works because sometimes the other person is totally ready and receptive and say, wow, I never realized that. But they recognize it from within because the readiness is there. Right.

But the readiness is not there in everybody. So some people buy copies of the New Earth or the Power of Now for their friends or relatives and then give them out. And sometimes they are disappointed when the other person says, doesn't make sense to me at all.

It means they're not yet ready. And that's fine. Maybe they put it on the shelf and maybe 10 years later, they're not ready.

It's quite possible.

[Speaker 2] (8:00 - 9:34)

Absolutely. Absolutely. We're going deeper into identifying the ego in all of its forms.

Chapter four, role playing and the many faces of our ego. Let me start by saying that I think the essence it's a long chapter, but I think that the essence of this chapter is what you say on page one hundred and four, everybody, that you are a human being. What does that mean?

Mastery of life is not a question of control, but of finding a balance between human and being mother, father, husband, wife, young, old, all roles that you play, the functions you fulfill, whatever you do, all that belongs to the human dimension. It has its place and needs to be honored. But in itself, it is not enough for a fulfilled, truly meaningful relationship or life.

Human alone is never enough, no matter how hard you try or what you achieve. I just love that sentence. I loved it so much.

I wrote, wow. Yeah, well, wow. Human alone is never enough, no matter how hard you try or what you achieve.

Then there is being. It is found in the still, alert presence of consciousness itself. The consciousness that you are.

Human is form. Being is formless. Human and being are not separate, but interwoven.

That's the essence to me of this chapter.

[Speaker 1] (9:35 - 9:40)

Yes. And one could say the essence of the whole teaching in a way. Yes.

Way of putting it.

[Speaker 2] (9:41 - 9:56)

So and of course, human alone is never enough, no matter how hard you try or what you achieve. And that is the essence of why people are in such suffering and such struggle and such angst against themselves in life, is it not?

[Speaker 1] (9:56 - 11:00)

And it's why they play roles, because the ego plays roles, because there's unawareness that within you, there is the source of all power. So people who are out of touch with the power within or the place where all power resides, the aliveness itself, consciousness itself, then they feel a sense of lack. Why are they not in touch with it?

Because they are not present. They're not in the present moment, because the present moment is the entry point into that place of power within. If you're not present, you don't realize that there is a source of power within.

And then you believe that you need to get secondary power from someone or some situation or other people. Then the ego plays roles to manipulate the environment and other people to get what it thinks it needs, not realizing that all the things that it thinks will give it the power that it seems to lack, all that is already within you if you could only be present in the now.

[Speaker 2] (11:01 - 11:11)

I got it. Okay. So the question is how not to lose ourselves in the human dimension, how not to, by being present in the now.

[Speaker 1] (11:11 - 11:17)

Yes. And by realizing that whenever you lose yourself... In the human dimension.

[Speaker 2] (11:17 - 11:21)

That's all the stuff that being human brings with it.

[Speaker 1] (11:21 - 11:49)

Yes. On the most primordial level, losing oneself means losing oneself in that continuous stream of thinking that goes through people's heads. So it drags you along.

It takes all your conscious attention. Remember, we started today with taking attention away from mind and putting it into the body. Right.

Another thing you can do is take attention away from thinking and put it into sense perceptions and really look and listen and touch things so that an alertness arises.

[Speaker 2] (11:49 - 12:12)

You know what I found by doing this? I don't know about all the rest of you, but I have found by being more present, just doing that one exercise, putting yourself, if I'm walking along a path in the woods near my house, be there and not be, you know, in my head thinking about what I need to do, just to be there. And what I found is, I don't know if you all are realizing this too, you are just less stressed.

[Speaker 1] (12:12 - 12:13)

Less stressed.

[Speaker 2] (12:13 - 12:14)

You're just less stressed.

[Speaker 1] (12:14 - 12:29)

You're calmer. Yes. And you don't carry the heavy burden of a personality or me with the burden of past and future, my problematic future, my problematic past.

You're much more, you're light and free when you walk in presence.

[Speaker 2] (12:30 - 12:35)

Then how do you ever plan for anything if you're not thinking about the future? How do you ever get anything done?

[Speaker 1] (12:35 - 12:46)

You plan in the present moment. When the time comes to plan, and the time is not when you're walking in the woods. When you're walking in the woods, the time is to be present.

Unless you want to go to the woods to plan.

[Speaker 2] (12:46 - 12:48)

You could go to the woods to plan.

[Speaker 1] (12:48 - 13:13)

You could. Yes, you could. But it's much more likely that your planning is going to be fruitful if it is preceded by a period of presence and stillness.

All right. Any mind activity is much more likely to be beneficial and to be creative if it's preceded by presence and stillness. And then you apply the mind and say, okay, what do I have to do today?

[Speaker 2] (13:13 - 13:22)

And then you make a list. So if you're going to be in the future, do that as a concentrated event or experience.

[Speaker 1] (13:22 - 13:22)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (13:22 - 13:24)

Say, now I'm going to sit and plan.

[Speaker 1] (13:24 - 14:14)

Yes. And don't think about tomorrow. Once you've done that, then you know this is what I have to do so that you're not continuously in the next moment.

You don't project yourself. You play mental movies about what you're going to say when that situation arises. So you can, you trust in life that whatever it is that you need when the future comes will be there.

So that's the, as far as practical matters are concerned, future is simply something that you use, like I call it a clock time. You make an appointment for tomorrow. And you deal with tomorrow, tomorrow.

Yes. So you don't continuously project yourself away from the now to some future believing that it's more important, going to be more important than the now.

[Speaker 2] (14:14 - 14:23)

It's not. Because what you say on page 122, anybody who is one with what he or she does is building the new earth.

[Speaker 1] (14:23 - 14:24)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (14:24 - 14:25)

That's how you do it.

[Speaker 1] (14:25 - 14:55)

Being one with what you're doing means being total in what you do so that the main focus of your attention is not where you want to get to. You know where you want to get to. Right.

But the main focus of your attention is on the actual doing now. So this is what, the energy flows fully into this. The energy doesn't, is not diverted from what you're doing now through mental dysfunction because you're wanting to get there.

Because then whatever you're doing will be stressful.

[Speaker 2] (14:55 - 14:59)

Because whatever you give your 100% attention to is going to be better anyway.

[Speaker 1] (14:59 - 14:59)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (14:59 - 15:00)

Absolutely.

[Speaker 1] (15:00 - 15:28)

There was a Zen master, he was watching somebody in a competition archery and a man was trying very hard to win this competition but he just couldn't make it. And then somebody asked the Zen master, what's he doing wrong? And the Zen master said his need to win drains him of power.

Wow. And so his need to win is some future, he wants to have some future moment where he's going to be fulfilled.

[Speaker 2] (15:28 - 15:29)

Wow.

[Speaker 1] (15:29 - 15:54)

So his attention is not totally in the now. So the now, where all power resides, this power that resides in the now cannot flow then into what you're doing. The openness isn't there.

Yeah. Because to have mastery in any endeavor, whatever it is, you need to be total in what you do. That's what athletes know, the great ones know.

And then when they enter that, they call it the zone.

[Speaker 2] (15:54 - 16:24)

Yeah. Okay. When Kadada from California was saying that as a young person, she's thinking about the future and thinking about wanting to have a career and husband and so forth, I think a lot of people felt unsatisfied by your response.

I've heard that a lot of people were like, I feel the same way Kadada feels. A lot of people are wondering where the passion goes, where the ambition goes and how you can relate passion and ambition, which is what I think Kadada was saying.

[Speaker 1] (16:24 - 16:25)

Okay.

[Speaker 2] (16:25 - 16:32)

With this new awakening. Yes. So do we now just, we're just all so awakened and that we become passive people?

[Speaker 1] (16:32 - 17:58)

No, the passion is much greater when you are totally focused on what you're doing now. The passion will become stress. The more you're focused on where you want to get to, the more the passion will degenerate into stress.

You may still have a high energy, but there's a lot of negative energy that comes in. So if you want to remain truly in your power, then you need to be total. And that applies to the smallest thing that you do during the day.

Right. Because even great endeavors consist of small steps, even the greatest thing. You are doing wonderful work, but every day that you spend consists of small steps.

One needs to be present as you are. That's where the power comes from every moment and not look to some future moment that promises some kind of greater fulfillment. That is the delusion.

It does not mean that you don't have a plan. You can plan you. I want to achieve, I want to build up a business.

I want to do this or that. But the main focus must be in the doing. And if the main focus is in the doing now, that's the passion is there and the deep enjoyment is there and an intensity of energy.

An intensity of energy. Say that again what the Zen master said that his desire to win drains him of power.

[Speaker 2] (17:58 - 17:59)

Desire to win drains him of power.

[Speaker 1] (17:59 - 18:08)

His need to win drains him of power. So the being, yeah, that's the being present.

[Speaker 2] (18:09 - 18:12)

You just focused on whatever is necessary in that moment.

[Speaker 1] (18:13 - 18:13)

In that moment.

[Speaker 2] (18:13 - 18:16)

I'm sure that struck a lot of people that that Zen master quote.

[Speaker 1] (18:16 - 18:16)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (18:17 - 18:29)

Because you're so you got to win, you got to make it, you got to succeed, you got to, got to, got to. And that's draining energy from you. Instead, we should be focused on this moment, this step, and then the next step, and then the next step.

[Speaker 1] (18:29 - 19:23)

That's right. Now, you may win if you try very hard or very stressed. Occasionally it happens that you do win, but it's not really worth it because you get more and more depleted.

And after a while you lose the, you lose the joy of life. If you spend five years of stress and finally you achieve what you wanted, is that worth it? Right.

Is there joy in what I'm doing? Is there an enliveness and intensity? That's the question people believe.

Sometimes high energy in our civilization, when there's high energy in what you do, often people believe there must be stress. They cannot imagine high energy in what you do without stress. That's how we are conditioned because we're always conditioned to look to the next thing.

But there is a much more powerful state of high energy and intensity of energy.

[Speaker 2] (19:23 - 19:25)

I was going to say where the energy is intense and focused.

[Speaker 1] (19:25 - 19:28)

No, no stress at all. No stress at all.

[Speaker 2] (19:28 - 19:53)

So let's, let's get into this chapter. You say that we can assume that the ego is at play whenever we feel superior or inferior to anyone else. Now, I, I know this is true.

When you see the person who's the biggest jerk out there, you know, people who act with such a sense of superiority and arrogance. I know that that is because they are really feeling inferior.

[Speaker 1] (19:53 - 19:53)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (19:54 - 19:55)

But still hard to deal with.

[Speaker 1] (19:55 - 19:55)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (19:55 - 20:11)

But what surprised me is that you say that often people who are also shy are also acting out of their egos. And you say whenever you feel superior or inferior to anyone, that's the ego in you. Why is that?

[Speaker 1] (20:11 - 20:23)

Well, if you're shy, then you're, you're, what I, what do you fear is to be found, uh, wanting, but so you're not, you're there.

[Speaker 2] (20:24 - 20:27)

The fear is that the attention may take the form of disapproval or criticism.

[Speaker 1] (20:27 - 21:01)

Yes. You're afraid of that. So because you're afraid of that, whatever the disapproval or the criticism would represent an injury of your mentally mind made sense of self, which is the ego.

So it was the image that I have of myself as a capable person or whatever it is that I'm trying to uphold. If I, if I encounter criticism, the ego immediately will be hurt. And so a shy person would not dare say anything because they're afraid of ego loss.

[Speaker 2] (21:01 - 21:05)

You're afraid of ego loss. Got it.

[Speaker 1] (21:05 - 21:38)

And so, because sometimes that's mistaken for an egoless person, a person who's very meek. It's not. And deep down inside the shy person or this person who is suffering from this sense of inferiority, there's the desire, the unexpressed desire to be superior.

Wow. And inside the person who acts superior, who seems to have a big confident ego, there's always the hidden fear that he might be inferior. And his whole acting out is to compensate for that hidden fear of being inferior.

[Speaker 2] (21:39 - 21:43)

Okay. Behind every positive self-concept is the hidden fear of not being good enough?

[Speaker 1] (21:43 - 21:44)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (21:44 - 21:55)

Behind every negative self-concept is the hidden desire of being the greatest or better than others? Yes. And where does self-esteem fit into all of that?

Where is real self-esteem? What would true self-esteem look like?

[Speaker 1] (21:56 - 23:08)

Well, first there is the ego self-esteem, which is really, even if you have high ego self-esteem, as we've just seen, there's always hidden fear underneath it. It's always there to compensate for that fear that you feel of not being good enough or perhaps failing. So you need to play a role of being big to compensate for the fear of failure that's deep down.

But usually the world would say he or she has high self-esteem, people who have big egos. But the world doesn't realize that that's not true self-esteem. True self-esteem goes much deeper.

It's finding the source of power and aliveness deep inside. We talked about the lake. Realizing that within the depth of your being, there is that continuous source of intense aliveness and power, which is the stillness out of which everything comes.

The potential, the unexpressed potential for all form is there within every human being. You just have to become still.

[Speaker 2] (23:08 - 23:13)

True self-esteem is realizing that that sense of being, that presence is there.

[Speaker 1] (23:13 - 23:14)

It comes out of the stillness.

[Speaker 2] (23:14 - 23:19)

It comes out of the stillness. And that presence in me is the same as the presence in all people.

[Speaker 1] (23:19 - 23:19)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (23:20 - 23:27)

And when you recognize that and act from that space within yourself, that is when you have true self-esteem.

[Speaker 1] (23:27 - 23:34)

That's true self-esteem. And self-esteem then is no longer derived from the belief that you are better than somebody else.

[Speaker 2] (23:34 - 23:42)

And so you are not attached to the labels or the roles that you play. And you speak about the many various roles that everybody has.

[Speaker 1] (23:42 - 23:56)

Yes. And then you're no longer devastated by criticism or get very angry when you're criticized, as the ego does. The ego is either totally devastated when you get, or it gets very angry when it gets criticized, the self-image.

[Speaker 2] (23:56 - 24:08)

But you know, there's a role that most women in our society, in all societies play, is that role of mother, which is a very, which is more than just a role. I mean, it's real. It's not just a role.

[Speaker 1] (24:08 - 24:08)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (24:08 - 24:09)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (24:09 - 24:55)

So we need to differentiate between the function that you need to fulfill in this world for a while. Right. So if you have a child, your function is to be the mother and to fulfill the function of being the mother, which of course is looking after the child, sometimes set limits, what the child is allowed to do and so on.

That's all fine. Now, if you become too identified with your function, then the function turns into a role. And then you cannot let go of the role.

And that gets stuck to you. And even when the child grows up and especially becomes a teenager, you still behave as if your child were small. And you still try to control and try to protect when it's no longer appropriate.

[Speaker 2] (24:55 - 24:56)

I got it.

[Speaker 1] (24:56 - 25:08)

Because you're stuck with a role then. So sometimes when the children become adults, the adult children are still treated by their parents, parents who are stuck in the role of parent.

[Speaker 2] (25:08 - 25:09)

They can't let go of the role.

[Speaker 1] (25:09 - 25:17)

Yes. So they believe unconsciously that they need to continue to protect and ultimately control what the child does.

[Speaker 2] (25:17 - 25:19)

Because you don't parent a child the same at every age.

[Speaker 1] (25:19 - 25:20)

No.

[Speaker 2] (25:20 - 25:32)

Absolutely. And so they've lost sight of the function that they had as mother to be guide and to direct and to correct and to help and to protect. Right.

[Speaker 1] (25:32 - 25:33)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (25:33 - 25:37)

And they want to carry that in to the future. Yes. Because they are attached to the role.

[Speaker 1] (25:37 - 26:08)

Yes. Okay. And it's not only when the children grow up, even when the children already are still small.

Right. If you are completely identified with this role of mother, then also it can become obsessive. So you might become too controlling or overprotective.

Certain functions become overemphasized. You go too far in fulfilling these functions. So what was good initially is looking after the child, protecting the child can become too much.

[Speaker 2] (26:09 - 26:33)

I got it. I got it. Well, let's clarify what we mean by roles.

Because I think it's confusing to some people who say, well, listen, I am a doctor. I am a teacher. I am a lawyer.

I am a store clerk. I am that. Those are labels.

And what is the difference between the job functions that we have and the so-called and roles, you know, and the roles that we play?

[Speaker 1] (26:33 - 26:46)

I met a woman, middle-aged, and she talked to me in a certain way. And I asked, are you a schoolteacher? And she said, now, how did you know that I'm a schoolteacher?

[Speaker 2] (26:47 - 26:48)

She did that?

[Speaker 1] (26:48 - 26:53)

She was, because she had already, she talks to people as if she were talking to the children at school.

[Speaker 2] (26:53 - 26:54)

OK.

[Speaker 1] (26:54 - 26:57)

So and even when she said, how did you know? She was pointing a finger.

[Speaker 2] (26:57 - 26:58)

OK, OK.

[Speaker 1] (26:58 - 27:16)

You naughty boy. How did you know that? Yes, yes.

Of course, that's how I knew it. Because she had become completely identified with her function. So the role took her over.

She couldn't leave it. She couldn't leave her function behind after work. Even inside her family, she behaved like a teacher.

[Speaker 2] (27:16 - 27:21)

You say when you adjust the way you interact based upon who you're talking to, you're playing a role.

[Speaker 1] (27:22 - 27:23)

Yes, that also.

[Speaker 2] (27:23 - 27:24)

So do we talk to everyone the same?

[Speaker 1] (27:25 - 27:31)

No, most people, if they, but you need to have some power of self-observation, which is another word for awareness.

[Speaker 2] (27:31 - 27:33)

We talk to children differently.

[Speaker 1] (27:33 - 27:33)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (27:33 - 27:35)

Friends differently than we do a head of state.

[Speaker 1] (27:35 - 27:56)

Yes, or a so-called important person and a so-called not important person. The janitor in a building different than you speak to your boss. Yes, and this is very interesting to observe in oneself because you need to observe it in yourself.

Otherwise, you won't know that you're doing it. And you can only observe it in yourself if there's some awareness there that is outside of the role.

[Speaker 2] (27:57 - 28:40)

And is this why when you go to a party or you're at an event and you don't know people, the first thing you want to know is. A friend of mine, Marlene, said to me, who is taking our class every week, hello, Marlene, that she was at a gathering recently and that she was trying to practice the principles of a new earth and that she was introducing herself around the table and she was doing that in such a way that she didn't talk about what she had done or accomplished or who she was married to or where she lived and that one of the people at the table said, well, we don't care about who you are.

We want to know what you do. We want to know what do you do. And what I realized is people want to know that so they can determine your so-called value.

[Speaker 1] (28:40 - 28:41)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (28:41 - 28:45)

And to see if you will be of value or...

[Speaker 1] (28:45 - 28:49)

Yes, perhaps that... Or necessary... Yes, perhaps...

[Speaker 2] (28:49 - 28:51)

For them to play the role with you.

[Speaker 1] (28:51 - 29:02)

Yes, enhance their ego or whether you might be a threat to their ego, whether they can use you or whether they need to be afraid of you or whether they want to have further contact...

[Speaker 2] (29:02 - 29:02)

Whether you fit in their circle.

[Speaker 1] (29:03 - 29:12)

Fit in, yes. And all these things, and then many judgments go through people's minds often when they meet somebody and they're automatic. You observe whatever...

[Speaker 2] (29:12 - 29:20)

That is what people mean by what do you do, really, isn't it? For the most part. They want to say, what do you do?

Let me place it in terms of...

[Speaker 1] (29:20 - 29:20)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (29:20 - 29:22)

How valuable that's going to be to me.

[Speaker 1] (29:23 - 29:32)

Now, when you don't play roles anymore, you don't have to become strange and then when you go to parties and somebody asks you, what do you do? You say, I have to...

[Speaker 2] (29:32 - 29:39)

I am. Yes. I am.

I am that I am. That is all that I am.

[Speaker 1] (29:39 - 29:50)

This is the basic truth, but you don't need to say that when you go to a party. You don't. You can actually talk quite normally without being identified with what you say.

If people ask me...

[Speaker 2] (29:51 - 30:09)

So that's the essence of what you're trying to say to us in this chapter, is that, of course, there are all roles that we are assigned or labels that we use to identify ourselves. What you're saying is, the problem is when you become completely identified with it. And you think that is who you are.

[Speaker 1] (30:09 - 30:22)

Yes. And you behave and act as if that were who you are. So you get trapped inside that conditioned personality.

And whatever you do, then the personality is acting out.

[Speaker 2] (30:22 - 30:33)

You mention in the book where you play the role of patient. And if you go to a doctor who's playing the role of doctor, he often doesn't see you, the person, because he's playing the role.

[Speaker 1] (30:33 - 31:02)

Yes, he has become so identified with his function that the function has taken him over and he has become a role. And many patients can actually feel that when they go to a doctor, whether there's a human being still there or whether the doctor has become a role. Absolutely.

And so when the doctor has become a role, when you go to that doctor, you don't feel acknowledged anymore in your beingness. You feel he might be very competent as a doctor.

[Speaker 2] (31:02 - 31:02)

I know.

[Speaker 1] (31:03 - 31:14)

But something vital is lacking in the interaction when you see a doctor. He might be the greatest expert in his field. It still doesn't help.

Something very vital is missing. And everybody...

[Speaker 2] (31:14 - 31:24)

And you feel completely... That happened to me recently, where you feel completely dismissed and disconnected because you're thinking, he's just trying to get me out of here so he can get the next person in.

[Speaker 1] (31:24 - 31:24)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (31:24 - 31:24)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (31:25 - 31:29)

If he does that to you, you can imagine what he does that to a normal person.

[Speaker 2] (31:29 - 31:48)

Yeah. Because usually people treat me pretty nice. But anyway, there's a question from Grayson Pleasant in California that says, since I've been an owner of a dog, I find myself so much more in the present.

My question is, why am I naturally so much more present with an animal than I'm sometimes dealing with people?

[Speaker 1] (31:48 - 32:18)

Yes. Well, the animal does not provoke thought activity because the dog is not thinking. When the dog looks at you, the dog is not thinking what kind of a person you are.

The dog is not judging you. The dog is at a state of consciousness prior to the arrival of thought. So the dog is, and that state has certain similarities with the state of presence, which is a state of going beyond thinking, where we are going.

In both cases, if you are...

[Speaker 2] (32:18 - 32:20)

So in that way, the dogs are a little more enlightened than we are?

[Speaker 1] (32:20 - 32:23)

In some ways, the dogs are more connected with being...

[Speaker 2] (32:23 - 32:24)

With being.

[Speaker 1] (32:24 - 32:26)

...than we are, than normal humans are.

[Speaker 2] (32:26 - 32:27)

Normal humans are.

[Speaker 1] (32:27 - 32:28)

And so...

[Speaker 2] (32:28 - 32:30)

Because that's where they are all the time.

[Speaker 1] (32:30 - 32:43)

Yes. I sometimes call them dogs and cats, particularly because that's the pets that are millions of humans that are very important in their lives. Right.

I call them guardians of being.

[Speaker 2] (32:44 - 32:45)

Guardians of being.

[Speaker 1] (32:45 - 33:02)

Because for many people, they fulfill that function. For many people who are so lost in their minds, so much involved in their thought processes, the only moments they have when they are not trapped in that is when they're relating to their animal, their pet.

[Speaker 2] (33:02 - 33:08)

All right. You say that the role of the parent should not be to spare children from all suffering. Why not?

[Speaker 1] (33:10 - 33:28)

Because first of all, you can't. It would be futile to even attempt. Of course, you protect the child as much as you can.

But every human being has to go through a certain amount of suffering. You cannot come into this planet and avoid suffering.

[Speaker 2] (33:30 - 33:32)

Because that's what being a human being is.

[Speaker 1] (33:32 - 33:32)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (33:33 - 33:35)

There's some discord.

[Speaker 1] (33:35 - 33:53)

Yes. And that is how we grow. If there were a human being that could have avoided all suffering, that human being would be totally superficial and totally identified with the external form of things because it's suffering that drives you deeper, drives you within where you need to find.

By suffering, do you mean not getting what we want?

[Speaker 1] (33:56 - 34:14)

Well, that's one form of suffering. Two, there are different forms of suffering. Many forms of suffering, of course, are generated by the ego itself.

These are ultimately unnecessary forms of suffering. Right. But they are necessary for as long as you are unconscious.

[Speaker 2] (34:15 - 34:18)

And another word for suffering would be challenges or difficulties, correct?

[Speaker 1] (34:19 - 34:19)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (34:20 - 34:24)

Challenges. So you can't be a human being without being challenged.

[Speaker 1] (34:24 - 35:48)

No, that would be... You would miss the whole purpose for being here. So you need to see even your children will not escape.

They will sooner or later, and usually sooner than later, they will encounter their form of suffering, whatever it is. You protect them as much as you can. But when you see certain things are inevitable, they may do things, unconscious behavior, they may generate their own suffering, self-generated, or it may happen to them from the outside.

But no matter what, it will happen. And then rather than going into intense anguish, see this is human suffering. And every human, you had to go through your forms of suffering.

In my case, for example, my parents had very heavy pain bodies. There was constant conflict at home. And that was my constant suffering.

This, of course, not only applies to children. It also applies to other people that may be close to you and going through their suffering. You do what you can to help them.

Whatever you can. The important thing is that you don't go into anguish yourself, because by going into anxiety and anguish yourself, you're not helping them at all. Because whatever state you are in transmits itself to others.

[Speaker 2] (35:48 - 35:54)

How does playing a role at work keep us from being powerful?

[Speaker 1] (35:57 - 37:03)

Well, if you play a role at work, you always have a secondary motive in what you do, because the ego is at work. You're not totally focused on the task at hand, because there is some self-interest there. You want to protect yourself.

You want to get credit for yourself. You want to perhaps eliminate other people around you, or perhaps you want to use other people. If you have a position of little power, then the ego is kind of there in potential.

It's latent as far as your work situation is concerned. The similar situation you have in certain third world countries, where often you find a revolution overthrows the government, and the people who initiate the revolution have the best intentions. They want to do away with corruption.

They want the best for their country. The moment they get into power, the latent ego in them, although they had good intentions, comes up and they repeat the same dysfunction that they wanted to do away with.

It happens all the time. All right. Shali lives in Stockholm.

I hear you have a question about raising your three-year-old daughter. Go ahead.

[Speaker 3] (37:12 - 37:55)

The question about her is, how do you stay present when you're trying to discipline your child, and she starts screaming and shouting? She's only three, so I can't really explain to her that it's really your ego that's coming out. I feel like she's learning these roles.

I guess my question is, I want to raise her as a more conscious human being. I don't want her to be awakened at the age of 35 like me. How do you raise a more conscious child, and how do you stay more conscious when you're dealing with conflict?

Because I don't want to set a negative pattern for when she's 16 and she wants to borrow the car, for example.

[Speaker 1] (37:56 - 38:17)

Yes, yes. I would suggest that you pay, first of all, pay more attention to your inner state than to what is happening to your daughter. Because I believe you experience perhaps your daughter causing you feelings of anxiety sometimes.

[Speaker 3] (38:18 - 38:19)

Yeah, right on.

[Speaker 1] (38:19 - 39:20)

You believe that? Now, that seems to be the case, that your daughter, by going through certain kinds of behavior, causes you feelings of anxiety. But ultimately, that is not the case.

You cause yourself the feelings of anxiety. When your daughter refuses to eat, she's not making you anxious. Only you can do that.

So it is vital what state of consciousness you are in, what emotional state you are in, when you are relating to your daughter. Because if you're often in a state of anxiety, you get into a vicious circle. The anxiety that you believe was caused by your daughter's behavior, but is ultimately caused by your reaction to your daughter's behavior, that anxiety then will affect her.

And that is a nervous energy field that will provoke further so-called bad behavior in her.

[Speaker 2] (39:20 - 39:27)

Because children absorb... I was going to say, a three-year-old is absorbing that and picking up that energy more than even your language.

[Speaker 1] (39:27 - 39:27)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (39:28 - 39:30)

They're picking up the energy that you carry.

[Speaker 1] (39:30 - 39:30)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (39:31 - 39:32)

Right. Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (39:32 - 39:32)

So your first...

[Speaker 2] (39:32 - 39:34)

Because that is their language.

[Speaker 1] (39:34 - 41:12)

That's right. Yeah. And so your first realization needs to...

Your first interest needs to be in any situation with your child, okay, there's the external situation, there's what the child is doing or is not doing but should be doing, or screaming or whatever it is, or not eating, not wanting to go to bed, whatever children do. But your first interest needs to be, okay, what's my inner state right now? Am I accepting this moment no matter what form it is?

What I suggest is the little mantra that I recommend is to ask yourself whether you can be there as the space for whatever your daughter does. Can I be the space for this? This is a general thing that many people will find helpful no matter what situation you go into in life, at work, at home, wherever.

The present moment, am I able to accept this moment as it is or am I saying this should be different? You should behave differently but she's not behaving differently. She's behaving the way she's behaving right now.

You need to accept that right now she's screaming if that's what she does. There it is. Can I be the space for that?

And then you see her screaming. Another, this is related to the little exercise we had earlier where you felt yourself becoming transparent to an irritating external situation so that you don't have a reactive barrier inside you.

[Speaker 2] (41:12 - 41:40)

That's hard to do though when your child is screaming because your immediate instinct I would think is to stop the child from screaming, to resist the screaming, to try to prevent more screaming and so the resistance of that, the angst and the anxiety of that creates more screaming because if you could just be calm enough to allow your calmness to then calm the child. That's easier said than done.

[Speaker 1] (41:41 - 42:33)

Yes, that's your spiritual practice. You don't need any other spiritual practice for the next few years. It's far better than going to a monastery and meditate all day long.

It's much more effective making that into your spiritual practice and then you will see as you become more peaceful and more accepting of the present moment, more being the space, then that will transmit itself to the child and affect the child and if the child will absorb your emanation, your energetic vibrational frequency and the change will happen in that way rather than feeling that I need to change her.

The change happens when you change.

[Speaker 2] (42:33 - 42:46)

Yeah, that is to prevent her but that is to not allow her to do things that are dangerous. He's not saying that but he's saying about adjusting the way you are being, capital B, with her.

[Speaker 1] (42:46 - 42:46)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (42:47 - 42:53)

Capital B. Yes. Thank you.

Thank you so much. It's a way of being. Yes.

Present.

[Speaker 1] (42:54 - 42:54)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (42:54 - 42:59)

For any situation and what you were saying is we can apply it not just to children but to all situations.

[Speaker 1] (43:00 - 44:18)

Any situation and it's usually the case that in some people's lives they have a variety of little challenges. There's other people who have one predominant difficulty in their lives whether it's another person, whether it's a health situation or whether it's a work situation or financial problem. They have one huge challenge in their lives and usually one would consider this huge challenge in your life as your greatest enemy almost, the greatest burden or as Christians would call it my cross.

To bear. To bear. Yeah.

Now this can actually be turned around and you can make that very thing that is considered your great... Your cross to bear. You can make that into your greatest help on the spiritual path because it's precisely there that if you can bring acceptance to that and be the space for that situation that is usually called...

Would usually be called bad by the mind but it is. You can't argue with that. This is the situation right now.

Can I be the space for that? Then that situation takes you into surrender and into presence.

[Speaker 2] (44:19 - 44:57)

So many people when they were first talking about purchasing this book I saw a lot of messages and people saying I hope this, you know, shows me my life purpose. I want to awaken to my life purpose and for a lot of people they want that to be something grand. They want it to be, you know, saving starving children in India and Africa.

They want it to be some, you know, great description or something. But what you're saying is that if we allow ourselves to be fully present with whatever our chosen function is in life and whatever difficulties might arise that there is sacredness in the difficulty.

[Speaker 1] (44:57 - 44:57)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (44:57 - 44:58)

If we allow it to be.

[Speaker 1] (44:58 - 45:16)

Yes. And be fully present with whatever it the situation is now. Yes.

And then go from there. So because then your inner self changes when you're fully present with the situation you're no longer putting up internal resistance to life.

[Speaker 2] (45:16 - 45:25)

Even if there is that thing that you call there's something that you call background happiness. There's something that happened or needs to happen or someone who did.

[Speaker 1] (45:25 - 45:26)

Background unhappiness.

[Speaker 2] (45:26 - 45:47)

Background unhappiness. There's something that happened he refers to that on page 114 everybody. There's something that needs to happen in my life before I can be at peace.

Something happened in the past that should not have happened. Something is happening now that should not be happening. How do we make peace with the background unhappiness of our lives?

[Speaker 1] (45:47 - 46:12)

Yes. You recognize the background unhappiness as not content based but as structural. It's the structure of the egoic mind to create that.

No matter what situation if you haven't tackled or recognized the structure of the ego in yourself as certain thought forms that repeat themselves no matter what situation you go into they will come up in some new form but basically the same structure.

[Speaker 2] (46:14 - 47:01)

I got it. I got it. The secret to happiness everybody page 115.

There are three words that convey the secret of the art of living. The secret of all success and happiness. One with life.

Being one with life is being one with now you say. You then realize that you don't live your life but life lives you. Life is the dancer and you are the dance.

I have to tell you I love this book but I was like gee I thought life was the dance and I was the dancer. And there are a lot of people who are saying the same thing. Can you explain how life is the dancer and we are the dance?

Why aren't we the dancer?

[Speaker 1] (47:02 - 48:01)

You are not separate from life. So whatever any form Life is a dancer. Life is dancing the dance of form one could say.

Every human being and everything that everything that exists is part of the dance of life. That which moves you the very consciousness that animates your being that animates every cell of your body that produces thoughts too the very consciousness that you are is the one universal the one life. And that permeates everything.

So the entire universe is permeated by that consciousness by life which is another word for God. I don't see God as an entity that is in a particular place somewhere but as the essence the intelligence the animating life essence behind all life forms. It's the eternal.

[Speaker 2] (48:02 - 48:02)

The totality.

[Speaker 1] (48:02 - 48:03)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (48:03 - 48:15)

It's the totality you see God you're saying that God is your idea of God is the totality of the essence of all life form.

[Speaker 1] (48:15 - 48:58)

Yes and ultimately you are not separate from that. It's the egoic mind that says my life. The moment you say my life you've already separated yourself from life.

It's a thought. You have a thought to say this is my life and then you think oh I can lose my life. I am not separate from life because I am life.

It's only through the structure of language that you create the illusion of separation. Mm-hmm. I see that.

The dog still knows on a primordial level the animal, the tree knows that it is one with life. So it doesn't have this fear of death and it doesn't see itself as separate from the rest of the universe.

[Speaker 2] (48:58 - 49:01)

So let me ask you the big question. You have no fear of death?

[Speaker 1] (49:02 - 49:14)

No. No. The ego has dissolved and so only the ego fears death.

I know there is no death. You know there is no death.

[Speaker 2] (49:17 - 49:19)

Okay tell me how.

[Speaker 1] (49:19 - 49:21)

I have a little thing at the end of this chapter.

[Speaker 2] (49:21 - 49:30)

I know you say the incontrovertible proof of immortality. I read that and I went okay. I read that.

I still.

[Speaker 1] (49:30 - 49:42)

I've done a little thing I did there. Usually when people talk about immortality they use certain arguments perhaps from physics. They say the energy gets never is destroyed.

Energy can only become transformed.

[Speaker 2] (49:42 - 49:43)

That's right transformed.

[Speaker 1] (49:43 - 50:21)

So the vital energy that is your life because energy cannot be destroyed must survive in some form. That's often the argument for the survival of that life. There is no death.

Only the form dissolves. That's right. That's one way you can approach it.

But what I thought I'd do I look at the structure of this sentence of language that says my life or I have a life because most people believe that they have a life and they also believe that they can lose their life. Now if you look at that sentence I can lose my life then I am separate from life.

[Speaker 2] (50:22 - 50:27)

So there is no such thing as my life you say at the end of this chapter page 128.

[Speaker 1] (50:27 - 50:44)

Because I am life. I am not separate from life. I am an expression of the one life a temporary expression in this form of the one timeless and formless life.

So I don't have a life because I am life expressing itself as this form.

[Speaker 2] (50:45 - 51:09)

Okay so what happens when you talked about your mother and father lying in the casket and you realized that the life force or formlessness that they were lying in the casket and there were these bodies but they were not there. They were not there. So we're not our bodies.

We do know that. Everybody who's reading this book knows we're not our bodies. We do get that.

[Speaker 1] (51:09 - 51:48)

Yes. And that's once you can actually sense that not just as a it's not just a belief you can also see that you're not your body even if you just approach it logically and see that when there's a dead body then the dead being is not there anymore. There's only the flesh and the bones.

Right. And when the being isn't there anymore the flesh and the bones very quickly dissolve. When the animating presence isn't there anymore all the atoms and molecules separate.

Right. And go their own way. Right.

Because the animating presence is not there anymore.

[Speaker 2] (51:49 - 52:26)

Okay. So continuing here. So there is no such thing as my life and I don't have a life.

I am life. I and life are one. It cannot be otherwise.

So how could I lose my life? How can I lose something that I don't have in the first place? How can I lose something that I am?

It is impossible. So what is happening here is I just got it. Hello, hello, hello.

I got it. We are confusing the I am life force with our bodies. Yes, yes.

We're confusing that.

[Speaker 1] (52:27 - 52:28)

Yes, that's right. That's right.

[Speaker 2] (52:29 - 52:50)

So when this dies and becomes the shell and dissipates and the atoms go wherever they go back into the ground, ashes to ashes, dust to dust we are confusing that which is the physical form. The human. We're confusing that with the being.

Yes, that's right. And they are separate.

[Speaker 1] (52:51 - 53:05)

Yes. So another way if you don't like the word life you can say the universe. People believe that I am here and there's the rest of the universe.

And they believe I have come into this universe. They don't know from where.

[Speaker 2] (53:06 - 53:06)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (53:06 - 53:59)

I've come into this universe. It would be more appropriate to feel that you have come out of this universe because you are this universe experiencing itself very briefly. I got that.

And so it wants to do that. Ooh, I got that, I got that, I got that. It's wonderful when you realize there's more to you than a person.

You are the universe. Expressing itself. Yes, and experiencing.

As a human. As a human. Called Eckhart.

Yes, for a little while. For a little while. And then it goes through other experiences.

And then where do we go, Eckhart? Could you tell us that? Well, let's see what happens.

Otherwise you take the fun out of it. If you knew the rest of your life already the fun would be taken out of it.

[Speaker 2] (53:59 - 54:27)

Oh, okay, all right. Well, before we say goodbye, I know there's lots we did not get to in this chapter. We could have spent, you know, two or three weeks on this one chapter.

But what would you say is the essence of this chapter? The essence of this chapter? Yeah, the role-playing chapter.

What I said in the beginning, that we're humans and beings. And in this body trying to live through the two.

[Speaker 1] (54:27 - 55:01)

Yes, it's balancing the human and the being. So that you can be function in this world of form, where you have to do things and fulfill your function. At the same time not lose yourself in that.

Be rooted in the depth of being. So that you're not lost in form. So there's a depth to you and rootedness in that stillness, that aliveness.

And then from there you function out here. And there's always then a peace in the background. A peace in the background.

No matter what's happening out there.

[Speaker 2] (55:01 - 55:12)

And most particularly not to be attached to, defined by the roles that we play in life and realize what they are. Just roles.

[Speaker 1] (55:12 - 55:12)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (55:13 - 55:13)

Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (55:13 - 55:23)

And relinquish the role when it's not required anymore. When your children grow up, you don't need to be a mother or father. You don't need to play that role anymore.

[Speaker 2] (55:23 - 55:29)

See, so many people think that that is who they are. And so when their children grow up, they don't know who they are anymore.

[Speaker 1] (55:29 - 55:33)

Yes. Can be a crisis or people retire. That's right.

They had identified...

[Speaker 2] (55:33 - 55:34)

They were their job.

[Speaker 1] (55:34 - 55:36)

Yes. And then who am I?

[Speaker 2] (55:36 - 55:39)

Yeah. You were talking about in Japan where it used to be you kept your job for life.

[Speaker 1] (55:40 - 55:40)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (55:40 - 55:44)

And you were sharing with us the last time about a man who committed suicide.

[Speaker 1] (55:44 - 55:53)

But there's been many cases of people in Japan who lost their jobs and committed suicide. Because they were so identified. Their company was their sense of self.

[Speaker 2] (55:55 - 56:33)

Well, fascinating. I want to thank all of you around the world for making this... This is really a remarkable experience for making it possible.

Tell all your friends, share the book with them. If they say, I don't get it, that's okay. That's really okay.

That's okay. They'll have the book and maybe pick it up a year from now, two years from now, 10 years from now. Next week, it's the chapter many of you've been waiting for.

Chapter five, the pain body. The pain body. If you feel burdened by your past, begin to learn how to lighten that load.

That's going to be really very exciting. This was fun.

[Speaker 4] (56:34 - 57:14)

Hey, Super Solars. Looking for a great new read or listen? Well, that's why we're so excited about Oprah's new book, The Path Made Clear, Discovering Your Life's Direction and Purpose.

Oprah has collected all of the lessons she's learned from thought leaders like Eckhart Tolle and Brene Brown and innovators like Jay-Z and Lin-Manuel Miranda, who all understand what it means to achieve the life of your dreams. The Path Made Clear is available now on Apple Books, Amazon, Audible, and at your local bookstore. It really is a game changer for anyone seeking to discover their true calling and start living it.

[Speaker 2] (0:00 - 3:05)

Hello to all you podcast listeners. We're bringing you something really special. One of the great spiritual thinkers of our time, Eckhart Tolle and I, are giving you a chapter-by-chapter class on what I believe is his groundbreaking masterpiece, Eckhart's best-selling book, A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose.

This book resonated with me in such a profound way. I truly think that it's the most important book I've ever read. It's changed the way I live my life, so much so that I always have a copy on my nightstand, because I constantly give myself a refresher course.

And now more than ever, we need to create what Eckhart calls A New Earth, inside our personal lives, in our communities, and the world. Give it a listen, and over 10 episodes, you too will be opened up and learn how to quiet your mind, get your ego in check, live a fully more present life. We're talking deep, big picture, even delving into consciousness and the reason why we're all really here.

My greatest hope is that Eckhart's quiet wisdom and patient teachings will resonate with you as they have with me. Each podcast episode will start with my conversation with Eckhart about a chapter, and then Eckhart answers questions from people who are reading along in the book. So I encourage you to get your own copy of A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose, and join us for a thrilling, enlightening, and spiritual experience.

Welcome to class number three of Eckhart Tolle's magnificent book, A New Earth. I got to tell you, this is my first favorite chapter. I have lots of favorite chapters, but this is my first favorite chapter.

So this is what I believe, if you didn't read another page, that if you just read chapter three in this book, it could really transform your life. So today, we continue our discussion of the ego with chapter three. It's called The Core of the Ego.

Eckhart is going to talk more in depth about what activates the ego, how to become more aware of the ego, and above all, how we can transcend it. I mean, you really can learn to stop it in its tracks for yourself, and also become so aware when it's showing up in other people. So onward to chapter three.

Transformational it is. Again, I thank you, Eckhart Tolle, thank you for joining us. Today's lesson, chapter three, beginning on page 59, The Core of the Ego.

Most people are so completely identified with the voice in the head, the incessant stream of involuntary and compulsive thinking, and the emotions that accompany it, that we may describe them as being possessed by their mind. My question to you, if we are not that constant stream of thinking, then who are we?

[Speaker 1] (3:08 - 3:18)

Now, that question usually would be answered by the mind, by giving some kind of concept of who we are. Now...

[Speaker 2] (3:18 - 3:31)

Yes, I am female, I am African American, I work on TV, my mother was, my mother is, I live at, my job is. Yes. That's how most people, if you say, who are you?

[Speaker 1] (3:32 - 5:36)

Yes. But beyond that, because concepts refer to who we are temporarily in the world of form. You're a mother, you're a father, you have a certain profession, you belong to a certain race, you're a man or a woman, nationality, all these things.

Now, when you ask, who are we beyond that? There is no conceptual answer to that, that would, no conceptual answer would be absolutely correct. We can give little hints.

We can say, we are the formless consciousness behind all that. We are that which cannot be defined through concepts or words. So, knowing who you are is not, does not mean that suddenly you have some new idea in your head and say, oh, now let me tell you who I am, I've discovered who I am.

You get closer to knowing you, who you are, if you come to a stage where you have that feeling, and I mention it in the book somewhere, when people tell me, I don't know who I am anymore, because they have realized who they are not. They are ultimately not their profession, they are not whatever function they fulfill, they are not their nationality. So, they're beginning to realize that's not really who I am, but then they enter the unknown and say, well, if I'm not, now I'm no longer sure who I am.

And I always congratulate people when they say, I'm not sure who I am anymore. I say... Well, that usually connotes confusion.

Confusion, if you still want to know who you are, but if you can become comfortable with not knowing who you are, with not defining yourself to yourself or to others, mainly to yourself, because the ego is constantly a self-definition to remind yourself who you are, you remember your story of your past, and so on. You have opinions about yourself, and so this is the self-definition.

[Speaker 2] (5:37 - 5:43)

But don't we obviously need the ego, Eckhart? Don't we obviously need it? Otherwise, why would we have it?

Why wouldn't we have evolved past it?

[Speaker 1] (5:44 - 6:50)

We're doing that now. So, it's been a stage in the evolution of consciousness, a necessary stage in the evolution of consciousness. For survival.

Yes. Because? The ego arose because we started to think.

So, the ability in humans, suddenly humans developed the ability to differentiate and to think. To me, the beginning of the Old Testament really describes the beginning of the ability to think, because what it says in the Old Testament is, they ate of the fruit of the knowledge of good and evil, the ability to say, this is good, this is bad, to differentiate, starting to think. So, the ability to think arose in our species, which was a wonderful thing on the one hand, but over many, many millennia, hundreds of thousands of years, more and more, our original sense of connectedness with life and with being, which the natural world still has.

Animals still have that. They live in a state of natural connection.

[Speaker 6] (6:50 - 6:53)

Some cultures did. Some of ancient cultures. Native Americans.

That's right.

[Speaker 1] (6:53 - 7:52)

They still have that. A sense of being rooted, being comfortable in your own skin, being rooted deeply within and feel that sense of oneness with the totality of life. Oneness with life itself.

And so, we had, humanity had that once, and as you say, some ancient cultures, perhaps there's still remnants of ancient cultures, and they still have that. But humans, as they went into more and more thinking and differentiation, they gradually, their sense of self gradually moved from the center of their being, which I would describe as their heart or the solar plexus, into their mind. Into their mind.

And they, more and more, they began to identify with the movement of thought. And gradually, out of this continuous identification with the movement of thought, a thought-made entity was produced, which is the ego.

[Speaker 2] (7:53 - 7:56)

Yeah. Which is what you're saying is being possessed by our mind.

[Speaker 1] (7:56 - 7:56)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (7:56 - 8:11)

Okay. By being possessed by our mind. Okay.

You say this is the egoic mind, and we call it egoic because there's a sense of self, of I, in every thought, every memory, every interpretation, opinion, and so forth. And this is unconsciousness, spiritually speaking.

[Speaker 1] (8:11 - 8:36)

Yes. Because you identify with thought rather than being, identifying with your inner essence, which is what we lost, which is the state of Eden or Paradise, as it's described in the Bible. We lost that.

And it's not only in the Bible. There are many ancient cultures where they speak of the golden age that we lost in many different cultures.

[Speaker 2] (8:36 - 8:47)

And you say egos are all the same on the surface. They differ only on the surface. Deep down, they're all the same.

Yes. Okay. Now, Chapter 3 is all about the core of the ego, what makes it thrive.

[Speaker 7] (8:48 - 8:48)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (8:48 - 9:04)

And you say that what we react to in another, we strengthen in ourselves. Can you give us an example of that? One of the things the ego needs to survive is reacting against other people.

What you react to in another, you strengthen in yourself, you say.

[Speaker 1] (9:04 - 9:41)

Yes. That's usually what we react to most strongly in others. And what we most strongly condemn in others is usually something that we also have, a trait that we also have, but that we are unconscious of in ourselves.

So when we, for example, we become upset if we encounter somebody who is very greedy, or we could become upset about somebody who is dishonest, no matter who, the force of your reaction usually tells you that something in you that you need to look at.

[Speaker 2] (9:41 - 9:45)

Really? All the time? All the time?

[Speaker 1] (9:46 - 9:55)

Well, it's for you to find out, or anybody to find out in their own lives. When you react strongly, have them become alert and have a look inside.

[Speaker 2] (9:55 - 10:05)

Okay. You say complaining is one of the ego's favorite strategies for strengthening itself. Every complaint is a little story the mind makes up that you completely believe in.

[Speaker 1] (10:06 - 10:33)

Yes. Now, that's a very common thing, and perhaps until people begin to become more aware... And some egos survive on complaining.

Some egos who haven't got much else to identify with, they can survive on complaining alone. So then continuously you are condemning other people, you're continuously criticizing, condemning, or judging negatively situations that you're in, your surroundings, other people.

[Speaker 2] (10:34 - 10:38)

So the ego is the identification with those thoughts. It's not necessarily the thought.

[Speaker 1] (10:38 - 10:43)

No. It's the thing that you become those thoughts.

[Speaker 2] (10:44 - 10:44)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (10:44 - 10:47)

There's no space between you and the thought. Got that.

[Speaker 2] (10:47 - 10:53)

Okay. All right. So name-calling is also a form that the ego defines itself.

[Speaker 1] (10:53 - 11:50)

Yes. And that, of course, one could say, well, it's relatively harmless. On one level, it's relatively harmless to call a person this or that, to attach a label to a person.

But if you follow this up to see, you can actually see how dreadful it is to label another human being or another group of human beings. Because once you have labeled, you've attached a mental label to another human being, you have desensitized yourself to the aliveness and the humanity of that other human being, because you're relating now to a label. So if you say, he's a, whatever it may be, he's a communist, he's this, he's that, any label, and immediately, instead of sensing the aliveness of that human being and have some empathy with that, you have cut yourself off and you have a label.

[Speaker 2] (11:50 - 12:05)

In chapter four, you talk about that, that role-playing, how we do it in temporary ways. I'm the person who's going in the store, I'm the customer, and there's the clerk, the person who labels himself the clerk, and I'm the customer. There's a certain defined behavior that we have.

[Speaker 1] (12:05 - 12:12)

And then when it's done collectively, the labeling, when an entire nation labels another nation in a certain way.

[Speaker 2] (12:12 - 12:14)

Yeah, or I'm the boss and you're the janitor.

[Speaker 1] (12:14 - 12:33)

Yes. Or you're my subordinate. Yes.

All these are forms of mental labeling. So any kind of mental label that you're completely identified with desensitizes you to the humanity and then of the other human being. And then all kinds of things are possible, even violence becomes possible.

[Speaker 2] (12:33 - 13:30)

I got it. Everybody, I just got this. You got this.

What you're saying here is you're labeling people as he's a jerk or he's a whatever. Once you start doing that, you become desensitized to who they really are in the same way that you were when you were labeling things in nature. But okay, we were talking earlier about the ego loves complaining.

First of all, loves to believe, loves to identify with the thoughts in the head and believe those thoughts. And loves to complain. But aren't there some things legitimately worth complaining about?

You know, anybody who's ever gone into a house construction at some point or another is told a story by the construction workers, unless you have the most amazing, you know, that this is going to be finished at a certain time or it's going to be a certain price. And then it often doesn't turn out to be what you expected. That's a complaint a lot of people have.

Isn't that legitimate?

[Speaker 1] (13:31 - 13:31)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (13:31 - 13:34)

Like you talk in the book about how my soup is cold.

[Speaker 1] (13:34 - 13:36)

Yes. In a restaurant.

[Speaker 2] (13:36 - 13:39)

Yeah, in a restaurant. My soup is cold. Sometimes your soup is cold.

[Speaker 1] (13:39 - 13:52)

That's right. So first of all, the complaining that we are talking about, mainly here, the egoic complaining, most of that fulfills no real purpose because it's not meant to bring about change in any situation.

[Speaker 2] (13:52 - 13:54)

Okay. That's complaining and resentment complaining.

[Speaker 1] (13:54 - 14:18)

Yes. And a lot of it for many people happens only in the head. Sometimes they verbalize it also.

But a lot of the complaining happens in the head alone. But no matter whether they verbalize it or whether the complaining happens in the head alone, in probably 90% of cases, it has no real purpose because it's not meant to bring about change. It's meant to strengthen the ego.

[Speaker 2] (14:18 - 14:19)

I see that.

[Speaker 1] (14:19 - 15:11)

And then, of course, as there are situations, of course, where something needs to be said in order to bring about change in the situation. And that's a completely different kind of complaining where you say something so that change can happen. For example, the cold soup in the restaurant, you say, the soup is cold.

Please bring me hot soup. That's fine. You could call that also complaining.

And there are also two ways of, as far as this kind of complaining is concerned, it is connected to a real situation that is meant to bring about change. There's one way of complaining with ego in that situation also. And that is when the ego is attempting to make somebody wrong.

A personal element comes into it, and it's a negativity that flows into it.

[Speaker 2] (15:11 - 15:14)

To make somebody wrong because my soup is cold.

[Speaker 1] (15:14 - 16:03)

Yes. Damn it. That's right.

You're personalizing it. And so you're making another person almost, one could say, into an enemy. Right.

Complaining that way. So whether it's somebody who is a builder, who is working on your home. And so there is a way of complaining.

I wouldn't even perhaps call it complaining, of simply stating what the situation is. Stating the facts. Yes.

Without the negativity that flows into it when the ego does it. And so that can be practiced. And whatever you are stating in order to bring about change is actually going to be much more effective if it's done without the negativity.

Because if it comes with negativity, it provokes a negative reaction in the other. And so the whole situation then becomes a conflict situation.

[Speaker 2] (16:03 - 16:27)

As you say, see if you can catch, that is to say, notice the voice in the head. Perhaps, I'm on page 64 everybody, second paragraph. Perhaps in the very moment it complains about something, recognize it for what it is, the voice of the ego.

And then later you say, the moment you become aware of the ego in you, this is mid-paragraph, it's strictly speaking no longer the ego, but just an old conditioned mind pattern.

[Speaker 1] (16:27 - 16:47)

Yes. Because ego means you're not aware of it. So ego means unconsciousness.

So a good thing that people can ask themselves when they become aware of this complaining voice in the head or the verbalized complaining voice, is this meant to bring about change in the situation? And if they look at it clearly, often they will say no.

[Speaker 2] (16:47 - 16:54)

No, it's just hearing myself complain because it keeps fueling my sense of righteousness and rightness.

[Speaker 1] (16:54 - 17:02)

And what the complaining voice also loves is to get confirmation from somebody else that, yes, you're right to complain. So then two people join.

[Speaker 2] (17:02 - 17:03)

Oh, yeah.

[Speaker 1] (17:03 - 17:06)

And then you just fuel it on and on and on and on.

[Speaker 2] (17:06 - 17:06)

I love it.

[Speaker 1] (17:07 - 17:07)

That's right.

[Speaker 2] (17:07 - 17:12)

Doris from outside of London, England. Doris, what's your question? Hello.

[Speaker 5] (17:13 - 17:41)

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Eckhart. The book resonated very deeply within me, I must say.

And reading on page 62, the first paragraph, resentment is the emotion that goes with complaining. It started a question within me and I thought like, but where do hurt feelings belong to? Is this something that my ego tells me to feel or where do they come from, Eckhart?

[Speaker 1] (17:41 - 17:50)

Can you give a situation, an actual situation? It's always easier to talk about this when you can look at an actual situation where, for example, you experience...

[Speaker 5] (17:50 - 18:11)

Hurt feelings, you know, can have most of the time is some outside. Either way, somebody is telling you something that hurts you personally. But what about sadness?

You know, you lose a person or, you know, hurt feelings come from many different sources. Where do they come from? How do they relate to the ego?

[Speaker 1] (18:11 - 18:49)

Thank you. Okay. So often it happens that even let's say somebody criticizes you and you feel hurt because perhaps you were attached to what you were doing and you hurt.

Now, what is it in you that feels hurt? And yes, it is the ego that feels hurt. And so when that happens, all you do is first of all, you can't say, oh, I shouldn't be feeling hurt and I shouldn't have an ego.

It doesn't work. You simply accept that this is what you are feeling right now and you recognize what it is in you that is producing.

[Speaker 5] (18:50 - 18:51)

Okay, just take it in.

[Speaker 1] (18:51 - 19:36)

It's a mental image of yourself that has become hurt because most people think of themselves as good people. And if somebody says you're no good, immediately something feeds. And many people get extremely angry.

They're not only hurt for many people that immediately turns into anger. And so the ego wants to immediately defend itself, even driving in traffic. Let's say you're driving and another driver suddenly calls you idiot.

That hurts on one level. It hurts. It hurts the ego.

And usually immediately the ego goes into self repair mode, as I call it, and will shout something back in order to repair itself.

[Speaker 2] (19:36 - 19:54)

But I'm laughing at you because I mean, I'm thinking if somebody calls me an idiot, I was one. Somebody gave me the finger once and I was like, gee, that's gave me the finger. But I don't think I don't remember being hurt about it.

I was so stunned by it.

[Speaker 1] (19:54 - 19:56)

But but but many people would be hurt.

[Speaker 2] (19:57 - 19:57)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (19:57 - 19:58)

But you were not because you were.

[Speaker 2] (19:59 - 20:01)

I thought what a bad day he's having.

[Speaker 1] (20:01 - 20:08)

Yes. You were in touch with a deeper level of yourself where nothing is hurt. Yeah.

You can't be hurt.

[Speaker 2] (20:08 - 20:19)

Or when I used to take taxis all the time, when I'd have a taxi driver in a really bad mood, the worse he if he was in a horrible mood, I would tip him double extra so that he'd be nicer for the next person.

[Speaker 1] (20:20 - 20:20)

Really?

[Speaker 2] (20:21 - 20:21)

That's a good one.

[Speaker 1] (20:22 - 20:55)

Even there's a story about an official in Japan, a high government official, went to see a

Zen master and he asked the Zen master, can you explain to me what the self is? Self really means ego because there's talk about the self in Buddhism. Can you explain to me what the self is?

And the Zen master said, what a stupid question is that? Why are you asking such stupid questions? And immediately the the government official said, how dare you talk to me like that?

Don't you know who I am? And the master said, that's the ego. That's the ego.

[Speaker 2] (20:56 - 20:57)

All right.

[Speaker 1] (20:57 - 21:05)

Got it. Got it. Now, this this person got hurt.

But in him, he immediately the hurt turned into.

[Speaker 2] (21:05 - 21:08)

So anytime you have hurt feelings, that is your ego.

[Speaker 1] (21:08 - 21:08)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (21:09 - 21:49)

OK. Now you say here also, Doris, on page sixty five, he says a longstanding resentment is called a grievance. To carry a grievance is to be in a permanent state of against.

And that is why grievances constitute a significant part of many people's ego. Collective grievances can survive for centuries in the psyche of a nation. We know that or tribe and fuel a never ending cycle of violence.

And so I guess all of us need to ask, what are the grievances that we allow ourselves to carry? Yeah. Family grievances.

Families that carry on. And you don't even forget why you're carrying the grievance.

[Speaker 1] (21:49 - 21:58)

Yes. Personal grievances, family grievances, grievances between tribes, religious groups, nations and so on. Dreadful.

[Speaker 2] (21:59 - 22:06)

And so are you saying no grievance has a justification that all grievances are based in the as the core of the ego?

[Speaker 1] (22:07 - 22:16)

It's an essential part of the ego to hold grievances. The ego keeps itself alive. That's one of the ways in which the ego keeps itself alive.

[Speaker 2] (22:17 - 23:14)

You also say on page sixty six here, Doris, don't try to let go of the grievance. Trying to let go to forgive does not work. Forgiveness happens naturally when you see that it has no purpose other than to strengthen a false sense of yourself.

Forgiveness happens when you realize that being resentful is only to build up your ego. But that resentment is only helping you carry around this false sense of who you are. I got that.

I got that. You got that, Doris? Yes, I got it, too.

Yes. Thank you very much. You got it, too.

Good. All the way in London. Thank you very much.

Thank you. Thank you. You say ego takes everything personally.

Back to what Doris was saying earlier. Ego takes everything personally. Emotion arises, defensiveness, perhaps even aggression.

Are you defending the truth? No, the truth in any case needs no defense.

[Speaker 1] (23:14 - 23:52)

Yeah. Yes. So when people argue, usually an argument, often arguments turn into violence.

If people are very unconscious, and many of you still are, arguments turn into violence. So when people argue about something, usually what happens is they are so identified with their opinion. Of being right.

Yes, being right, their mental position, that any questioning of their mental position, of their opinion, or their viewpoint, is regarded as an attack on them. Yeah. And this is how the ego gets confused with who you are.

[Speaker 2] (23:52 - 24:56)

You know, I will tell you a funny story that I was reading this book, and Stedman and I were at dinner, just the two of us, talking about what are the most important questions in life. And I said, I believe one of the most important questions in life is to believe whether the universe is compassionate or not compassionate. And he said, well, I disagree with you.

I think the most important thing is whether or not you know how to work on your strengths. And I go, well, that's ridiculous, because the most important thing is, do you believe that the universe is compassionate? So we're arguing about whether or not the universe is compassionate or not compassionate.

And he didn't agree with my view. And I said, well, you know, I know I'm right. I ended up clearing the table, leaving the table, and going upstairs, because I don't want to have the conversation anymore.

And, you know, a half an hour passes, he comes up and he says, OK, you're right. You're right. And I go, never mind.

I don't need to be right. I don't need to be right. And then I realized that, yes, that is exactly what happened.

My ego is arguing because it is defending its right to be right.

[Speaker 1] (24:56 - 25:03)

Yes. Identification with a mental position, with a concept in the head. Yes.

Can happen so easily. Right.

[Speaker 2] (25:04 - 25:08)

And we're talking about compassionate issues. Yes. Or non-compassionate issues.

[Speaker 1] (25:08 - 25:08)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (25:08 - 25:20)

Yeah. Well, my friend, Kadada Jones, who I was at her father's birthday party, and we started talking about A New Earth. And she had so many questions.

And here you are. Hello, Kadada.

[Speaker 3] (25:20 - 25:48)

Hi, Ocard. Hi, Oprah. How are you?

Hi. And your question? OK, my question is, this book hits me really, really deep in my heart.

And I know it to be the truth, but I have such resistance. And I feel like if everything in form is an illusion, it feels really disenchanting. And I'm at a point in my life where I have goals.

I'm excited about my career. I want to have kids. I want to meet a great partner.

And if it's all illusion, where's the fun?

[Speaker 1] (25:50 - 25:50)

There's...

[Speaker 3] (25:50 - 25:50)

Is that my ego?

[Speaker 1] (25:51 - 27:01)

You are not meant to believe that all is illusion. You're at a stage in your life where you can simply enjoy the play of form. Eventually, you will come to a point, as every human does, where the forms in your life are no longer completely satisfying.

They leave a certain emptiness. They leave a frustration. But you haven't reached that point yet.

That's fine. In the meantime, you enjoy your life. Be as present as you can, which means don't project yourself continuously into some future moment that promises more and greater fulfillment.

If that happens, and if you can't help it, that's fine too. But why not enjoy this moment as it is? Really, that's all you can do.

This is not to take the joy out of life. It's to really deepen the way in which you live, rather than living on the surface of things and expecting fulfillment through relatively superficial things, going deeper to a place where true joy resides.

[Speaker 2] (27:01 - 27:15)

WINFREY. I know. I think that's a good question, though, that you raised, Kodada.

Especially, I've heard this from a lot of people your age who say, so now where's ambition? Ambition is ambition my ego? Good question.

[Speaker 3] (27:15 - 27:33)

You want to hit career strides. You want to see things happen. You're excited to meet somebody.

You're going to have a baby that you're going to be madly in love with. And then I hear Eckhart's voice. And I have to remember my ego, remember that it's form.

And it just kind of makes me feel a little unexcited. But I guess it's about being in the moment.

[Speaker 1] (27:34 - 28:31)

No, there comes a point when you can see the truth of this very clearly in your own life. Until you can see the truth of it very clearly in your own life, the book remains on the conceptual level. And so I wouldn't say that there's anything in the book that you should believe in.

If the book works for you, the truth of it is immediately recognized. There's a sense of, ah, yes. But at 20, I would not have understood the truth in this book.

I had ambitions. I wanted to become a great professor. I wanted to be seen as to be successful.

I wanted to show to the world that I can make it. So I was working hard. If at that point I had read this book, I would have said the same as you.

I don't want this right now. I don't need this. The book really, as long as you feel that you don't really need it, it's fine.

You should carry on with what you're doing.

[Speaker 2] (28:31 - 28:33)

I don't even hear a saying, she doesn't need it. I think.

[Speaker 3] (28:33 - 29:01)

I totally need it. I totally know that this book is real and true. It's really, really, really important for me to figure out how to integrate consciousness into this next chapter.

I want to approach it in a very conscious way. But there's still probably a little part of me, a lot of part of me, that's gripping on to the form. I live in Los Angeles.

I'm in a business where form is at the forefront. It's kind of a hard balance. I'm just wondering how do you reap the fruits and not identify to the form?

[Speaker 1] (29:01 - 29:38)

Yes, forms, you can enjoy the forms and you can really only truly enjoy the forms if you are not completely identified with the forms. Because if you are completely identified with the forms, there's always an element of fear that the form might leave you, the situation that you have, whatever the form might leave you or it will suddenly, the form will no longer be satisfying. So it's the attachment to the form doesn't really mean that you enjoy it.

The attachment to the form produces negativity and produces fear around it, around your life situation.

[Speaker 2] (29:38 - 29:50)

It's doing, Kadada, what I said, I think, on an earlier class, it's like, especially in Los Angeles, you know, great fun, fun city, City of the Angels there. It's like being able to be in the world, but not of it.

[Speaker 1] (29:51 - 29:53)

Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (29:53 - 29:55)

In the world, but not of it.

[Speaker 1] (29:55 - 30:22)

Yes. And a lot of that, the attachment is less likely to be there. The more present you are with any life experience, the more present you are in the moment, then you are not, you're not attached.

The attachment needs future, needs more, looks to the future, either as a threat or hope. So be as present as you can in every situation in your life, in every moment in your life.

[Speaker 2] (30:23 - 30:34)

And what you were talking about, I think in one of the future chapters about being able to be present with your children instead of just sort of going through the motions with your children, being present with your children. Hey, Kadada.

[Speaker 3] (30:34 - 30:35)

Thank you for having me.

[Speaker 2] (30:36 - 31:00)

Okay. This is Melissa from Crab Orchard, West Virginia. She says she's being awakened with worry.

My sister's addicted to drugs. She's been through rehab to no avail. Every day we worry about her.

We fear she may die if she continues. My question is this, how can we live, awaken with this major, major distraction in our lives? That's good.

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (31:01 - 33:53)

Well, the first thing you need to take responsibility for your own life and your own state of consciousness, rather than thinking your primary responsibility is your sister's life and your sister's state of consciousness. That's not the case. You have to start with yourself.

Change can only begin with yourself. So are you taking responsibility for your own state of consciousness rather than believing unconsciously that, of course, you're worried and there's nothing else you can do? You have to look at what you call the worry in yourself, the continuous mind activity that dwells on negativity.

See if you can enter that state of acceptance or presence and just be with yourself. I recommend to get out of the mind, go into the body several times a day and connect with the feeling of aliveness within. For yourself.

So that the worry, the worry pretends, worry is part of the ego. It's the compulsion to think incessantly and it serves no purpose because it doesn't get you anywhere. It's similar to the complaining.

It has no useful purpose. It doesn't bring about change in any situation. No matter how much you worry, it's never the worry that brings about any change in the situation.

The mind may tell you you need to worry because it has some purpose. It doesn't. So the essential thing is that you get out of that unconscious habit of continuous worrying.

So find a little bit of peace in yourself first to start with, and it may be more than a little bit of peace, but start with a little. Is there any peace in you underneath this continuous mental noise that we call worry? Is there anything else in you?

And you have to find that you can only be of true service to your sister, you can only truly be an agent for change in this world if something has changed in your state of consciousness. Otherwise you contribute to the turmoil. So find through meditating, through bringing awareness to the present moment as much as possible, through bringing awareness into the inner body, as much as possible get out of the mind and enter presence and realize the mind may tell you you're not helping your sister.

This is the beginning where you may be able to truly be of help to somebody else.

[Speaker 2] (33:53 - 33:55)

Because the only thing you can do is really help yourself.

[Speaker 1] (33:55 - 33:56)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (33:56 - 33:56)

That's right.

[Speaker 1] (33:57 - 33:57)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (33:57 - 33:59)

But the mind tells you I have to save my sister.

[Speaker 1] (34:00 - 34:00)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (34:01 - 34:04)

And that's the... And what you're saying is that is not necessarily true.

[Speaker 1] (34:04 - 35:16)

No, ultimately your sister is also responsible. It doesn't mean that one human being cannot help another. But what is essential when we ask whether you can be of help or not to another human being is, is there something in you that can bring about change in the consciousness of another human being?

Unless some change has happened inside you, it can't happen. And this is the problem for many, many people. They wake up in the middle of the night worrying during the day.

They go about worrying about this or that. What does it mean to worry? What does it mean?

It means there is unconscious mind movement projecting itself usually into the future. And you see how dreadful the future is going to be, what's going to happen. You see outcomes that are negative.

Many things, of course, are never going to happen, but worry pretends to be necessary. You have to see very clearly... Worry pretends to be necessary.

[Speaker 2] (35:17 - 35:17)

Oh, I got that.

[Speaker 1] (35:17 - 35:20)

You have to see that it serves no useful purpose.

[Speaker 2] (35:20 - 35:25)

Yeah. Worry pretends to be necessary. Yes.

But serves no useful purpose.

[Speaker 1] (35:25 - 35:33)

And so once you see that it serves no useful purpose, you can sometimes be maybe able to step out of that and see, oh, and then become present.

[Speaker 2] (35:34 - 35:50)

Yeah. You can become present. If you can step out of the worry for a moment, you can become present enough to say, what can I do now?

How can I be now in this moment? Yes. For myself, for my sister, for whatever it is you need.

[Speaker 1] (35:50 - 36:50)

And the greatest gift you can give to somebody, especially somebody who is suffering like your sister, when you are with them, what is your state of consciousness? Are you able to bring presence when you connect with your sister or any other human being that you want to help? Can you be present with them?

Can you give them space to be? That's the healing. Healing.

You can be an agent for healing of another, not in the sense that I am going to heal you, not believing that would be ego gain. I'm going to heal you. No, simply be there as a conscious space of presence, not wanting to do anything, just being there as a conscious presence with another person.

That's very hard for people. Yes. I understand it's very hard.

And that's why we call it the shift. It's a shift. So, but acceptance is also an important part of that.

It's at the moment you need to accept.

[Speaker 2] (36:50 - 36:51)

Stop resisting it.

[Speaker 1] (36:51 - 36:54)

Yes. Stop resisting. Not bringing the resistance always into the relationship.

[Speaker 2] (36:55 - 36:58)

Because whatever you fight, you strengthen, and what you resist persists.

[Speaker 1] (36:58 - 36:59)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (36:59 - 37:01)

That's at the top of page 75.

[Speaker 7] (37:01 - 37:02)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (37:02 - 37:06)

Whatever you fight, you strengthen, and what you resist persists. Why is that?

[Speaker 1] (37:07 - 37:26)

Because that's how the, by opposing, you bring, this world works in terms of polarities. So if you strengthen one polarity, you immediately strengthen the other. That's an example.

Physics, yes. Exactly the same. It's physics.

[Speaker 2] (37:26 - 37:52)

Yes. Okay. You say, because these days you frequently hear the expression, the war against this or that, and whenever you hear that, you know that it's condemned to failure.

There's a war against drugs, against crime, the war against terrorism, against cancer, against poverty, and so on. And despite the war against all of these things, everything, every one of those things is bigger than ever. That's right.

That's right. Because what you fight, you strengthen, and what you resist persists. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (37:52 - 38:12)

And then the implication, of course, is there is another way of dealing with things, with situations. And that is to make peace with it. Make peace with it.

And then action, take action. The action then comes out of a different state of consciousness. The action comes out of presence.

Presence. It's no longer reaction.

[Speaker 2] (38:13 - 38:17)

Yeah. It comes out of presence and not out of you being defensive about it.

[Speaker 1] (38:17 - 38:24)

That's right. I got it. And the action is much more powerful and effective when it's not defensive and not negative.

[Speaker 2] (38:24 - 39:32)

Somebody just told me this, this happens a lot, you know, with the airlines where, you know, my goodness, you can get from point A to point B on commercial airlines these days without losing your luggage or flights being canceled or sitting on the tarmac or whatever. And they were reading the book. And in the midst of, you know, everything, you know, schedule for the flight.

I'm sure this has happened to many of you. Schedule for the flight. Everything's fine.

You get there and there's no seat. There's no seat. And people, other people didn't have their seats and people around them were just imploding.

And this person said that they decided to remain calm, as my godson, as a matter of fact, and people all around them were going nuts. And suddenly out of nowhere, after about a half an hour, not out of nowhere, about a half an hour, the person behind the counter called the names and of all the names they called, they called his who had been sitting there calm. Now they didn't know him from anybody else, but, you know, it eventually worked out.

Not saying that it always works out, but he realized after reading the book that it makes no sense to get crazy.

[Speaker 1] (39:32 - 39:42)

Yes, it's not only that, but also it's true that things are much more likely to work out when you are in a harmonious state of consciousness and not in resistance.

[Speaker 2] (39:42 - 40:18)

Which brings us to page 77. Do you want peace or drama? You say we all want peace.

There's no one who doesn't want peace, yet there's something else in you that wants the drama, wants the conflict. And whenever you're moving in the drama, you can, as we all can, I think now a little bit anyway, detach from the thought, see yourself having the thought, recognize that you, the you, the I of I am, is the awareness that you're having the thought. When you can see all the drama, just detach a little bit.

You've done what?

[Speaker 1] (40:19 - 40:36)

That's the, that's the vital thing, to see it in the midst of it, to suddenly become aware that this is an old pattern in you, an ego pattern in you. It may not even stop immediately, but at least there is a, suddenly there is a witnessing presence in the background. Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (40:37 - 40:42)

But the ego wants to complain. The ego wants to be resentful. The ego wants drama.

[Speaker 1] (40:42 - 41:18)

Yes. And to see that in oneself, one could call it almost, there is in, in humans something that we could call the addiction to unhappiness. When you are unhappy for whatever reason, once you are trapped in that, that energy of unhappiness, you don't want to get out.

That's right. Because your ego loves it. Yes.

So there is a, there is an addiction to the, you're actually on some level, you enjoy your unhappiness. And when you can become aware of that, then suddenly you're stepping out.

[Speaker 2] (41:18 - 41:58)

So let's talk about the power of awareness. You talk about on page 78, a power comes into your life that is far greater than the ego, greater than the mind. All that is required to become free of the ego is to be aware of it.

Since awareness and ego are incompatible, this is page 78, first paragraph. Awareness is the power that is concealed within the present moment. This is why we may also call it presence and the ultimate purpose of human existence, which is to say your purpose is to bring that power or that presence into this world.

Yes. That is why we're here.

[Speaker 1] (41:58 - 42:26)

Yes. That is the universal impulse. The universal impulse is the evolution of consciousness.

That is the, the impulse behind the universe, the universe moving towards the evolution of consciousness. And we are one manifestation of the evolution of consciousness into this world. We're one.

Yes. There are many others, right? Even though a plant is a manifestation.

[Speaker 2] (42:26 - 43:02)

Right, right, right. But our ultimate purpose of human existence is to bring that presence, that awareness into the world and to become more aware in our daily lives so that regardless of what you're doing in your form world, in your form life, that you recognize, as you say on page 79, can I sense my essential beingness, the I am in the background of my life at all times? Yes.

To be more accurate, can I sense the I am that I am at this moment?

[Speaker 1] (43:03 - 43:43)

Yes. And an easy step towards that is the inner acceptance of this moment as it is without wanting it to be different or rejecting it or resisting it. If you can accept, if you can see that the primary thing in your life is the present moment because there is never anything else.

Yes. It's always now. So you must see if you can have a good relationship with the now because if you don't have a good relationship with the now, you don't have a good relationship with life because life is now.

Yes. So accepting this moment as it is can connect you with that dimension of depth in yourself.

[Speaker 2] (43:43 - 43:48)

And that is how we begin to quieten or quiet the ego.

[Speaker 1] (43:48 - 43:49)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (43:49 - 43:52)

Is by being more fully present now.

[Speaker 1] (43:53 - 44:12)

That's the exit out of the ego, the now. The now is the hidden exit because the ego doesn't want you to know that, that there is an exit and it's called now. Exit is the door out of the ego.

The now is the door. The exit. Yes.

The now.

[Speaker 2] (44:12 - 44:12)

Now.

[Speaker 1] (44:12 - 44:14)

Is the exit door. Out of the ego.

[Speaker 2] (44:14 - 44:14)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (44:15 - 44:15)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (44:15 - 44:35)

And so whenever you find yourself complaining, whenever you find yourself the need to feel superior, you feel superior or inferior to someone else, you know that it's your ego. Whenever you recognize that this is my ego and can bring yourself to the present moment of what is going on now and can see yourself doing it.

[Speaker 7] (44:36 - 44:36)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (44:36 - 44:37)

Yeah. That is awakening.

[Speaker 7] (44:37 - 44:38)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (44:38 - 44:42)

Okay. Ginger is a singer, songwriter living in Berlin. Hello.

[Speaker 4] (44:43 - 45:28)

Hi. I feel like I am aware of the things that I do that are destructive and I can't seem to stop them anyway. I feel like I label things that are bad for me and then I resist them like eating fried food or drinking too much or relationships.

I resist them and I feel like it causes a source of anxiety and sometimes the huge decisions in my life come easily, but these little things, little decisions every day, um, they pile up and become a source of anxiety. So my question is, is, um, how can we get to this inspired action and effortless doing? Um, not only when it comes to the big decisions, but when it comes to making healthy choices, um, in our everyday lives.

[Speaker 2] (45:28 - 45:35)

Amen. Good question. Thank you.

Ginger. Yes. How did, yeah.

Cause yeah, I was saying this too.

[Speaker 4] (45:35 - 45:36)

I know I'm doing it.

[Speaker 2] (45:36 - 45:58)

I just do it anyway. Yeah. Yeah.

I was saying, yeah. Aren't you? Yeah.

Why does it have to be a struggle just to, to do the right thing in terms of, you know, for me it's food always, it's always about food. Yes. How can it become effortless?

Isn't that your question, Jen, Ginger? Yeah. And are you talking about, for me, this would be about potato chips.

What is this about for you?

[Speaker 4] (45:59 - 46:02)

For me, it's a red wine, uh, French fries.

[Speaker 2] (46:02 - 46:05)

Okay. A little red wine every now and then.

[Speaker 4] (46:05 - 46:07)

And a few other things of course too.

[Speaker 1] (46:07 - 46:20)

Yeah. Okay. So, uh, you mean when you eat French fries.

And she knows that they're not so good for her. And then there's a voice in the head that says you shouldn't be eating them. Nevertheless, you are eating them.

[Speaker 4] (46:21 - 46:23)

A tennis match is more like it.

[Speaker 1] (46:25 - 48:06)

A lot of eating over eating has a lot to do with the ego also because the ego lives in a constant state of not enough. It always seeks something else to fill itself with. And usually it's experiences to identify with this or that.

Things. Things. But it's also, uh, it, the, the need for more, as I call it, that is built into the ego.

Sometimes it can get transferred to the body and then you experience it as the desire to eat much more than the body really wants. It's to take in more. So really to, to eat consciously really is the way out of it.

For example, I would suggest that when you eat your French fries, to make a meditation out of it and eat them consciously without having a secondary entity in your head that says you shouldn't be eating them. Eat them fully and consciously and at the same time feel how your body feels while you eat them and after you've eaten them. Then you bring some presence into it and you may realize in some cases that the body doesn't actually want to eat them.

It was the mind that wanted to eat the potato. But so bring, eat consciously. If you eat a sandwich, if you feel, if you go to the fridge, sometimes people get up in the middle of the night, they open the door and, and you reach in and there's this need for need to get, the body doesn't need it.

[Speaker 2] (48:06 - 48:07)

You're trying to feed something.

[Speaker 1] (48:07 - 48:10)

Feed something, yes. And so.

[Speaker 4] (48:10 - 48:20)

For me it's also, it's the, the anxiety that the resistance, not just for food but things that I label as bad for me, seem to cause a lot of anxiety in the.

[Speaker 2] (48:20 - 49:19)

What he's saying is stop resisting. Actually after reading this book, I've been trying this lately, exactly what you said, and this is what you will find. If you stop resisting it because the French fries are not bad, it's the thought in your head that has told you that the French fries are bad.

And if you do what he is recommending, if you sit and you consciously make it a meditation, what you will find is you won't eat, you know, two bags of French fries unconsciously, that you will enjoy every single French fry. And in the enjoyment and the pleasure, if you stop when it's, when it's no longer pleasurable, you know, it's, it's no longer pleasurable after three or four or five. By the time you've eaten a whole bag of them, you, you don't even taste it anymore.

So he's saying make it a meditation, be with it, feel it, sense it, allow your whole body to be with it, feel it, sense it, and when you're done with the pleasure of it, let it go. Yes. That is what you're saying, correct?

[Speaker 1] (49:19 - 49:19)

Yes, yes.

[Speaker 2] (49:20 - 49:20)

Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (49:20 - 49:21)

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (49:21 - 49:28)

And that's what the red wine too. Yes. And other things as well, I suspect.

And other things as well.

[Speaker 1] (49:28 - 50:04)

Yes, be with it, be with it. When I was in my twenties, as young people do, I would often get drunk. Nowadays, I still enjoy a glass of wine.

Right, you do. I enjoy it very much. Yes.

And I know after I've had one glass of wine, sometimes does my body want another glass of wine? And usually I cannot drink more than one glass. It's very rare that I would drink two glasses of wine, because that's exactly, the body says no more.

If you can sense your body, it will often tell you whether it's right or not to eat or drink something.

[Speaker 2] (50:04 - 50:25)

That's right. Well, that's a very good point that you just made. I just had an epiphany, because you don't become overweight or even drunk or intoxicated as long as you are acting consciously.

It's when you become unconscious that you eat too much. Unconscious that you drink too much. Unconscious is when you become obsessively indulgent with things.

[Speaker 1] (50:25 - 50:28)

Yes. Yes. All these addictions are unconscious.

[Speaker 2] (50:28 - 50:59)

Are unconscious. Thank you. Page 78, everybody.

Bottom paragraph. What is spiritual realization? The belief that you are spirit?

You say no. That is a thought. A little closer to the truth, the thought that believes you are who your birth certificate says you are, but still a thought.

So, we're not spirit? I thought we were spirit. What is the saying that we are spiritual beings having a human experience?

[Speaker 1] (50:59 - 51:00)

Yes, that's very good.

[Speaker 2] (51:00 - 51:01)

Yes, but we're not spirit.

[Speaker 1] (51:02 - 51:27)

No. That when we say we are spiritual beings having a human experience is not yet the realization that we are. It's the belief that we are.

Oh, okay. So there is a step that goes from the belief. Belief is still, it's a mental concept.

It's a little closer, as I say, to believing that you are what your birth certificate says you are. Yes. But it's not this realization.

No thought that you have about yourself is realization.

[Speaker 2] (51:28 - 51:47)

Okay. Well, this is another thing. You know, a lot of people are still very conflicted about this spirituality and their religion.

And what I hear you saying, feel you saying in this book is, is that this book isn't about believing. No. This book is about what you come to know for yourself.

[Speaker 7] (51:47 - 51:48)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (51:48 - 51:50)

Yeah. What you become to feel for yourself.

[Speaker 7] (51:50 - 51:50)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (51:51 - 52:15)

And that what you're saying is that God, in the essence of all consciousness, isn't something to believe. God is. Yes.

God is. And God is a feeling experience, not a believing experience. That's right.

And if, and if your, that your religion is a believing experience, if God for you is still about a belief, then it's not truly God.

[Speaker 1] (52:16 - 52:16)

No.

[Speaker 2] (52:16 - 52:17)

That's what you're saying.

[Speaker 1] (52:17 - 53:03)

Yes. The, the best, at best, the belief is a transitional thing that from, from there you go on to the realization that there is no separation between you and God, between you and the source of life, that you are one with the source. And you cannot realize that through believing.

It's not a belief. It's not a thought. Not a thought.

It's a direct realization within yourself. And it's there in the gap between two thoughts. That's right.

And conceptually, you may not know anymore. You may not have an opinion of who you are anymore. And yet, at a very deep level, there is a knowing that cannot be put into words.

[Speaker 2] (53:04 - 53:37)

So, what is spiritual realization? The belief that you are spirit? No.

That's a thought. Closer to the truth than the thought that believes you are who you are, that your birth certificate says you are, but still a thought. Spiritual realization is to see clearly.

On the bottom of page 78, spiritual realization is to see clearly that what I perceive, experience, think or feel is ultimately not who I am. That I cannot find myself in all those things that continuously pass away.

[Speaker 1] (53:38 - 54:14)

Yes. So, you are the space for all those things. You are the consciousness, the awareness in which all those things, experiences, sense perceptions, thoughts, emotions, come.

They appear. Jesus says, you are the light of the world. That means you are the consciousness in which the world appears, is seen.

And the consciousness itself has no form. It is formless and it has nothing to do with time. It is the dimension of the timeless in yourself.

Eternity is the religious term for it.

[Speaker 2] (54:14 - 54:14)

Okay.

[Speaker 1] (54:15 - 54:43)

For most religious people, when they use eternity, it's a very abstract concept. Right. Eternity, what do I do with that?

Or they believe it's continuous time that never ends. That would be extremely boring if you were eternity and there's no end to time, would become very boring. I wouldn't want two things to go on forever in my life, to go on forever, ever, ever.

But finding the timeless dimension is a very different thing in yourself.

[Speaker 2] (54:44 - 54:48)

Timelessness is very different than eternity, as you're saying.

[Speaker 1] (54:48 - 54:54)

The true meaning of eternity is timeless. It's timeless. It's usually misinterpreted as meaning endless time.

[Speaker 2] (54:55 - 54:56)

On and on and on. Yeah. I got that.

[Speaker 1] (54:56 - 55:22)

So, there is in every human being, underneath all the stream of thinking and underneath the emotions, there is that dimension where timelessness or eternity dwells. And that is the essence of who you are. And that is consciousness itself.

And you can know it by realizing that you are the space for whatever happens in your life. Space of consciousness.

[Speaker 2] (55:23 - 55:35)

Deep. I must say that's pretty deep there, Eckhart. We're on page 80, everybody.

One of my favorite quotes in the entire book, only the truth of who you are, if realized, will set you free.

[Speaker 1] (55:35 - 56:11)

Yes. Yes. Know who you are and you are free.

But to know who you are doesn't mean that suddenly you have an answer in your head. There's a stillness. And in that stillness, when you accept that you don't know who you are, as I say somewhere in the book, when you completely accept that you've realized all the things that you thought you were is not really who you are.

And then you come to a point where you don't know who you are. And if you can fully accept that you don't know who you are, you're closer to who you are than you were ever before.

[Speaker 2] (56:11 - 56:47)

Once you realize and accept that all structures, page 81, forms are unstable, even the seemingly solid material ones, peace arises within you. This is because the recognition of the impermanence of all forms awakens you to the dimension of the formless within.

That's what you're calling timelessness.

That which is beyond death. Jesus called it eternal life. Eternal life.

So you believe what happens to us at death when the body dies? You don't have a belief. I don't give it any thought.

You don't? No. Well, did you ever think about it at heart?

[Speaker 1] (56:48 - 58:04)

I know that the essence of who I am, which is the essence of who you are, is indestructible. I know that directly on a feeling level. And you can also know it even if you talk to a physicist.

He will tell you that energy never gets destroyed. It can only transform. So whatever it is that animates this physical form, at some point, whatever it is that animates this physical form is going to no longer animate this form.

And that is when you see a dead body. And when you see a dead body, you see, a year and a half ago, both my parents died within a space of a few months. And I saw very clearly, each time I saw my mother's body lying there.

A few months later, I saw my father's body lying in the coffin. And I realized the form was still there, but the essence of that being was not present. So the essence of that being was never the form.

It was gone. It was no longer there. And then when that which animates the form...

[Speaker 2] (58:04 - 58:06)

The essence of that being was never the form.

[Speaker 1] (58:06 - 58:07)

Was never.

[Speaker 2] (58:07 - 58:09)

The essence of that being inhabited the form.

[Speaker 1] (58:09 - 58:09)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (58:10 - 58:12)

And now it no longer inhabited the form.

[Speaker 1] (58:12 - 58:18)

So you could see there was only a shell there. Right. And that was such a clear realization.

[Speaker 2] (58:18 - 58:21)

Many people who've seen their loved ones in the casket see that.

[Speaker 1] (58:21 - 58:53)

Yes. So that which was the life within that form was always invisible. All you could ever see was the form.

Maybe you could sense the life within the form, but the life is always invisible. And the life ultimately has no form itself. And so you see, suddenly somebody dies.

The essence is gone. The life within the form is gone.

[Speaker 2] (58:53 - 59:37)

So what you're saying, again, on page 79, is to be able to be in form and be able to sense the formlessness of yourself. Yes. To be in form and to sense that there is an essential beingness or formlessness, the I am in the background of our life at all times.

And that awareness, that formlessness, is what can hear, see, sense the thoughts that are going on all the time. And there's a little space, just a space between the thoughts and the awareness of the thoughts. Yes.

And that is where we, I, reside. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (59:38 - 59:53)

You are the awareness. You are consciousness appearing as a person for a little while. But in essence, you are consciousness and consciousness is as consciousness.

You are timeless. You are eternal in the sense of timeless.

[Speaker 2] (59:54 - 1:00:01)

And when the form itself is lying there in the casket, that timeless formlessness has gone where?

[Speaker 1] (1:00:03 - 1:00:14)

Transformed to have either to join with the source or to go through further experiences of awakening.

[Speaker 2] (1:00:15 - 1:00:30)

In ways that our mind cannot even comprehend. No. OK.

Before we say goodbye, I want to thank all of you around the world for making this remarkable experience possible. So what did you want to say in conclusion about the core of the ego?

[Speaker 1] (1:00:32 - 1:02:02)

The core of the ego. The ego, sometimes we look at it as if it were an entity. But really, it's just a form of unconsciousness.

It appears to be an entity sometimes. It is not threatening, never regarded as an enemy or something that you need to get rid of. It's only to be recognized for what it is.

So and then the ego has fulfilled its purpose. It has taken you to that point of awakening. So in order to awaken, humans were in the state of oneness with the source when they first came here.

And then they lost themselves. They lost themselves in thinking. They lost themselves in the mind.

They lost themselves in the ego. And then they reached the stage where this state of being lost produces so much suffering that this dream of life becomes a nightmare. And they start waking up in this stage that we have reached now.

So as we wake up, we regain the state that we once had, that we lost the state of oneness with life. So we're waking up now. Oneness with the source.

But when we regain it, we regain it as a deeper level because we are conscious of it now. Wonderful. Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (1:02:03 - 1:02:14)

Next week, we talk about role-playing all the many faces of the ego, how so many of us believe that we are the roles that we play. Thanks, everybody.

[Speaker 6] (1:02:15 - 1:02:55)

Eckhart Tolle A New Earth : The Discovery of Inner Space (Chapter 8) [gid : //art19-episode- locator/V0/HS2ekllskUEolrL AsALZRRAN Z5y0Qs Dk0r2OYP2dw]

[Speaker 2] (0:00 - 3:20)

Hello to all you podcast listeners. We're bringing you something really special. One of the great spiritual thinkers of our time, Eckhart Tolle and I, are giving you a chapter-by-chapter class on what I believe is his groundbreaking masterpiece, Eckhart's best-selling book, A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose.

This book resonated with me in such a profound way. I truly think that it's the most important book I've ever read. It's changed the way I live my life, so much so that I always have a copy on my nightstand, because I constantly give myself a refresher course.

And now more than ever, we need to create what Eckhart calls A New Earth, inside our personal lives, in our communities, and the world. Give it a listen, and over 10 episodes, you too will be opened up and learn how to quiet your mind, get your ego in check, live a fully more present life. We're talking deep, big picture, even delving into consciousness and the reason why we're all really here.

My greatest hope is that Eckhart's quiet wisdom and patient teachings will resonate with you as they have with me. Each podcast episode will start with my conversation with Eckhart about a chapter, and then Eckhart answers questions from people who are reading along in the book. So I encourage you to get your own copy of A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose, and join us for a thrilling, enlightening, and spiritual experience.

I have never been happier in my whole life than in this class with Eckhart, sharing all of this information with all of you. So here we are, Chapter 8, which is all about finding more inner space, not even a word I was accustomed to using before reading this book, which is such a great thing to think about. Eckhart reminds us how cluttered our lives have become with things, and he's talking about more than just material things.

It's the things on your to-do list, the things you're worried about, all the things that distract you from being in the present moment right now. So Chapter 8 is all about boosting your awareness, discovering the stillness we all have inside us, and no matter what's going on, you can always go to the still space and truly connect to the present moment, because once you can do that, you're tapping into true consciousness. Eckhart writes at the very end of this chapter that you are never more essentially, more deeply yourself than when you are still.

So we're going deep into Chapter 8. As we head into these final chapters, it's really gratifying to hear from so many of you who feel that your commitment to this work is making a difference in your lives. I know I feel that way, and I'd like to again thank all of the students from around the world who are watching who are willing to awaken to the deeper meaning of your lives.

One of the things that Eckhart said that really struck me, you said that the opposite of death is not life. The opposite of death is birth. Life has no opposite.

Life has no opposite.

[Speaker 1] (3:20 - 3:33)

Life has no opposite. A person is here only for a few years, but you are basically life experiencing itself temporarily as this person.

[Speaker 2] (3:33 - 3:36)

As this person, this personality, this ego.

[Speaker 1] (3:36 - 3:59)

But underlying it, you are life that is eternal. And so when you go into stillness, it's easy to sense that underneath the personality, there is an aliveness, there is a presence, there is a consciousness that is timeless. And that's the life beyond the form of life that you are.

[Speaker 2] (3:59 - 4:01)

And that's why it has no opposite.

[Speaker 1] (4:01 - 4:02)

That's right.

[Speaker 2] (4:02 - 4:03)

Because it's forever.

[Speaker 1] (4:03 - 4:07)

Yes. And the opposites only exist in the world of form.

[Speaker 2] (4:07 - 4:14)

In the world of form. I get that. Let's start with an overview of what this chapter is about.

What is inner space? What you just described?

[Speaker 1] (4:15 - 5:26)

I don't remember when this term first came to me. It must have been during a talk. I don't believe I used that term in The Power of Now.

I realized that most people's mind is full of stuff, full of one thought after another, full of continuously arising thoughts, emotions. And the external life is full of things that need doing, one thing after another, one thing after another. So I observed that in many people's lives, there seems to be no space.

There's only one thing after another, one thought after another, one thing to do after another, one thing to be worried about after another. So I noticed this absence of space in human beings. And really, that inner space or spaciousness is what we could also call the stillness.

But I use different terms because any one term limits it. When we talk about stillness, yes, it is stillness, but it's much vaster than just stillness.

[Speaker 2] (5:26 - 5:27)

And vaster than being still.

[Speaker 1] (5:27 - 7:08)

Yes, yes. So it's realizing that within you, there's not only objects in your consciousness that continuously arise in your consciousness as sense perceptions. You experience things, sense perceptions arise continuously, and each sense perception becomes an object in your consciousness.

And then thoughts arise continuously, and every thought becomes also an object that arises in your consciousness. And this is what most people's lives consist of, continuously objects arising in consciousness. And I call that object consciousness.

And that is what most people know, and they also know themselves as an object in their consciousness. They have an image of who they are. They have certain opinions about who they are.

And so you become an object to yourself, and that is the ego. So most a mental object, you make yourself into a mental object, and then you have a relationship with yourself as a mental object. It's a little bit insane, but it's normal.

So the incredible realization, this is where the spiritual dimension starts. There is no spiritual dimension in object consciousness. You can have all kinds of interesting-sounding or even religious-sounding doctrines.

If there is no space in you, spaciousness, where suddenly a gap arises in between thoughts. If there's no spaciousness, then you haven't touched yet the spiritual dimension. And this book, I believe, is helping many people to find that space within.

[Speaker 2] (7:08 - 7:46)

WINFREY You say on page 227, object consciousness needs to be balanced by space consciousness for sanity to return to our planet and for humanity to fulfill its destiny. The arising of space consciousness is the next stage in the evolution of humanity. Space consciousness means that in addition to being conscious of things, which always comes down to sense perceptions, thoughts, and emotions, there is an undercurrent of awareness.

Awareness implies that you are not only conscious of things, but you're also conscious of being conscious. That's what you're talking about. LEON KASSYS Yes.

[Speaker 1] (7:46 - 9:17)

And that's an amazing thing. At first, if you just listen to being conscious of being conscious, the mind says, what does that mean? You can only, you have to experience what that is to know what it means.

So to be conscious of being conscious, for example, you can do it by looking at something, just if people haven't had a taste of this yet. For example, you look at a flower and you're conscious of the image, what you see, the sense perception. Now the question is, can you also be conscious of yourself as the perceiving presence?

Without which there would be no perception. And that is the consciousness. So while you look at a flower, I'm saying flower because natural things can get you in touch with that dimension more easily.

While you look at a flower, can you sense yourself as the presence that is looking, that is making the perception possible? And then you have two dimensions. You're conscious of being conscious and you're conscious of what you're looking at.

You live in two worlds at the same time. And that brings in, that means in the background of your life, there is suddenly a vast but intensely alive peace. You're very, because being conscious of being conscious is very peaceful.

That's where the true inner peace arises.

[Speaker 2] (9:18 - 9:29)

So... WINFREY And that if you don't have that in your life, if you're not able to find that space between the thinking and the perception, perception, perception, if you're not, then...

[Speaker 1] (9:29 - 9:30)

DR. OSTFELD Then you lose yourself...

[Speaker 2] (9:31 - 9:32)

WINFREY In things. DR. OSTFELD In things.

[Speaker 1] (9:32 - 9:40)

You lose yourself in the world. WINFREY Yeah. DR. OSTFELD And you lose yourself in your own mind. You continuously get drawn into every thought that arises.

[Speaker 2] (9:40 - 9:53)

WINFREY Yeah. And so being able to be conscious of your consciousness or aware of yourself as a perceiving entity or perceiving presence is really what the true awakening is about.

[Speaker 1] (9:53 - 9:59)

DR. OSTFELD Yes. Yes. Yes.

Yes. That's the awakening to who you are beyond the external appearance.

[Speaker 2] (9:59 - 10:12)

WINFREY And that is what we're doing when we're angry and you see your ego flare up and all of that is to be able to step back and perceive yourself as the consciousness observing yourself as the angry person.

[Speaker 1] (10:12 - 10:13)

DR. OSTFELD Yes.

[Speaker 2] (10:13 - 10:13)

WINFREY Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (10:13 - 10:15)

DR. OSTFELD Yes. There's in the background...

[Speaker 2] (10:15 - 10:16)

WINFREY The space in between that.

[Speaker 1] (10:16 - 10:17)

DR. OSTFELD That's right.

[Speaker 2] (10:17 - 10:28)

WINFREY And so the inner space you're talking about is the space between, I am angry, I'm, you know, saying all of these things, and then there is the other self that is observing that.

[Speaker 1] (10:28 - 10:44)

DR. OSTFELD Yes. Now if you're angry and if the presence can be there in the background... DR. OSTFELD ...that means there's already, you're already very present because it's not easy to remain present when there's anger because anger has an enormous power. WINFREY Right. DR. OSTFELD So...

[Speaker 2] (10:44 - 10:51)

WINFREY But if you're observing it, then you can say, I'm out of control. WINFREY You know, people have done that. DR. OSTFELD Yes. WINFREY You can say to yourself, I'm out of control. I need to calm down.

[Speaker 1] (10:51 - 10:55)

WINFREY Yes. DR. OSTFELD But if you know that you're out of control, you're not completely out of control.

[Speaker 2] (10:55 - 10:55)

WINFREY That's right.

[Speaker 1] (10:56 - 11:05)

That's right. DR. OSTFELD And so if you know that you are, have been taken over by anger, you haven't been completely taken over because there's a knowing in the background.

[Speaker 2] (11:05 - 11:24)

WINFREY Yeah. And I think a lot of parents have experienced this, you know, when your kids do something and it's so upsetting to you, and you know in that moment, I should not try to discipline them because I'm too angry to discipline them. DR. OSTFELD Yes. WINFREY That part of you that knows that you're too angry to discipline them is the space that you're talking about.

[Speaker 1] (11:24 - 11:33)

DR. OSTFELD Yes. Yes. WINFREY Yeah.

DR. OSTFELD Yes. WINFREY Got that. DR. OSTFELD And so, and that's, if you don't have that space, then you're completely controlled by the anger. You become the anger. WINFREY That's right.

[Speaker 2] (11:34 - 11:44)

That thing that allows you to step back is what you're talking about. DR. OSTFELD Yes. WINFREY I got it.

I got it. I got it. I got it.

That part of you that says, I can step back and see I'm acting a fool.

[Speaker 1] (11:44 - 11:55)

DR. OSTFELD Yes. WINFREY And so, if you know that you are acting a fool, then it's not, there is a sanity there that's observing the insanity.

[Speaker 2] (11:56 - 11:56)

DR. OSTFELD Uh-huh.

[Speaker 1] (11:56 - 11:58)

DR. OSTFELD And if you know that you are...

[Speaker 2] (11:58 - 12:01)

WINFREY But sometimes people know they're acting a fool and they just keep on acting a fool.

[Speaker 1] (12:01 - 12:07)

DR. OSTFELD Yes, that's possible too. DR. OSTFELD For a while, it can happen that the old, certain old behavior patterns...

[Speaker 2] (12:07 - 12:09)

WINFREY But generally, if you know, you can pull yourself back.

[Speaker 1] (12:09 - 12:10)

DR. OSTFELD Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (12:11 - 12:14)

WINFREY And that which knows is the inner space that you're talking about.

[Speaker 1] (12:14 - 12:15)

DR. OSTFELD Yes.

[Speaker 2] (12:16 - 12:18)

WINFREY Is observing presence and inner space the same thing?

[Speaker 1] (12:18 - 12:22)

DR. OSTFELD Yes. But observing should not be confused with judging.

[Speaker 2] (12:22 - 12:23)

WINFREY I got it.

[Speaker 1] (12:23 - 12:29)

DR. OSTFELD So there's no judgment. It's a clear, it's like a mirror. DR. OSTFELD It's like a mirror showing you what's there.

[Speaker 2] (12:30 - 12:41)

WINFREY Uh-huh. So there are literally two dimensions. There is the personality acting out of form and perceptions and all of that.

And then there is the observer of that.

[Speaker 1] (12:41 - 13:07)

DR. OSTFELD Yes. And the observer is not judging what is being observed. DR. OSTFELD If the observer begins to judge, then it's the mind that has come back in. DR. OSTFELD It just is. And the observer is timeless. And whatever the observer is observing, the behavior, the thinking, is conditioned by the past.

So you're bringing the timeless dimension into this world of time. WINFREY Yes.

[Speaker 2] (13:08 - 13:15)

Peter from Phoenix, you say you were addicted to smoking for 30 years, but quit after reading A New Earth. This ties into your question, correct?

[Speaker 4] (13:16 - 13:30)

DR. OSTFELD Exactly. I applied the techniques to quitting smoking. And with about five minutes work and about three hours time, I completely stopped.

No urges, no more cravings, nothing. No willpower or anything like that. It was so easy.

It was amazing.

[Speaker 2] (13:30 - 13:31)

WINFREY What is it that you applied?

[Speaker 4] (13:32 - 14:05)

DR. OSTFELD Becoming conscious of the feelings. I had run out of cigarettes, and I thought I had to go to the store. But when the craving came, I said, okay, let's be with the craving.

Let's feel it. What does it actually feel like? Usually we just react.

And I actually sat there and closed my eyes and felt it, and it started to dissolve, and it went away. And about two or three hours later, another craving came, and I did the same thing. And this time, the feeling went away even faster.

And then finally, when it came back about a third time, when I put my mind to it, it just completely disappeared. Gone, never came back.

[Speaker 2] (14:05 - 14:23)

WINFREY So were you also doing, I think Eckhart suggests in the addiction section, taking deep breaths sometimes when you feel like you need the craving for, whether it's cigarettes or food or whatever, to take the three deep breaths and see what happens if the feeling dissipates? Did you do that? DR. OSTFELD Yes, I did.

[Speaker 4] (14:23 - 14:52)

I took the breaths to basically create stillness, to become calm. So I took long, deep breaths and just sort of calmed down and then just started to feel the feelings and watch the thoughts. And I've tried to quit hundreds of times and sometimes a couple of months successfully, but there was always willpower involved.

There was always a craving still there. There was always, you know, if I just had one that was always still in the back of my mind, that's no longer there. I can go out with my friends on a Friday night, and they can all be smoking, and I won't even, I don't even want to look at one.

[Speaker 2] (14:53 - 14:54)

WINFREY What in the world happened to you?

[Speaker 4] (14:55 - 14:57)

DR. OSTFELD It was miraculous.

[Speaker 2] (14:57 - 15:18)

WINFREY Yes, that's great. And have you been able to apply the teachings from the book in other areas of your life? I mean, for myself, I've just found that being able to go back to my breath in the middle of the day when things get crazier, I mean, something Eckhart said, I think, on one of the beginning classes about one complete, full breath is a meditation.

[Speaker 4] (15:20 - 15:23)

DR. OSTFELD Well, that's where the question comes in, because I do have other issues.

[Speaker 2] (15:23 - 15:24)

WINFREY One conscious breath is a meditation.

[Speaker 4] (15:25 - 15:28)

DR. OSTFELD Earlier in the book, in the chapter, he talks about going below thought.

[Speaker 2] (15:29 - 15:29)

WINFREY Yes.

[Speaker 4] (15:29 - 15:57)

DR. OSTFELD And he described my situation exactly like he's here. We talk about, you know, alcohol, using food and TV to go below thoughts, sort of to numb the senses, numb your thoughts, and just sort of go into trance, if you will. And I do that a lot.

And I've been trying to break away from that by using the techniques, and I have not had the same success. And you also say, don't make it a problem. I think I made it a problem, and I want to kind of break from that.

[Speaker 2] (15:57 - 16:04)

WINFREY You're asking a question about how to use this more forcefully or whatever for alcohol?

[Speaker 4] (16:04 - 16:22)

DR. OSTFELD Yeah, with alcohol especially, and food. You know, I tend to overeat when I'm tired, and I just want to relax. Food, alcohol, TV tend to be the things I use.

And that brings you below thought when we're trying to be above thought. DR. OSTFELD And when I try and do that, I'm not as successful. I get very frustrated.

[Speaker 2] (16:22 - 16:24)

WINFREY Okay. What do you want to say, Eckhart?

[Speaker 1] (16:24 - 17:41)

DR. OSTFELD Well, it's a wonderful success story as far as smoking is concerned, and experiencing how awareness can dissolve old patterns. In some cases, instantly. And in other cases, it takes more time for awareness to dissolve the old pattern.

And awareness has to be brought to the pattern when it arises repeatedly. And it does not mean that every time awareness meets the pattern, that awareness is going to win. Win may not be the right word, because awareness, of course, is not never fighting anything.

Awareness is just there as the conscious presence. So bringing conscious presence, for example, into the urge to have a drink, not that one or two drinks are a problem, but if drinking drags you down, drags you down to below thinking, then of course, it is helpful to bring presence into the urge when it arises, in the same way that you did when you felt the urge come upon you to smoke. So have you practiced that?

Have you been able to feel the urge to drink and then bring awareness to that? And what happened?

[Speaker 4] (17:42 - 17:47)

Yes, I have. And it kind of postpones and eventually I kind of break down.

[Speaker 1] (17:48 - 18:55)

Yes, I believe I mentioned in the book that bring awareness to it. And it may well happen that the desire, the urge is still there after 10 minutes of awareness. I believe I mentioned that.

It does not mean that you have lost. It means that the desire is very strong. And at that point, perhaps you will have a drink.

And when it happens again, you bring awareness to it again. Eventually, something will happen to the pattern. It is very rare to have instant success as you did with smoking.

It does happen in some cases. But bring awareness to old patterns, whatever it is, addictive patterns, behavior patterns, bring awareness. And eventually they cannot coexist for that long.

So it is a continuing practice. But do not expect perfection. Do not expect you to be the perfect human being who never touches a drink again or whatever.

As I said to Oprah, I enjoy a drink occasionally.

[Speaker 2] (18:56 - 19:29)

And I said, whoo-hoo. So what he is saying also, and you said this in the beginning, Peter, don't judge it. And as you begin to practice, what I hear you say is this miracle that you experience with cigarettes is just that, because it rarely happens that you start this one time and it works immediately.

What you're saying is the more you apply the practice of bringing consciousness to this desire or craving, to this craving, that it will gradually lessen. It will weaken. It will weaken.

[Speaker 1] (19:29 - 20:02)

Yes. You can also apply it to other things like many people are addicted to television. One day without watching TV would be dreadful for them.

So you could perhaps as a practice, like a spiritual practice, you could say one day a week I'll see what happens if I don't watch television. One day a week I'll practice and then observe inside yourself what it feels like, the need to switch on, the need to be entertained, the need to be stimulated, to absorb what's on the screen.

[Speaker 2] (20:02 - 20:45)

Thank you so much, Peter. The story that you began with the ancient Sufi story from the Middle East about a king who's continuously torn between happiness and depression. On page 223, you write, the slightest thing would cause him great upset or provoke an intense reaction, and his happiness would quickly turn into disappointment and despair.

A time came when the king finally got tired of himself and of life, began to seek a way out. He sent for a wise man who lived in his kingdom, who was reputed to be enlightened. And when the wise man came, the king said to him, I want to be like you.

Can you give me something that will bring balance, serenity, and wisdom into my life? I will pay any price you ask. What is that price the king had to pay?

What is the price all of us have to pay?

[Speaker 1] (20:45 - 21:11)

Well, first of all, of course, the price, the king asked, well, how much does it cost? How much is it going to cost? And the wise man said to him, it is of such value that even your whole kingdom could not pay for it.

Now, what that means is that the primary thing in your life is nothing external. What is primary in your life is your inner state of consciousness.

[Speaker 2] (21:11 - 21:12)

I got that.

[Speaker 1] (21:12 - 21:27)

And compared to that, you could have the greatest riches if you are in a state of anxiety or fear, negativity, nothing is worth that.

[Speaker 2] (21:27 - 21:35)

You know, in the Bible and in the church, they, they, I don't know if it's in the Bible, but I know in the church, we sing this song called, it is well with my soul.

[Speaker 1] (21:35 - 21:35)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (21:35 - 21:56)

So unless it is well with your soul, it does not matter what your outward state is. Where are you living? How big, how many square feet you have?

How many cars, whatever, a claim you have received in the world, unless it is well with your soul or your inner state of being. Your inner space, then you're not well.

[Speaker 1] (21:56 - 22:54)

Yes. And so that's the, always to bear that in mind. Yes.

What is, am I at one with life at this moment? What is my inner state at this moment? Your primary concern in any situation needs to be your inner state.

Your secondary concern is the outer situation, because only when you're in a state of rightness, of presence, can you adequately deal with outer situations. So what is the price? There is no price in terms of monetary value or anything like that.

We could say that the price to pay is you let go of the false self. That is the price you pay, the false mind-made self. The price to pay is identification with that false, the false I, the false me.

And so that's a relatively easy price to pay, because it's wonderful to let go of that.

[Speaker 2] (22:54 - 23:02)

But the wise man gives the king a ring. Yes. And inside the ring, the inscription is...

This too shall pass.

[Speaker 1] (23:02 - 23:21)

This too shall pass. And he says, whatever situation arises in your life, before you call it good or bad, before you react, before you judge it, touch this ring and remember the inscription. And this too shall pass.

[Speaker 2] (23:21 - 23:35)

If you're in a difficult stage in your life, you're going through, you know, trauma or divorce or whatever, to know that this too shall pass. But when I'm feeling happy and feeling joyful, I don't want to think this too shall pass.

[Speaker 1] (23:37 - 23:42)

That can actually also be very peaceful. If you know that it is transient, I know that...

[Speaker 2] (23:42 - 23:46)

But you're having such a good time and then you're thinking, this too shall pass, so don't get too happy.

[Speaker 1] (23:46 - 23:52)

If you don't know that this too shall pass, then what can happen? You will cling to the situation internally.

[Speaker 2] (23:52 - 23:52)

I got it.

[Speaker 1] (23:52 - 24:19)

I got that. And if you cling to the situation and then it passes, as it will... As it will.

Or even if it doesn't pass yet, it might last for a little while, even while you... The clinging itself means already some fear is coming in. Oh, I see that.

Through the holding on, you don't want this situation to leave you, or you don't want to leave the situation. The clinging means brings already up some fear, and that means you can't enjoy it as much, really.

[Speaker 2] (24:19 - 24:43)

I just had a great epiphany, not even for myself, but for all the people that I know that our key word here is clinging. So many people do this in relationships. They're holding on to a relationship that has already shown itself to be transient.

It's moving on to the next level. And what so many people do, they want to hold on and let it be as it always was.

[Speaker 1] (24:43 - 24:43)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (24:44 - 24:45)

And it's in the process of passing.

[Speaker 1] (24:46 - 24:46)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (24:46 - 24:48)

And you should let it pass.

[Speaker 1] (24:48 - 25:07)

Yes. Allowing change to happen and becoming comfortable with change. This is part of this two shall pass, because we live in this world where things continuously pass away.

The Buddhists call it impermanence. It's one of the deepest truths of the Buddha.

[Speaker 2] (25:07 - 25:15)

And the problem lies when you expect it to be the same as it always was, and that's where so many people get in trouble in their relationships, especially.

[Speaker 1] (25:15 - 25:27)

Yes. And it's an inability to let go. Inability to let go of situations, of people, and that eventually brings suffering.

[Speaker 2] (25:27 - 25:56)

Yet a friend of mine was telling me about her husband had said to her he wasn't sure he wanted to remain in the relationship. He wasn't sure. And there's, you know, seeking counseling about that.

And he's now, you know, sleeping in a different bedroom and all that stuff. And she's trying to hold on and wants things to be the way they were and wants to have a baby and all of that. And you would say, put that ring on.

[Speaker 1] (25:57 - 26:39)

Yes. So especially don't cling. If you don't cling, it means there's no fear in the situation.

The fear comes through the clinging, through not wanting the change. And so if you approach the situation without fear, then one of two things can happen in a situation like this. There may become a deepening in the relationship.

When a relationship hits a crisis, it may be time for the relationship to dissolve or it may be time for a deepening. And so... How do you know the difference?

When there's no fear, then you will know either it will deepen or it will end. Wow. Or it will pass on.

The fear keeps you stuck where you are.

[Speaker 2] (26:39 - 26:52)

Got it. I got it. Nick has a question about finding his purpose.

And I know it's something that's been on the minds of quite a few of our students. Hello, Nick. Let's hear it.

Hey, Oprah. What's up? Hey.

Everything's up.

[Speaker 3] (26:54 - 27:18)

My question is basically, you have to worry about a lot of stuff in life. You have to go to work. You have to pay your bill.

Your cell phone bill works in the now. But if you don't work today, it's not going to work a month from today. So how do you live in the now and still worry about your IRAs, investing in your future, what you're going to do as far as money, paying your bills, doing what you have to do in this ego-censored world, especially in Los Angeles?

[Speaker 2] (27:20 - 27:25)

What if becoming who we were truly meant to be really isn't financially practical is what you're asking, right?

[Speaker 3] (27:27 - 27:53)

Yeah. What if I wanted to go on a mountain somewhere and just become who I was? I eventually would, I guess, starve or freeze.

But how do you integrate this in your everyday life, sort of being in the now, being the essence of who you are, without suffering in the long run? The squirrel would suffer. The squirrel would die if it didn't put away nuts for the future.

[Speaker 1] (27:54 - 28:57)

Okay. Good question. However, the first few words of your question already contained an error.

And it's easy if an error keeps into a question, then it's hard to answer it truly. The error was, you said, we have to worry about paying our bills and all kinds of things. Is that true?

No. You have to pay your bills, but you don't have to worry about paying your bills. And the squirrel has to put away the nuts, but the squirrel is not worried about the nuts.

Only humans are worried about their nuts. So you can being present with what you do does not mean that you neglect your daily affairs and so on. It means you deal with them in a different and, in fact, more powerful and more effective way.

You give up the worrying part. You still pay your bills, but you let go of the worrying about paying your bills. In that way, you learn from the squirrel how to live.

[Speaker 2] (28:57 - 29:01)

Because worrying is your choice. You see that, don't you, Nick?

[Speaker 3] (29:02 - 29:37)

Worrying is your choice. At times when I don't worry, I've had moments in my life where I didn't worry. I just kind of let the waves of the world roll over me.

And I kind of did nothing about situations and hoped that they would work out themselves. And they didn't. I mean, you know, worrying did help me in the past to actually get things together and get my life on track, I guess, to be for me in my life, to be in the essence, to be with my spiritual self.

It doesn't, it's not enough. I have to really be actively worried about the actual day-to-day business of surviving. Well, most people have to do, you know.

[Speaker 1] (29:37 - 31:06)

I would still argue with that. It is true that you need to take action. It is not true that you need to worry in order to be able to take action.

So you can actually experiment with, in your daily life, start with little situations. Let's say there's a pile of bills that you have to pay. How do you approach these bills?

Are you going to worry the night before or on the day? Or am I going to be able to pay you? You just take one bill after another.

You look at it. You face it. Okay, do I have the money in my bank account or not?

If you don't have the money in my bank account, I have to do something to make more money. What is the possible? What can I do now?

Put that aside. Look, this action I can take. Pick up the phone.

Make a phone call to the present. Effective. Powerful.

But no worry. Then you'll see your whole life will become not only more effective and more powerful, but also much easier. It flows with greater ease.

Nothing in nature is worried. All the animals do what they have to do, but they don't worry about it. They are active.

Everything is active in nature. The trees are active. The grass, the flowers.

Everything is active and putting out energy. It's only the humans that worry about it and think they need worry in order to survive in this world. You don't need worry.

You need action, but not worry.

[Speaker 3] (31:06 - 31:30)

That's an interesting point. That reminds me of the lily in the valley. It doesn't worry about clothing itself in the Bible.

It just does. It just exists. It worries not whether the sparrow or the crow does not worry how it's going to get its next meal.

It just does. That's right there. I guess I'm thinking of those hippies in India that still haven't come back.

They're just broken. They took all their idealism there.

[Speaker 2] (31:31 - 33:35)

Nick is saying, well, that's really good for that Bible stuff and for the lilies in the valley, but listen, I'm living in L.A. and I got to worry about things. I think you really represent a whole lot of people, particularly young people, who have said to me personally or have emailed and think that being in alignment with who you're truly meant to be and awakening to your purpose represents passivity, that you're just sort of sitting around, just waiting on a whoo moment and not really doing anything. The real purpose of this entire book and the work of spirituality is to get you, to get us to align our personalities with our soul or higher consciousness so that the work that you do in the world comes from the place of the higher consciousness and you use your ego or personality to serve that.

You allow your personality to serve the calling of consciousness that has put you here on the earth in the first place. And when you do that, everything has a flow to it. You're in the right job that gives you the right amount of money for you at any given time because you are in alignment.

So you're not worrying about things because you're not living beyond your means. You're not stressing about things because you're not allowing your ego to determine and define who you are in the world. So you're not acting out of an external self, but acting out of the place of inner space or consciousness.

So everything is in alignment. And that's not passive. That's not whoo, I can't pay my bills.

And so let me find myself later. That is aligning your personality with the higher consciousness so that your higher consciousness, you operate from a place of being and the inner space is directing and guiding your life and not the outer space. You get it?

[Speaker 3] (33:36 - 33:45)

Yeah, I do. I'm sorry if I made you mad, Oprah. But I do.

That's wonderful. Thank you so much.

[Speaker 2] (33:47 - 34:00)

No, I'm not mad, but I hear this. I hear this a lot. No, this isn't about giving up your passion.

It's about feeling your passion more deeply. Yes. And being in alignment with that.

[Speaker 3] (34:01 - 34:23)

How do you know if what you want, what your passion is, isn't just ego driven? What if I just wanted to be like, I don't know, a rock star and that's just completely ego driven and that didn't help the world in any way. But if I kept on working towards it, it would just not be serving anyone but myself.

What if my passion is wrong? You know, what if it's wrong? Too many questions.

[Speaker 1] (34:24 - 34:58)

No, go ahead. Go ahead. Sometimes you may not know until you have achieved what you wanted to achieve, whether it was ego or not.

When you get what you wanted to achieve and very soon you find it does not satisfy you, then it was the ego. So you can, it's a learning process. Nobody's saying you shouldn't try to achieve this or that.

If the impulse is there to have this or that, do it and see what happens. If it doesn't satisfy you, it's the ego.

[Speaker 2] (34:59 - 35:38)

And the greatest rock stars are those who are rock stars because they sing or they perform because they had to and whether they were performing to, you know, grand crowds or in their garage space to just their family members, they sing because they have to. The greatest dancers are those who dance because they have to and they become rock stars or dancing stars because that is coming from such a pure place of passion. And that's what the world feels because those are the people who last, the people who are operating from the passionate, true space and not just doing it because they want to make the money or because of the ego self.

[Speaker 1] (35:38 - 35:38)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (35:39 - 35:40)

That's what I think.

[Speaker 3] (35:40 - 35:41)

Very good.

[Speaker 2] (35:41 - 35:42)

But it's nice talking to you, Nick.

[Speaker 3] (35:43 - 35:45)

Thank you. Sorry it took so long.

[Speaker 2] (35:45 - 35:48)

Christina lives in Toronto, Canada. Christina, your question. Hello.

[Speaker 6] (35:49 - 35:50)

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Akbar.

[Speaker 2] (35:50 - 35:50)

Hi.

[Speaker 6] (35:52 - 36:34)

I have been afraid to drive for about 16 years now. I was in a serious car accident and it has stopped me from, you know, being responsible in my family life. My husband has so much burden.

He has to take our kids to their activities and so forth, take time off of work to take them to doctor's appointments. So my question, but just recently from reading A New Earth, I've started to drive. So yay.

But my question is, how do I remain in the inner spaciousness that you speak about on page 238 so that I can stay behind the wheel? I mean, things are going well right now, but if that fear comes creeping back, how do I handle it?

[Speaker 2] (36:35 - 36:38)

I don't know if I want you behind the wheel if I'm on the road and you try to do that.

[Speaker 7] (36:39 - 36:40)

Oh, don't say that. No.

[Speaker 1] (36:41 - 38:44)

Okay. Okay. So the first, you're now able to drive.

That's wonderful. The old fear is gone. But now a new fear has arisen and that fear is about whether the fear is going to come back or not.

And so that is often the case. People develop a fear about a fear. Is it going?

Am I going to be in fear again? The mind tends to do that kind of thing because it projects itself into the future and says, am I going to remain fearless or is the fear going to come back? So realize that that is your mind trying to figure something out and thereby creating a new level of fear on top of the original fear that has already dissolved.

So trust that it's not going to come back. But something you can do to help it is to actually consciously enjoy the driving and enjoy sitting in the car, enjoy sitting at the traffic light, enjoy the driving itself. I enjoy driving.

It's a very peaceful thing to do for me. So and be comfortable with being in the car. And what I used to do often in the don't do it so much anymore.

I would get into my car and drive out to some lonely place and sit in the car and meditate or write. I liked being in the car. So use the enjoyment.

The more you find the enjoyment, the less likely the fear is going to come back. So seek the enjoyment of it is to do with enjoying the present moment, the driving itself, the movement and so on. And don't go into your mind.

Don't follow up that thought when it says, oh, is it going to last? Is this state of being without fear going to last?

Just stay in the moment.

[Speaker 1] (38:45 - 39:17)

Stay in the moment. The more you're in the moment, the less likely fear is going to come back. It can't really come back when you are in the now.

It's only when you leave the now, then it'll come back. Either you go into the past and you remember something that happened in the past. You have left the now or you go into the future and say, am I going to have fear again at some point?

So the more you stay in the now, the more you're keeping out fear. Fear comes through past or future.

[Speaker 2] (39:19 - 39:25)

Thank you. Thank you. Thank you so much.

Thank you. Natalie lives in Australia. Hi, Natalie.

[Speaker 5] (39:26 - 39:28)

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Oprah. How are you?

[Speaker 2] (39:28 - 39:30)

We're both well. Thank you.

[Speaker 5] (39:31 - 40:32)

This is so exciting for me. On page 239 in your book, you say that some people feel more alive when they travel and visit unfamiliar places or foreign countries because those times, sense perceptions, experiencing takes up more of their consciousness and thinking. Since the class on the third chapter, I've been sharing an amazing holiday with my family and our friends here.

I've been able to enjoy my holiday so much more by practicing the teachings that I've read about in the book and the things I've learned from the class. But my life back home is not like my holiday. It's really busy.

I've got a job and three children and my husband has his own business. And on reflection, I think I've filled up any free time I've had so that I wasn't with that constant noise in my head. I feel really great at the moment.

And I want to feel the same when I go home. So my question is, how do I transition between this wonderful holiday and go back to my normal life at home?

[Speaker 1] (40:34 - 42:43)

Okay. Okay. That's a good question.

Yes. Yes. Thank you.

Yes, it's a good question. The everydayness of many people's lives can really pull you into a place of unconsciousness because of the repetitiveness of one's life. So it's up to you when you get home to invite a different state of consciousness as much as possible into your daily life, into the daily routine of your life.

Invite a state of presence when you are engaged in things that you do every day repetitively. Things that usually are a means to an end. Driving those kids to school, doing the shopping.

You can see how many things are a means to an end in one's daily existence. And that's not a very powerful way to live when almost everything you do in your daily existence is a means to some end because you have to do this. So bring in presence where instead of treating whatever you do as a means to an end, as much as possible, make it into an end in itself.

For example, when you're driving from here to there, be absolutely present every moment. Look around. Be alert as if you were seeing things for the first time.

The trees, the people, the traffic. And you do that by not labeling things. Not labeling mentally what you're experiencing.

Be there as a conscious presence when you're doing shopping at the supermarket. Perceiving without naming is what you call it. Perceiving without naming.

Be there with every step. Look at the things around you. What do I need to get to be conscious of every movement of everything around you so that it's not an everyday thing.

It's that everything that you do is happening just now. It's not a repetition.

[Speaker 2] (42:44 - 43:46)

And I promise you, if you start to do this in your everyday life, what he says on page 252, as much as possible in everyday life, use awareness of the inner body to start to create space. When waiting, when listening to someone, when pausing to look at the sky, all on page 252, a tree, a flower, your partner or child. Feel the aliveness within at the same time.

This means part of your attention or consciousness remains formless and the rest is available for the outer world to form. Whenever you inhabit your body in this way, it serves as an anchor for staying present in the now, prevents you from losing yourself in thinking, in emotions or in external situations. When you really get that, what he's saying on page 252, Natalie, everything around you takes on a magical quality.

I can really testify to that, that just doing routine things becomes almost like you have wow moments doing the smallest things, you know, washing the...

[Speaker 5] (43:47 - 44:05)

I've been feeling that at the moment because we've been seeing so many amazing things and meeting so many different people and being in places where they speak different languages. But I know at home, what I do is when I'm doing something, I'm thinking about the next thing that I'm going to be doing. So I really need to, I can really take that on.

Thank you so much.

[Speaker 2] (44:05 - 44:13)

What I would like to say to you and everybody else, when you start to put this into practice, when you start to actually put it into practice, everything is amazing.

[Speaker 7] (44:14 - 44:15)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (44:15 - 44:37)

Everything starts to be amazing. The fact that you're breathing in and out of your lungs starts to be amazing. That's what the now does.

It brings you into a level of consciousness and presence. So just being is amazing. And you don't have to leave home to experience that.

Isn't that the... That's right.

[Speaker 1] (44:37 - 44:39)

That's the key, isn't it? Yes, that's the key. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (44:39 - 45:24)

Thank you very much, Natalie. But that's... Bye.

Thank you. What Natalie was talking about is the whole point of awakening to your life's purpose. But what we're going to be talking about next week, Nick, is when you align the inner purpose and let the inner purpose determine what your outer actions are, then you're not worried.

That's right. You never worry. Yes.

No matter how much money you're making. Yes. You're not worried because you're on purpose with your life.

You're on purpose with your life. Yeah. Well, you know, I think a lot of people feel like this is all kind of...

Sometimes they feel like this is ooey-goey stuff. And yes, and I'll get spiritual, but let me make some money first. Yeah.

I want to be spiritual and all that. But I got to make some money first.

[Speaker 1] (45:24 - 45:43)

Yeah. That's actually in the gospel in the New Testament where he says, let me first do this. They invite you to the kingdom of heaven.

That's right. Let me first do this with another... Well, there's another excuse.

Let me first do this. First, I have to do this. Then I'll be ready.

Uh-huh. Of course, it never happens. That's right.

The then never comes.

[Speaker 2] (45:44 - 46:00)

So there is Barbara in Shanghai, China, who writes, I find it really difficult to be the observer of a challenging work environment, especially when I'm frustrated with employees and have to discipline my staff. What are some of the practical steps I can take to overcome the situation?

[Speaker 1] (46:01 - 47:16)

Well, there you use whatever the practical things that are described in the book, one or two conscious breaths as often as possible, getting in touch with the feeling of the inner body, the aliveness of the inner body, while you are listening to people, especially. Then already a different energy is there. You are listening from a different state of consciousness when you're in touch with the inner body while you listen.

Right. And a lot of things, a person who is running an office or whatever our questioner does, they probably have to deal with many people every day, which involves listening to people in addition to, of course, speaking to people. So be there as they feel the aliveness within as you listen as much as possible.

Take conscious breaths while you are engaged in things. That's right. Bringing spaces, little spaces into your daily existence.

Gaps. Little gaps. That is more important than doing.

It's wonderful to do a meditation at the end of the day, but bringing little gaps into your everyday activities is even more important.

[Speaker 2] (47:17 - 47:58)

I love what you talk about on page 232 and 233. You tell people to avoid watching television programs and commercials that assault you with a rapid succession of images that change every two or three seconds. Rather than watching at random, choose the programs you want to see whenever you remember to do so.

Feel the aliveness also inside your body as you watch. Alternatively, be aware of your breathing from time to time, looking away from the screen at regular intervals so that it doesn't completely take possession of your visual sense. What are we doing to ourselves and more importantly to our children through the video games, the television, which is a form of like hypnosis almost for people.

[Speaker 1] (47:59 - 48:28)

And it pulls your attention out of the body. It's like a leaking, an energy leakage, especially for young children when the energy gets drawn out very easily. So it's continuous energy leakage, and they cannot focus because of the rapidly changing images on TV screens in many programs.

The ability to have a prolonged focus on something is greatly diminished.

[Speaker 2] (48:29 - 48:36)

Well, I thought that that's why we have so many children with ADD because they've grown up in a world where they can only, there's 30 seconds, 30 seconds and 30 seconds.

[Speaker 1] (48:36 - 49:16)

Yes. That means the quality of your life is also diminished because the quality of your life very much depends on the degree of your attention. Attention is quality.

So if you cannot give attention to anything for very long, that diminishes the quality of your life and what you can do. So parents need to be careful with their children. I'm not saying remove all these things immediately from your children, but very gently reduce the amount of time they spend with video games and reduce gently the amount of time you spend watching television.

[Speaker 2] (49:16 - 49:31)

Because they cause you, as you say, so when watching television, the tendency is for you to fall below thought, not rise above it. Television has this in common with alcohol and certain other drugs. While it provides some relief from your mind, you again pay a high price, loss of consciousness.

[Speaker 1] (49:32 - 49:33)

And here we have...

[Speaker 2] (49:33 - 49:35)

That's what it's designed to do, isn't it? For the most part.

[Speaker 1] (49:35 - 50:10)

Yes. And here we have the interesting concept of rising above thinking and falling below thinking. So what we are engaged in here, now most people are at the thinking level.

They are controlled by their mind. They are identified with their mind. This work that we are doing here, if you can call it work, it's not work really, is rising above thinking.

Being present means you have risen above thinking. You are fully conscious, but there's little or no thought activity.

[Speaker 2] (50:11 - 50:28)

Can you tell me why you say on page 233, make sure you don't go to sleep immediately after switching off the set, or even worse, fall asleep with the set still on. I know my friend Gail sometimes is watching TV and she goes, I don't know if I was watching or my feet were watching, because she goes to sleep with the TV on.

[Speaker 1] (50:30 - 51:06)

So then all the turmoil that you've just been watching and you've just spent a significant amount of time below thought in a state of unawareness and unconsciousness. And if you go from, that will affect the quality of your sleep. And you will notice also when you wake up in the morning, you won't be as refreshed.

It's vital to go into sleep from a place of consciousness rather than unconsciousness.

Then the quality of your sleep will be much better and you will wake up feeling renewed.

[Speaker 2] (51:06 - 51:15)

I noticed that. See, I don't watch television before going to bed. Hardly watch television at all.

But I noticed that if I meditate before going to sleep, I have a better sleep.

[Speaker 1] (51:15 - 51:46)

Yes. And what I recommend to people is as they lie in bed, ready to go to sleep, lie on your back, flat on your back, and bring attention, scan your body with your attention, from your feet to your head, your hands, your arms, and then feel the internal aliveness of the body as you lie there. You lie in the energy field of your body.

That means there's also very little or no thinking going on.

[Speaker 8] (51:46 - 51:46)

That's right.

[Speaker 1] (51:46 - 52:06)

Because the attention moves into the body. Into the body. And there, from there, you go to sleep.

Hold that for five, ten minutes. It's a very pleasant way of saying goodbye to that day and of going into sleep. It feels very much alive.

It's joyful, actually, to lie there in that energy field.

[Speaker 2] (52:06 - 52:18)

And that energy field that you're talking about is exactly what this whole chapter is about, is the energy field of inner space. Yes. Go inside the body and allow yourself to be the observer of the body.

[Speaker 1] (52:19 - 52:45)

Yes. And then you connect with the energy. You merge the energy field.

And of course, the body is mostly empty space, 99.999% empty space. Physicists tell us the space between the molecules, the atoms that make up the body, the spaces in between the atoms is so vast that your body is 99.999% empty space.

[Speaker 2] (52:47 - 53:18)

That's a lot for my brain to take in right now. But I do want to thank you for joining us. Get ready for our next class, Chapter 9.

We're coming to the end. Your inner purpose, your inner purpose, for all of you who've read this book, looking for your inner purpose, this is what it's all about, people. Thank you.

Thank you. For bringing us into inner space. Next week is Inner Purpose.

When it defines what you do in the world, puts you in alignment, and all things come. Yes. As they should.

[Speaker 1] (53:18 - 53:22)

And then comes the alignment of inner purpose and outer purpose.

[Speaker 2] (53:23 - 53:26)

Ah, that's it. Thanks, everybody. Good night.

[Speaker 8] (54:07 - 54:07)

Good night.

Eckhart Tolle A New Earth : The Pain Body (Chapter 5) [gid : //art19-episode- locator/V0/hMltjad5gPoYtF5Z4ZS5Jo1o0XKzZ7VZuw2fk2J6G8Y]

Hello to all you podcast listeners. We're bringing you something really special. One of the great spiritual thinkers of our time, Eckhart Tolle and I, are giving you a chapter-by-chapter class on what I believe is his groundbreaking masterpiece, Eckhart's best-selling book, A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose.

This book resonated with me in such a profound way. I truly think that it's the most important book I've ever read. It's changed the way I live my life, so much so that I always have a copy on my nightstand, because I constantly give myself a refresher course.

And now more than ever, we need to create what Eckhart calls A New Earth, inside our personal lives, in our communities, and the world. Give it a listen, and over 10 episodes, you too will be opened up and learn how to quiet your mind, get your ego in check, live a fully more present life. We're talking deep, big picture, even delving into consciousness and the reason why we're all really here.

My greatest hope is that Eckhart's quiet wisdom and patient teachings will resonate with you as they have with me. Each podcast episode will start with my conversation with Eckhart about a chapter, and then Eckhart answers questions from people who are reading along in the book. So I encourage you to get your own copy of A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose, and join us for a thrilling, enlightening, and spiritual experience.

We're nearly halfway through our New Earth series with Eckhart Tolle, one of my favorite spiritual thinkers of all time. So chapter five, wow, it is a really good one. It helps explain a lot.

It is about how all the stuff you're dragging around from your past is causing all kinds of pain and drama right now in the present. Eckhart has a name for this. He calls it the pain body.

Oh, this one's a game changer, I gotta tell you. Once you begin connecting to the idea of the pain body, you can see it. I mean, we all know somebody where it's shown up big time, and it may be showing up in you.

You're gonna have new perspective on those moments when it feels like all your buttons are being pushed. It's that pain body showing up. And if you've ever had long-standing issues with a family member or friend, you might just find the secret to healing a broken relationship.

So let the ahas begin. On to chapter five, the pain body. We're at the halfway mark, and I'd like to thank all of you who are committed to this work and make time every week to share this space with us and to give this to yourself.

So together, I believe that we are beginning to create powerful changes in our lives as individuals, and then putting that out into the world. Before we get started, I wanted to share something with all of you. Our friend Elizabeth Lesser of the Omega Institute sent me a poem that I'd like to share with everybody.

So listen to this, Eckhart. It says, Stand still. The trees ahead and bushes beside you are not lost.

Wherever you are is called here, and you must treat it as a powerful stranger. Must ask permission to know it and be known. The forest breathes.

Listen. It answers. I have made this place around you.

If you leave it, you may come back again, saying here. No two trees are the same to raven. No two branches are the same to wren.

If what a tree or a bush does is lost on you, you are surely lost. Stand still. The forest knows where you are.

You must let it find you.

[Speaker 1] (4:04 - 4:06)

Don't you love that? That's beautiful.

[Speaker 2] (4:06 - 4:51)

Yes. What I'm finding too, reading this book and then working with you every week, is that everything starts to be sacred. I mean, everything starts to be.

You can find the sacred in the most ordinary of things. And that there is a calmness and a stillness to almost everything if you can get quiet enough yourself to feel it. That's what's happening to me.

As so many other people are experiencing whatever you're experiencing, how the reading of this book, The Awakening for you, is taking on whatever form it does in your life. That's what I'm seeing for myself. Everything's magical.

You never have to be bored, ever.

[Speaker 1] (4:52 - 5:07)

No, no. And the need for artificial stimulus goes when people continuously need to, whenever they get home, they need to switch something on to have some kind of entertainment. You can still enjoy entertainment, but you're not dependent anymore.

[Speaker 2] (5:07 - 6:15)

On that to fill you up. Well, tonight we're discussing Chapter 5. So glad we're in the pain body.

So I wanted to just start with my idea of an overview of this chapter. You say that in this chapter, that the human mind seems to be hooked on me and my story, constant mind chatter that keeps negative emotions alive and personalizes everything. You say at the beginning of this chapter on page 129, I'm on everybody, that the greatest part of most people's thinking is involuntary, automatic and repetitive.

It's no more than a kind of mental static and fulfills no real purpose. Strictly speaking, you don't think thinking happens to you. The statement, I think, implies volition, you say.

It implies that you have a say in the matter, that there's a voice involved on your part. But really, you say, I think it's just as false a statement as I digest or I circulate my blood. Digestion happens.

Circulation happens. Thinking happens.

[Speaker 1] (6:16 - 7:08)

Yeah. So it's becoming aware that thinking happens to you all the time. The key is becoming aware of it.

It's happening to everybody. Until the awareness occurs, then you are identified with that voice in the head, with its repetitive thought patterns. And that is what most people are trapped in.

And it makes up their superficial personality with all the continuous repetitive judgments and likes and dislikes and prejudices and whatever makes up the content of their egoic mind. So people are trapped in that and derive their sense of self from that, which is ultimately insubstantial, conditioned by the past, not who they are.

[Speaker 2] (7:08 - 7:27)

Absolutely. And you say also in Chapter 5, The Pain Body, you show how this addiction to being these thoughts in our head, this addiction to these thoughts in our head, to this negativity is at the root of humanity's problems. On page 137, you write, We are a species that has lost its way.

[Speaker 1] (7:27 - 8:15)

Yes. And we are lost. I could say also we are species lost.

We are lost in thought. We've lost ourselves in the mind. So looking for some kind of identity in the movement of thinking without ever really finding it.

So the most important step in any polished awakening is to realize that there is a voice in the head that doesn't stop speaking. When you realize, oh, this, and then you begin to realize what kinds of things the voice is saying, repetitive judgments and so on, negative thoughts about yourself, about other people, about situations you are in, especially all these repetitive negative thoughts that many people are trapped with, you become aware of that.

[Speaker 2] (8:15 - 8:21)

Yes. And then you become aware that it's really just the story that you've told yourself about yourself.

[Speaker 1] (8:21 - 8:21)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (8:21 - 8:22)

And that's all it is.

[Speaker 1] (8:23 - 8:23)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (8:23 - 8:25)

All right. That it has no power.

[Speaker 1] (8:25 - 8:25)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (8:25 - 8:28)

Yes. And the past has no power over it.

[Speaker 1] (8:28 - 8:36)

No power. The power comes in with your awareness that there is a voice. Yes.

Because the awareness is not part of it. And that is part of becoming present.

[Speaker 2] (8:37 - 8:51)

Yes. One of my favorite quotes of this chapter is, on page 141, nothing ever happened in the past that can prevent you from being present now. And if the past cannot prevent you from being present now, what power does it have?

[Speaker 1] (8:52 - 9:27)

Yes. Yes. Because many people are so attached to the past that they carry a burden, like carrying a huge sack on your back, a burden.

You're identified with that. And they believe that they're unable to be present because the past prevents them from being present. But it can't do that.

You can step out of the stream of thinking, take your attention into the present, and immediately the past no longer has that power over you.

[Speaker 2] (9:27 - 9:30)

Because nothing ever happened in the past that can prevent you from being present.

[Speaker 1] (9:30 - 9:31)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (9:31 - 12:01)

Now. You say that the core of all of this is the pain body. On page 141, we read that any negative emotion that is not fully faced and seen for what it is in the moment it arises does not completely dissolve.

The energy field of old but still very much alive emotion that lives in almost every human being is the pain body. And chapter five introduces us to the pain body. Amazing.

You know, when I read this, I thought about my childhood. Now, I've shared my childhood with lots of people. And as a child, I was raised by my grandmother for the first six years.

And my grandmother used to whip me often, like I used to get beatings on a regular basis. And it was really a part of our culture. And I know many of you were raised this way, too, that not only would you get beaten for almost, you know, for doing nothing, for you broke a glass or you, you know, spoke out a turn or whatever the adults deemed was inappropriate for you in that moment.

But I would get beaten. And then I was never allowed to have any emotion about it. I remember feeling many times my grandmother would whip me with switches.

She would braid the switches together and I'd get a whipping. And then in the middle of whipping me, she'd say, stop your crying, stop your crying. And I'd get whipped until I would stop crying.

And then afterwards, she would say, you better wipe that pout off of your face. You better put a smile on your face. So you'd have to now act as though the beating that you just had didn't happen.

And when I read this, that any negative emotion that is not fully faced and seen for what it is in the moment it arises does not completely dissolve. It leaves behind a remnant of pain. I realized that that pain of not being able to express the emotion of just being able to be angry.

I mean, now I see kids today when their parents say something and they don't like it. The kids can say, I don't like you or that upset me or, you know, God forbid, I hate you, which, you know, in my culture was never allowed. You had to suppress that, whatever you're feeling.

If you're beaten, wipe that pout off of your face, wipe your tears, stop crying right now. And so that would be a huge pain body that I would end up carrying, especially as a child, because you say children especially carry it.

[Speaker 1] (12:02 - 12:09)

So did you find then that as you grew up that there was a lot of unexpressed negative emotion in you?

[Speaker 2] (12:09 - 12:37)

I didn't, it wasn't unexpressed. It was repressed ability to, it's what caused me to have the disease to please for so long. A desire to please everybody because the ability to say in the moment this upsets me or this really bothers me or what you're doing I don't like was not something I felt I could do for the longest time.

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (12:38 - 12:47)

So the, all these negative remnants of negative emotions, they become, they accumulate in the body.

[Speaker 2] (12:48 - 12:49)

I eat mine.

[Speaker 1] (12:49 - 14:44)

Yes. And then together they form what I call, because now we need to realize that any emotion that you have is a form of energy that's acceptable, I think, to most people. Just as every thought you have is a form of energy, every thought is energy, so there's nothing spooky about that.

So when we say, when I say that the pain body can be considered almost an entity in its own right that lives in you, some people find that's a little spooky, but all that I'm trying to say is here that it's an energy form. Entity is another word for it. So an energy form lives in you that you may not be aware of all the time because some of the time it is dormant and it's only active for a certain percentage of time.

So first realization is that there is something in me that seeks unhappiness, that seeks unpleasant experiences, that seeks more negativity because it feeds on those things. Those things, negative thoughts, will feed the pain body. That is one of the favorite ways the pain body to feed is on your own thinking.

So this is very important for people to realize, to observe within themselves that periodically, in many people, an addiction to negativity arises. And if you can recognize that as it arises, then you're no longer totally at the mercy of it. WINFREY.

[Speaker 2] (14:44 - 14:46)

Right, because the awareness dissipates it.

[Speaker 1] (14:47 - 14:48)

DR. WOLFF. Yes. WINFREY.

Yes. DR. WOLFF. Yes.

WINFREY. Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (14:49 - 15:04)

And so, back to this point, though, whenever there is negativity in your life that you never fully dealt with, that negativity, the energy of that negativity has to go someplace. And you're saying where it goes is inside us.

[Speaker 5] (15:04 - 15:04)

DR. WOLFF. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (15:04 - 15:17)

WINFREY. And for me, everybody knows I've struggled with my weight for years. For me, that's the form that it takes.

For a lot of other people, it makes them outwardly, you know, angry or negative toward other people. DR. WOLFF.

[Speaker 1] (15:17 - 15:18)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (15:18 - 15:22)

WINFREY. But it has to take some form. For some people, it makes them sick, makes them ill.

[Speaker 1] (15:22 - 15:23)

DR. WOLFF. Yes. WINFREY.

[Speaker 2] (15:23 - 15:23)

Uh-huh.

[Speaker 1] (15:23 - 16:06)

DR. WOLFF. And a very frequent manifestation of it, perhaps the most frequent manifestation of the pain body is in intimate relationships, where periodically partners have to go through their drama. They have to reenact drama every few weeks, in some cases every few days.

They go through intense emotional negativity. And usually, the pain body awakens first in one, in either the man or the woman first. And when the pain body awakens, it wants some kind of reaction, negative emotional reaction.

[Speaker 2] (16:06 - 16:07)

WINFREY. It's seeking that from the other person.

[Speaker 1] (16:07 - 16:08)

DR. WOLFF. Because it feeds on it. WINFREY.

[Speaker 2] (16:08 - 16:09)

Uh-huh. DR. WOLFF.

[Speaker 1] (16:09 - 16:36)

So many people have realized when I've spoken about it, there is, oh, yes, this is happening in our relationship. WINFREY. Uh-huh.

DR. WOLFF. And periodically, the need, the pain body arises, and it then will attempt to push the partner's buttons, as they're called, in some form of psychotherapy. They say pushing the person's buttons means the pain body knows exactly what buttons to push in your partner, buttons that will certainly bring a negative reaction.

WINFREY.

[Speaker 2] (16:36 - 16:51)

Now, is the pain body ultimately this feeling of not being good enough? Is the pain body there because of a feeling of not being worthy, of not knowing its sense of presence or consciousness? Is that why it's the pain body?

[Speaker 1] (16:51 - 17:13)

DR. WOLFF. Well, it's the emotional aspect of the ego. WINFREY.

Yes. DR. WOLFF. So really, pain body is part of the ego, and it's a very unhappy entity.

WINFREY. Mm-hmm. DR. WOLFF. But because its very existence consists of this unhappy vibration, it does not want an end to its unhappiness, because an end to its unhappiness is the end to the pain body. WINFREY. Got it.

[Speaker 2] (17:14 - 17:18)

Got it. Linda, she has a question about the pain body and her sister. DR. WOLFF.

[Speaker 3] (17:18 - 18:57)

I do, and thank you, Oprah, so much for this. I first encountered your book, Mr. Chole, in 2005, and have read it at least four times. You write on page 148 that the pain bodies love intimate relationships and families, because that is where they get most of their food, and that really resonated for me.

I had a huge aha moment, because I have a sister who has always interacted with everyone in the family in a very dramatic way, and I always considered her to be a drama queen who would rather have a problem than solve a problem. But after reading this chapter, it helped me so much understand more about her and what was going on and why she was interacting with us the way that she is. My question is, now that I've seen that—of course, I wanted to call her and have her read the book, but you've already talked about how sometimes that's not necessarily the best way to approach people.

But what is the way? How can I really reconnect the family? She is separated from our family.

She's separated from her children, from us, and we have no relationship at all, and it's really tragic. And I want to do something to help bring us back together and don't know what to do.

[Speaker 1] (18:58 - 19:02)

So at the moment, you have no contact with her at all?

[Speaker 3] (19:02 - 19:18)

She has totally withdrawn everything. I do send her emails every month or so just to check in. Sometimes she responds, but very terse and cold, most times not.

[Speaker 1] (19:20 - 21:08)

I hope an opportunity will arise for you to get together at some point so you can continue to invite her if there's an event at home or whatever, and then just be open. But when she does come, it's very important for you not to buy into her drama. I don't know whether this happened in the past, whether she used to draw other family members into her drama.

That's usually the tendency. So now when you meet her again, then you will realize, of course, you will be in a different state of consciousness because you will see that what she is suffering from is the disease of the pain body, and that is not part of who she actually is in truth. So you can be there as a very compassionate presence.

And when the drama arises again, as it will, because her pain body will be very active again when she meets you or any family member, when it happens again, it is very unlikely that you will be, you will find yourself forced to react to the pain body because you will be present. So you can simply recognize the pain body in her without the need, as that was there in the past, the need to react to it and therefore buy into her drama and feed her drama. And that will be a very strange experience for her, somebody who simply accepts her the way she is and if accusations come at you, whatever she does, you did this or whatever, whatever form the drama takes.

[Speaker 3] (21:08 - 21:09)

You sound like you know her.

[Speaker 1] (21:10 - 21:56)

I know the pain body. They're all the same basically. So then you can simply accept that she's suffering from this and simply be there as a compassionate presence without reacting.

Allow her to be in her pain body. And that means the drama cannot sustain itself for very long if only one part, one person plays the drama. It needs two.

So you're not feeding her pain body anymore. And then see what happens. She may be confused.

I've experienced that quite a few times when people came up to me with heavy pain bodies.

[Speaker 2] (21:56 - 22:18)

It's a story that you tell in this chapter about the friend, the friend who comes to your house and she has all the papers and she's complaining, and she doesn't know what to do. And she lays out all the papers and she's complaining, complaining, complaining. And Eckhart basically says nothing but just listens and is the presence there for her.

And finally she picks up her papers, confused, and goes home and the next day says, what did you do to me?

[Speaker 1] (22:18 - 22:42)

Yes. Yeah. Yes.

Yeah. But don't underestimate the pain body's ability to draw out some, to make you unconscious again, to push some kind of button and you will find yourself reacting again because pain bodies are very cunning, very clever, and they know exactly what will make you unconscious and what will make you react.

[Speaker 2] (22:42 - 22:46)

You speak of it like it's a creature that's like an alien force inside of us.

[Speaker 1] (22:46 - 22:48)

Yeah. Yes. That's how I see it.

[Speaker 2] (22:48 - 22:59)

Really? Really. But you see that, Linda, that this is, this then becomes your sacred spiritual journey.

This is a part of your spiritual journey to not be drawn into the drama.

[Speaker 3] (23:00 - 23:17)

Well, I, it's so interesting you put it that way, Oprah, because that's what I've kind of come to the conclusion that this is part of my awakening. You know, it's my role in my family is to kind of be the one to help her get out of this.

[Speaker 2] (23:17 - 23:25)

Yeah. And not by judging and not by telling her to, but by being that which you, you know, want, wish to emulate.

[Speaker 3] (23:26 - 23:28)

Yeah. And that's the hard part.

[Speaker 2] (23:28 - 23:29)

Yeah, that's hard.

[Speaker 3] (23:29 - 23:34)

Yes. Not judging because I guess that's the part of the pain body that she activates in me.

[Speaker 2] (23:35 - 23:40)

Because your pain body wants to say, who do you think you are? Exactly. I know.

I've been there.

[Speaker 1] (23:41 - 24:22)

And, and of course, that when the, when the pain body takes over a person, the, the whole personality becomes transformed. And sometimes people are shocked when they, they marry somebody or they start living with somebody. And this, this lovely man or woman that they said that they loved so much one morning, suddenly he or she turns into a little monster and the total energy shift in them, the complete change of energy, like, like it's truly as if they were possessed by a completely different, very negative personality.

And that comes as a shock often to people when they start living together.

[Speaker 2] (24:23 - 24:23)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (24:23 - 24:30)

And again, it doesn't mean that necessarily that you chose the wrong person to live with. It just means for the first time you experienced...

[Speaker 2] (24:30 - 24:31)

The pain body showed up.

[Speaker 1] (24:31 - 24:32)

That person's pain body.

[Speaker 2] (24:32 - 24:39)

And also what you, what we were talking about in the last chapter, you were playing a role up until then. You were playing the role, I am in love with you.

[Speaker 1] (24:39 - 24:40)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (24:40 - 24:45)

And often love you say is about your own possessiveness. Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (24:45 - 24:57)

And so the roles are easy to play as long as you're not living together, then you can sustain the roles. But when you start living together, very soon the roles cannot be played anymore.

[Speaker 2] (24:57 - 25:15)

And also that's why I was thinking with pain bodies, what happens on a lot of holidays, Linda, you've seen this in families, everybody comes together and you have all those pain bodies in a room, clashing and reacting to one another and all living in the past about the past.

[Speaker 1] (25:15 - 25:15)

Oh, yes.

[Speaker 2] (25:15 - 25:19)

That's what all the that's what the coming together for families is about.

[Speaker 1] (25:19 - 25:30)

Thanksgiving and Christmas Day are the best day for the pain bodies because everywhere and often the families go through the same thing year after year.

[Speaker 2] (25:30 - 25:56)

Really? Thank you, Linda, for bringing that up. Thank you so much.

Yeah. The reason why all you have all these pain bodies clashing Thanksgiving on the major holidays that come together and people have a an image in their mind, the courier and lves, the painting of what they want the Thanksgiving dinner to be. And instead it becomes something different because everybody's bringing their past.

[Speaker 1] (25:56 - 25:56)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (25:56 - 25:58)

And living living that moment through their past.

[Speaker 1] (25:59 - 26:20)

Yes. Yes. That's amazing.

So how do we change that? Well, the it just takes one person to be present and one person not to participate in this. So when next event happens, family gathering, whatever it is, then you will see the usual comments will be made.

[Speaker 2] (26:20 - 26:21)

That's right.

[Speaker 1] (26:21 - 26:24)

And the usual reactions will happen.

[Speaker 2] (26:24 - 26:26)

Can you believe he did? Yes. Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (26:27 - 27:07)

Yes. Or you visit your parents and your parents don't fully approve of you. And then they say, well, you remember 10 years ago, I told you you should have done that.

You would be better off now if you had done that. Right. And again, immediately, if you're not present, pain body will arise and become defensive.

Anger will arise. So you're in it. You're drawn into the drama.

Yes. So it requires great alertness not to be drawn in. Right.

So because we don't underestimate the pain body's ability to draw in sometimes even very present people can still be drawn in. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (27:08 - 27:24)

And you were saying that it happens in intimate situations, in family situations more often than not, because I would suppose is because out in the world, everybody's trying to be at least on their best behavior. A lot of people who are taking this class, you know, are working people who see it in their jobs every day with people.

[Speaker 5] (27:24 - 27:24)

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (27:25 - 27:59)

Yeah. Every day. I love on page 134 when you say, although the body is very intelligent, it cannot tell the difference between an actual situation and a thought.

It reacts to every thought as if it were a reality. It doesn't know it's just a thought to the body. A worrisome, fearful thought means I'm in danger.

And it responds accordingly, even though you may be lying in a warm and comfortable bed at night. The heart beats faster. Muscles contract.

Breathing becomes rapid. There's a buildup of energy. But since the danger is only a mental fiction, the energy has no outlet.

The rest of the energy turns toxic, interferes with the harmonious functioning of the body.

[Speaker 1] (28:00 - 28:00)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (28:00 - 28:03)

So that's what you said weeks ago about worry.

[Speaker 1] (28:04 - 28:04)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (28:04 - 28:05)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (28:05 - 28:14)

Oh, to just see in oneself when worry arises, what we call worry is simply repetitive, negative thought patterns.

[Speaker 2] (28:14 - 28:22)

That's right. And your body doesn't know the difference. And so all of that energy is inside your body.

And that's what makes people sick.

[Speaker 1] (28:22 - 29:09)

Yes. Yes. So it's very important to clear up your mind so that you stop the continuous negativity of the egoic self-talk, as we could call it.

So recognize it and then step out of that stream of thinking. Use any device you can. I recommend device number one to step out of the stream of negative thinking.

Come into the present moment. Take one or two conscious breaths. Ah, you've stepped out of the stream of thinking.

Or feel the inner body. Feel the aliveness in your arms, your hands, your legs. Put your attention there.

[Speaker 2] (29:09 - 29:10)

Right.

[Speaker 1] (29:10 - 29:42)

You've stepped out of the stream of thinking. Or look at something and bring your full consciousness to the active perception. For example, a tree or a flower, anything natural is best.

Look at anything natural. Give it your full attention. That takes you out of the stream of thinking.

Or any natural sound, the bird, the wind. To bring you back, really. Or bring you back to the present.

These are all little ways in which you can step out of the stream of repetitive thinking.

[Speaker 2] (29:42 - 29:59)

In the story on page 137, The Duck with the Human Mind. Love that story. You talk about how the human mind creates a me and a my story that keeps negative emotions alive.

Live and personalizes everything. And it's ultimately led our entire species to a precipice. So tell us the duck story.

[Speaker 1] (30:00 - 30:01)

Well, I was...

[Speaker 2] (30:01 - 30:02)

What lessons it has for all of us as humans.

[Speaker 1] (30:03 - 30:54)

I was writing The Power of Now and writing about accumulated emotions. And then I was taking a break and went into the park and sat on a bench by a pond. And I saw two ducks approaching on the pond.

And suddenly, maybe one duck got too close to the other. Suddenly, they started getting into a fight. It lasted for about 30 seconds.

And then they both separated, swam off in opposite directions. They were still agitated, both of them. And then both ducks kind of lifted themselves up on the water and vigorously flapped their wings a few times.

They almost stood up on the water and went, and then suddenly they were totally peaceful again and swam off.

[Speaker 2] (30:55 - 30:56)

They were doing cleansing breath.

[Speaker 1] (30:56 - 30:56)

Cleansing.

[Speaker 2] (30:56 - 30:58)

Which we did from Russia last week.

[Speaker 1] (30:59 - 31:47)

And I realized at that moment I had been actually been writing about this. And the ducks were showing me how to, how they let go of what otherwise would have become accumulated negativity in the body. Wow.

And so that instinctive, natural intelligence takes over. And then I realized they all do it. And all the ducks after a fight do that.

And immediately that... It's like clearing their wings. Clearing.

The energy gets dissipated. Wow. And they are totally peaceful afterwards.

And then, of course, they don't have a human mind, which repeats the story of what this duck did to me and what I'm going to do to this duck next time, or I'm never going to get close to her anymore. Whatever the story is.

[Speaker 2] (31:47 - 31:49)

How dare you come over to my side of the pond again.

[Speaker 1] (31:49 - 32:11)

Oh, yes. And then talk to other ducks about what that duck did to you. And all the story making, because the story making, it still goes on in the human mind, keeps the old emotion alive.

Yes. So you relive it. Again, the negativity is relived.

The body believes it's still happening. Yes. Because the body believes in what your mind is thinking.

[Speaker 2] (32:11 - 32:16)

Because although the body is intelligent, it cannot tell the difference between an actual situation and a thought.

[Speaker 1] (32:16 - 32:30)

Yes. So whatever thoughts you're holding, your body believes that is your reality. And the corresponding emotions will arise.

Wow. And the corresponding physical states of contraction will be there.

[Speaker 2] (32:30 - 32:30)

Wow.

[Speaker 1] (32:31 - 32:36)

So this is how... That was the duck's lesson. So I put it into the book.

[Speaker 2] (32:36 - 32:52)

That's right. I mean, and we see so many people. I know I have friends who've been through divorce and they live and still, you know, hating their ex-spouse and talking about their ex-spouse and what their ex-spouse did to them.

And, you know, years after the spouse is gone.

[Speaker 1] (32:52 - 32:56)

Yes. And so that keeps it alive as if it were still happening.

[Speaker 2] (32:56 - 32:57)

As if it were still happening.

[Speaker 1] (32:57 - 33:10)

And there's an addictive quality. And that's in your mind. It's in the mind and it's addictive.

There's an addictive quality to that. You need to see it in yourself to see that it's still the case for some people who are listening to us.

[Speaker 2] (33:10 - 33:14)

So it's like the monks. Tell the monk story. I like the monk story.

The two monks.

[Speaker 1] (33:14 - 33:14)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (33:14 - 33:17)

And the one monk picks up the girl on the road.

[Speaker 1] (33:17 - 34:15)

Yes. That's the story of two monks on a pilgrimage. And they come across in a village.

They come across a young 17-year-old girl with a long kimono trying to cross a very muddy road. But she's not daring to step into the mud. So one monk picks her up, carries her across the road through the mud, puts her down.

And so the monks walk on in silence for another four or five hours. Just practicing noble silence. And then after four or five hours, they're getting close to their destination.

One monk says to the monk who had picked up the girl, Oh, you know, you shouldn't have done that because we monks are not supposed even to touch women. So you really, you shouldn't have picked up that girl. You're not supposed to do that.

The other monk says, Oh, are you still carrying that girl? I put her down hours ago. So the other monk was still carrying the girl, the event, in his head.

[Speaker 2] (34:16 - 34:16)

Four hours later.

[Speaker 1] (34:17 - 34:19)

And for four hours, he was walking with this burden.

[Speaker 2] (34:19 - 34:20)

Yes. Right.

[Speaker 1] (34:21 - 34:27)

And that shows the reluctance of the human mind to let go of the past.

[Speaker 2] (34:27 - 34:37)

Yeah. So how many of us reading this chapter are not carrying things from four hours ago, but carrying things from four years and 40 years ago?

[Speaker 1] (34:37 - 34:38)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (34:38 - 34:41)

People are still holding on to what was done to them.

[Speaker 1] (34:41 - 34:41)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (34:41 - 34:41)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (34:41 - 34:50)

Yes. That's a dreadful burden. It's like carrying a useless weight around with you.

And some people carry it from all their lives.

[Speaker 2] (34:50 - 34:50)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (34:51 - 34:54)

And they even derive some identity from that.

[Speaker 2] (34:54 - 34:54)

Right.

[Speaker 1] (34:55 - 34:55)

Right.

[Speaker 2] (34:56 - 35:09)

I had to learn years ago to let go of what had happened to me as a child, because what I realized, you know, my grandmother, the people who took care of me did the best they knew how to do at the time. And if they had known better, they would have done better.

[Speaker 1] (35:09 - 35:33)

Yes. And that is always the case. Whatever humans have done to you, it's always they didn't know any better, because they could only act according to their level of consciousness.

Nobody can act beyond their level of consciousness. So you cannot expect your parents, if you believe they did something that was wrong. You cannot expect your parents to have acted beyond their level of consciousness.

[Speaker 2] (35:33 - 35:34)

Because that's all they knew.

[Speaker 1] (35:34 - 35:47)

Yes. Jesus on the cross said it all when he says, forgive them for they know not what they do, which means they are unconscious. So when you realize that, you naturally forgive.

[Speaker 2] (35:47 - 35:47)

That's what Jesus meant.

[Speaker 1] (35:48 - 35:52)

Yes. If he had lived now, he probably would have said they are unconscious. They don't know.

[Speaker 2] (35:52 - 36:30)

OK. I love when you say that sometimes understanding the science for me, sometimes understanding the science behind these concepts, as you're talking about, makes it easier. And you say on page 146, all things are vibrating energy fields in ceaseless motion.

The chair you sit on, the book you're holding appears solid and motionless, only because that's how our senses perceive their vibrational frequency. That is to say, the increased movement of the molecules. And so we're all vibrating at different frequencies.

And the vibrational frequency of the pain body resonates with that of negative thoughts.

[Speaker 1] (36:30 - 36:36)

Yes. Negative thoughts and other negative emotions coming from other people.

[Speaker 2] (36:36 - 37:27)

And then I love that you say this on page 152. You write on page 152. I think this is great here.

If you were not familiar with our contemporary civilization, if you had come here from another age or another planet, one of the things that would amaze you is that millions of people love and pay money to watch humans kill and inflict pain on each other and call it entertainment. When I read that, I thought, yeah, if you're from another planet, you think you would think, what is that? So what is that?

That people love that. I mean, the most violent movies, destructive. You know, all those pain bodies up there on the screen.

And what is it about a lot of the public that enjoys that?

[Speaker 1] (37:27 - 38:18)

Well, if it's in some cases, violence may be actually helpful to see because it shows the human madness. If it shows the wider context in which violence happens, if it shows the psychological dysfunction behind violence, and then it can be helpful. But most of these movies contain violence that is actually meant to feed the pain body.

And it is the pain body in the viewers who enjoy those films that enjoys the violence. So it's not actually the people themselves who pay money to see these movies. It's the pain body in them that feeds on the violence that it watches.

So and the people who produce these movies, probably...

[Speaker 2] (38:18 - 38:19)

Your pain bodies are writing them.

[Speaker 1] (38:19 - 38:25)

The pain bodies write them. The pain bodies write the movies. The pain bodies produce them.

And the pain bodies watch them.

[Speaker 2] (38:27 - 39:53)

I think it's interesting what you talk about on page 159, that as there are individual pain bodies that each of us carries because of whatever negativity happened in our lives and we didn't completely deal with that at the moment, that there is also a collective pain body that nations carry and races carry. And you say the collective racial pain body is pronounced in Jewish people who suffered persecution over many centuries. Not surprisingly, it's strong as well in Native Americans whose numbers were decimated, whose culture all but destroyed by the European settlers.

And black Americans too, for whom the collective pain body is pronounced. Their ancestors violently uprooted, beaten into submission and sold into slavery. The foundation of American economic prosperity rested on the labor of four to five million black slaves.

In fact, the suffering inflicted on Native and black Americans has not remained confined to those two races, but has become part of the collective American pain body. It is always the case that both victim and perpetrator suffer the consequences of any acts of violence, oppression or brutality. For what you do to others, you do to yourself.

This collective pain body that America holds, and I think a lot of Americans, number one, don't know it exists and want to deny that it does exist because they say, I didn't have anything to do with slavery. Yes. Or I didn't have anything to do with the Native Americans.

[Speaker 1] (39:53 - 39:54)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (39:54 - 39:54)

Correct?

[Speaker 1] (39:54 - 39:55)

That's right.

[Speaker 2] (39:55 - 39:59)

Yes. And to not to recognize it is what? Is to be in denial of what is the truth?

[Speaker 1] (40:00 - 40:04)

Yes. And then it continues to be there without you knowing it.

[Speaker 2] (40:04 - 40:04)

That's right.

[Speaker 1] (40:05 - 40:06)

So that's...

[Speaker 2] (40:06 - 40:09)

Because the recognition of it is the beginning of being able to change it, right?

[Speaker 1] (40:09 - 40:11)

Yes, that's right.

[Speaker 2] (40:11 - 41:00)

You also talk about this when it comes to women. Pretty River Revolutionary, on page 155, you say, the suppression of the feminine principle, especially over the past 2,000 years, has enabled the ego to gain absolute supremacy in the collective human psyche. Although women have egos, of course, the female form is less rigidly encapsulated than the male and has greater openness and sensitivity toward other life forms.

If the balance between male and female energies, I found this so fascinating, had not been destroyed on our planet, you say, the ego's growth would have been greatly curtailed. With many people becoming more conscious, the ego is losing its hold on the human mind because the ego was never as deeply rooted in women. It's losing its hold on women more quickly than on men.

[Speaker 5] (41:00 - 41:01)

Yes. Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (41:01 - 41:29)

You know what? Reading this, as a female living in the world today, able to make choices and be my own person and express myself, I had forgotten about the years and years of torture and suppression and killing of women. Yes.

For the most natural things, because you liked animals, because you were a midwife, because you were a woman who wanted to have a voice. Yes. Tortured, killed.

[Speaker 1] (41:29 - 41:29)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (41:30 - 41:31)

Hundreds of millions of women.

[Speaker 1] (41:31 - 41:36)

Yes. And it's the, what I'm saying is, it's the arising ego.

[Speaker 2] (41:36 - 41:38)

And that happened because of the ego in the male.

[Speaker 1] (41:39 - 41:55)

Yes, yes. So it's not the male as such. It was the growing ego in the male that had to, that saw the feminine principle and the feminine energy as a threat, because it could not fully establish itself in that.

[Speaker 2] (41:55 - 42:00)

You believe we would have had a new earth a lot sooner if there had been not the suppression of the female.

[Speaker 1] (42:01 - 42:46)

Yes, probably. Yes. But the shift is happening now.

And the interesting thing is that there are more women changing, going through the shift in consciousness than men. So men are going through also, but there are, for example, Elizabeth Lesser mentioned at her, the Omega Institute, about 70, 75% of the people who come there for inner work, consciousness transformation, and so on, are women. So women are more open now to the change in consciousness that is happening than men.

I'm not saying it's not happening to men also, but there's a greater openness.

[Speaker 2] (42:46 - 43:09)

We love it. Audrey in Campbell, California, one of our emails says, I have 20 pounds to lose as a child. My father and brother call me big girl and big fat cow.

Could this be, that's not good. Could this be why, Audrey, that's not good at all. Could this be why I have such difficulty losing the weight?

I've been hearing these words in my head for years and years, and I can't let the words go, help.

[Speaker 1] (43:10 - 44:37)

Yes. So, of course, these words have become lodged in your mind, and they have taken up residence in your mind, and now you can't get rid of them. So they are, again, thoughts are energy formations, and thoughts that get lodged in your mind, sometimes they start in childhood when parents tell you something negative.

For example, some parents tell their children, you are stupid. It's a stupid thing to say. Yes, it's a stupid thing to say that your kids are stupid, yeah.

And if told that repeatedly, this thought becomes lodged in their mind. If you're not, if you don't bring presence to it now, you won't be able to dislodge it. So the first thing is to realize what has happened to you is that something that you were told years ago repeatedly has now become a thought that refuses to leave.

It's an energy, you're possessed, so to speak, temporarily, hopefully, by a thought. So realize, the questioner here needs to realize that this is an old thought, and realize it's no more than a thought. It is not the truth.

It's an old record that has been playing itself.

[Speaker 2] (44:38 - 44:42)

OPRAH WINFREY Over and over in your head. Big fat cow, big fat cow, big fat cow.

[Speaker 1] (44:42 - 44:52)

Yes, no more than an old, no more than a tape. So when you hear it again, when you hear that in your mind, you realize there's the old tape again.

[Speaker 2] (44:52 - 44:52)

That's right.

[Speaker 1] (44:53 - 44:56)

It loses its power because it's no more than that. That's right.

[Speaker 2] (44:56 - 45:00)

There's an old tape for the past, and the past has no power over the present moment.

[Speaker 1] (45:00 - 45:00)

No.

[Speaker 2] (45:00 - 45:36)

All right. I love also when you say that thinking is no more than a tiny aspect of the totality of consciousness, the totality of who you are. I had an awakening moment with that thought, because we all think that we are our thoughts.

Up until reading this book, I think so many of us, I was one of those people, thinking that we were our thoughts. Yes. And then to read that thinking, not only are we not our thoughts, we are the awareness of our thoughts, but that thinking is only no more than a tiny aspect of the totality of consciousness, the totality of who you are.

[Speaker 1] (45:37 - 45:47)

And the awareness, of course, compared to thinking, the awareness is vast, it's limitless, and has infinite potential for anything creative to come into your life.

[Speaker 2] (45:48 - 45:49)

Because that's where all your creativity comes from.

[Speaker 1] (45:49 - 46:03)

Not through thinking. Thinking can become a secondary tool in manifesting something, but not with the creative insight, the creative realization, the creative idea, does not come through the movement of thinking.

[Speaker 2] (46:03 - 46:10)

Wow. Think about that, everybody. That when you have a creative inspiration, does not come through your thoughts.

[Speaker 1] (46:10 - 46:10)

No.

[Speaker 2] (46:11 - 46:12)

It comes through your being.

[Speaker 1] (46:12 - 46:15)

Yes. And so the space of awareness...

[Speaker 2] (46:15 - 46:16)

Space of awareness.

[Speaker 1] (46:16 - 46:49)

Now, to the extent to which you are creative in your life, depends on how much access you have in yourself to that space of awareness, of presence. And it's sometimes enough for brief moments to have access to that. And for some people, that's enough to lead a creative life.

But of course, we want to be more than that. Not just have brief access, but to make it the very foundation of your life.

[Speaker 2] (46:49 - 47:08)

It's like when Quincy Jones was doing the We Are The World tape, and he brought together all of those artists, and he left the door open. First, they had a sign outside the door that said, check your egos at the door. And then they left the door open.

He said, we wanted to leave room for God to walk in the room. Leave enough space for God to walk into the room. Yes.

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (47:08 - 47:13)

Yes. So your nature is leaving the space. Leaving the space.

Leaving the space inside yourself.

[Speaker 2] (47:13 - 47:14)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (47:17 - 47:45)

Also, if you want change in your life, some people don't know, there will be other chapters when we'll talk about life purpose and so on. But the realization of what it is, for example, what it is that you're meant to do in your life, also comes from that inner space. Are you able to allow the space within to come still?

Right. And then whatever it is that you need to know will arise from there.

[Speaker 2] (47:45 - 47:46)

Will come through that.

[Speaker 1] (47:46 - 48:03)

Yes. And then it may come as a thought, but then it'll be an inspired thought. Right.

Without the space, without the stillness, without accessing that dimension, thinking cannot be inspired. There is no inspired thinking. The inspiration comes from the realm that is deeper than thought.

[Speaker 2] (48:03 - 48:06)

I got that. And you're never going to think your way to a purpose.

[Speaker 1] (48:07 - 48:18)

No. And you're not going to worry your way out of a problem. You're not going to worry your way out of a problem.

It's impossible because worry means to manufacture more problems.

[Speaker 2] (48:18 - 48:25)

The same thing. You're just continuing the same thought over and over. Yes.

Yes. You need a different kind of consciousness. Wasn't it Einstein that said that?

[Speaker 1] (48:26 - 48:38)

Yes. I don't remember whether it was Einstein or Jung, but he said a problem cannot be solved on the same level of consciousness that gave rise to the problem. That created it.

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (48:38 - 48:50)

We have an email from Judy in Columbia, South Carolina. Could you talk a bit about alcohol and drug abuse in the pain body? Is this an attempt at escape from the pain body, alcohol and drug abuse?

[Speaker 1] (48:50 - 50:41)

Yes. Often it is. And I mentioned that in the book.

It's an escape of not wanting to feel the pain anymore. In some people, the pain body is active almost all the time. And that is a dreadful way to live.

And those people in whom the pain body is active almost all the time, often they will seek some kind of escape from it because they can't live with that pain anymore. The pain body loves it, but it makes your life more and more miserable. But there is also a good chance, and maybe that connects us to what I said in the book, if people who have a heavy pain body, their chance of awakening is also quite great.

Because when life becomes unbearable because you're creating so much pain continuously for yourself, your desire to awaken, to finally get out of this misery, is much greater than a normal person's desire to awaken. In other words, you could say, when you're having a relatively pleasant dream, you don't mind so much dreaming on. But when your dream turns into a nightmare, then you really want to awaken from that when you can't stand it.

And that was the case with me. I had a very, very heavy pain body that drove me almost very close to suicide until the realization came I cannot live with myself any longer. And that thought was the breakthrough where the separation happened from the consciousness that I am and the ego and the pain body that I had been identified with as the unhappy little me.

[Speaker 2] (50:41 - 50:47)

Were you really actually going to kill yourself? Did you have a plan to kill yourself?

[Speaker 1] (50:47 - 50:59)

Yes, I had my first plans to kill myself. I already had at the age of nine and ten. Really?

Yeah. So I had worked it all out, but somehow I didn't quite have the courage yet to do it.

[Speaker 2] (50:59 - 51:00)

Because the pain body was so heavy.

[Speaker 1] (51:00 - 51:08)

Already then it was quite heavy. Then it subsided a little bit and then it came back again very strongly in my 20s.

[Speaker 2] (51:08 - 51:16)

Wow. And what was it? What was it that caused you to feel you felt depressed?

You felt unworthy? You felt what?

[Speaker 1] (51:16 - 51:33)

It was partly living in almost continuous conflict in the home environment between my parents who were always fighting. There was very little peace at home. I was very sensitive, so it was very hard for me to even be there at home.

[Speaker 2] (51:33 - 51:38)

As you say in the book, for children who watch their parents fight, it's almost unbearable.

[Speaker 1] (51:38 - 52:00)

Yes. And that, of course, contributes to the child's growing pain body. So my pain body grew very quickly.

But if this had not been the case, I would never have awakened. I would have been in a relatively pleasant dream. That's right.

[Speaker 2] (52:00 - 52:05)

If you'd had a nice, happy childhood, you might not be sitting here teaching with us tonight.

[Speaker 1] (52:05 - 52:15)

Certainly not. No, no. So retrospectively, one is grateful for one's suffering because eventually suffering will wake you up.

[Speaker 2] (52:16 - 52:35)

You said when I read earlier on page 141 about any negative emotion that's not fully faced and seen for what it is in the moment it arises, does not completely dissolve, it leaves behind a remnant of pain. So when we are faced with negative emotions on a daily basis, we should embrace them. We should go into them rather than resist them.

[Speaker 1] (52:35 - 52:50)

Yes, accept whatever emotion. Accept it. Accept because it's part of accepting the present moment.

Because if a certain negative emotion is part of what's happening in the present moment, what can you do? It's already happening.

[Speaker 2] (52:50 - 52:50)

So take it.

[Speaker 1] (52:51 - 53:26)

Take it. Make sure, oh, there it is. I can feel that anger.

I can feel the sadness. I can feel it. Be the space for it.

So accept that it is there. The acceptance of the present moment, no matter what form it takes externally or internally, whatever form it takes. Externally, it means whatever situation arises right now, it always is as it is at this moment.

You might as well say yes to it. Internally, it means whatever emotion arises at this moment, it is as it is. You might as well say yes to it.

[Speaker 2] (53:26 - 53:56)

Well, I know next week we're going to be talking about breaking free of the pain body. But just for now, if every time you can see it, show itself and recognize it for what it is. There it is.

There's my pain body again. There's his again. That the awareness of it begins to dissolve it, correct?

Yes. OK. OK.

Somebody asked earlier, there was an email where somebody wanted to know whether or not that pain body allows artists and writers and creative people to be more creative. The pain body.

[Speaker 1] (53:57 - 54:25)

There are, especially in modern art and modern writing, there are some artists who express the pain body in their work. So when you read their work or when you see their visual art, you can see, wow, there's a lot of pain in there. And perhaps that is how they free themselves to some extent of the pain body because they externalize it and make it into an object.

[Speaker 2] (54:25 - 54:28)

Yeah, you can take that suffering and turn it into something else.

[Speaker 1] (54:28 - 55:02)

Now, whether this will be, whether this is really helpful to many humans, I don't know. To see so much pain on a canvas, I'm sure it was helpful for the artist to externalize that. So I believe that the deepest art goes deeper than that, than just show the pain, the human pain.

Right. It goes, it may also include the human pain, but like the great works of literature are not just expressions of human suffering. They also show a dimension that's beyond suffering.

[Speaker 2] (55:03 - 55:24)

Well, another question from Mary in Birmingham, Michigan. Politics in the pain body, she writes. Is it the pain body that leads us to be fascinated with others' downfalls?

Is that our pain body that loves to hear bad things about other people, the tabloids? Yes, hearing- Even watching the news, things that are true, scandals.

[Speaker 1] (55:24 - 55:49)

Loving bad news. Yes, loving bad news. Is also of the pain body.

And so there are some publications actually thrive on emotional negativity. They actually, they sell a negative emotion. Some newspapers do it in their headlines, and because they have realized the more negative the headlines are, the more papers they sell.

Yeah, you're saying the British press- They love it. Love it.

[Speaker 2] (55:49 - 55:52)

Yes. And we do too now in our country.

[Speaker 1] (55:53 - 55:53)

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (55:53 - 56:01)

Yeah, more and more tabloid newspapers, tabloid magazines, following the lives of famous people. People love to see famous people fail.

[Speaker 1] (56:01 - 56:02)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (56:02 - 56:02)

Fall.

[Speaker 1] (56:02 - 56:03)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (56:03 - 56:04)

And that's our pain body?

[Speaker 1] (56:05 - 56:28)

Yes, whenever you see that negativity, the enjoyment of negativity in whatever form, or the enjoyment of negative events, the enjoyment of negative things happening to people, the enjoyment of your own negative thinking, all that is the pain body. It loves pain. It lives on it.

[Speaker 2] (56:29 - 56:30)

And loves drama. It seeks drama.

[Speaker 1] (56:30 - 56:32)

Drama is part of that pain. Yes. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (56:33 - 56:43)

Yes. Yes. So that's what we're going to talk about next week, is how you can begin to free the pain body or any energy that you're carrying from the past.

[Speaker 1] (56:43 - 56:43)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (56:44 - 56:45)

And you can free it instantly.

[Speaker 1] (56:45 - 57:12)

You free it instantly, but although not the whole of it necessarily instantly, but in the moment, some of it can become transmuted. And the example I give is like, it's like putting a log into the fire. The fire is the fire of consciousness or presence.

And so the pain body can actually become transmuted and becomes presence. We'll talk about that next week.

[Speaker 2] (57:12 - 57:18)

Before we say goodbye though, let's sum up what we've covered in this class today. What do you want people to know about the pain body?

[Speaker 1] (57:19 - 57:54)

The most vital thing is for people to be there when it happens. Now, when it happens means it's either happening to somebody close to you at home, your partner or family member, or more importantly, when the pain body happens to you. Now, it's easier to realize that the pain body is there when you see it arising in somebody else.

Always easier. You require more presence to see it in yourself. But that's the vital thing is to be there and realize it.

That's the pain body.

[Speaker 2] (57:54 - 58:14)

Well, the way you know it's in yourself is when you start to tell yourself the story. The woman who was the big fat cow, her family had called her a big fat cow her whole life. When you start to replaying the tapes in your head over and over again, my story, my story, my story, identifying with that, anything you identify with is ego.

[Speaker 1] (58:14 - 58:15)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (58:15 - 58:18)

Right. That's how you know it's the pain body.

[Speaker 1] (58:18 - 58:40)

Or a sudden emotion arises, something your partner made a remark, said something, and an enormous emotion arises that is out of proportion to the external trigger. And that could be the beginning of the arising pain body. So then you say, oh, there's the pain body.

Then you're ready. You're not at the mercy of the pain.

[Speaker 2] (58:40 - 58:50)

So let me ask you this. On the night that you had that breakthrough where you said, I cannot live with myself any longer. Did you lose your pain body too?

[Speaker 1] (58:51 - 58:51)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (58:52 - 58:54)

Well, that just was one happy day, wasn't it?

[Speaker 1] (58:56 - 58:57)

That's quite rare.

[Speaker 2] (58:57 - 58:58)

Oh, my goodness.

[Speaker 1] (58:59 - 59:01)

You lost your ego.

[Speaker 2] (59:01 - 59:04)

You lost your pain body. What a day that was.

[Speaker 1] (59:04 - 59:58)

Well, after years of dreadful suffering. So that's the one more thing to say about the pain body is when you see it in somebody else, you have to be very careful. The pain bodies don't like to hear that they are the pain body.

So when you're talking to somebody like your partner, you have to be very careful because once the partner has already been taken over by the pain body, if at that stage you say, there's your pain body, your partner won't be hearing you anymore. The pain body will be hearing you and the pain body will say something back. It won't be pleasant.

It won't be pleasant. And you can't argue with the pain body. No way.

You can never win an argument with the pain body. He'll always win. The pain body will win.

It'll go on and on and on. And we'll find another clever argument why the pain is justified and right.

[Speaker 2] (59:59 - 1:00:25)

And so it's like our first caller from Silver Spring was talking about her sister. What we must learn to do is be compassionate. Yes.

Stand still. Yes. Stand still, as I said with the point.

Stand still and allow it to be whatever it is. Yes. And then...

And then you don't feed it. You don't feed it. Don't allow yourself to be drawn into the... pulled into the drama of it.

[Speaker 1] (1:00:25 - 1:00:55)

And if the pain body is not fed, then it won't sustain itself for that long. It'll have to seek some other place where it will get fed or it will subside. So that's the beauty when you're in a relationship.

If both partners are conscious enough, you can have an agreement that says, if I observe the pain body beginning in you or you observe the pain body beginning in me, please let me know.

[Speaker 2] (1:00:55 - 1:00:55)

I'm gonna point it out.

[Speaker 1] (1:00:55 - 1:01:09)

You have to point it out at the beginning before it takes over completely. Because once it's taken over completely, the person won't be hearing you anymore. But at the beginning, you can still say, could that be your pain body?

Even that is dangerous, but you can try.

[Speaker 5] (1:01:09 - 1:01:11)

Oh, it's not my pain body.

[Speaker 2] (1:01:12 - 1:01:22)

Again, we thank you. Thank you. We thank you.

You're a man without a pain body. We'll see you in class next time. Thank you.

[Speaker 4] (1:01:23 - 1:02:03)

Hey, Super Solars. Looking for a great new read or listen? Well, that's why we're so excited about Oprah's new book, The Path Made Clear, Discovering Your Life's Direction and Purpose.

Eckhart Tolle A New Earth : Your Inner Purpose (Chapter 9) [gid : //art19-episode-locator/V0/0PC4nTMaM6HGcAMVI J4lCs5H3UHZSacJOy3z3m6 vQ]

[Speaker 2] (0:00 - 4:21)

Hello to all you podcast listeners. We're bringing you something really special. One of the great spiritual thinkers of our time, Eckhart Tolle and I, are giving you a chapter-by-chapter class on what I believe is his groundbreaking masterpiece, Eckhart's best-selling book, A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose.

This book resonated with me in such a profound way. I truly think that it's the most important book I've ever read. It's changed the way I live my life, so much so that I always have a copy on my nightstand because I constantly give myself a refresher course.

And now more than ever, we need to create what Eckhart calls a new earth inside our personal lives, in our communities, and the world. Give it a listen, and over 10 episodes, you too will be opened up and learn how to quiet your mind, get your ego in check, live a fully more present life. We're talking deep, big picture, even delving into consciousness and the reason why we're all really here.

My greatest hope is that Eckhart's quiet wisdom and patient teachings will resonate with you as they have with me. Each podcast episode will start with my conversation with Eckhart about a chapter, and then Eckhart answers questions from people who are reading along in the book. So I encourage you to get your own copy of A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose, and join us for a thrilling, enlightening, and spiritual experience.

We're in the homestretch, just two more classes to go. And now that we're at Chapter 9 of A New Earth, we are getting to the heart of why this is absolutely one of my favorite books ever. Last time, we explored who we are at our core.

Now we're taking it to the next level by learning how to discover our inner purpose. That's the reason why we're all here. And today, we'll tackle just how you do that.

That's why this chapter may be the most exciting one of all. It answers the question, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose. One thing is for sure.

Once you find your inner purpose, and then you align with that, everything else that you do, your job, your relationships, your family, everything, then you're in the flow of your life. And that is a very good place to be, the only place to be, really. We're here with author Eckhart Tolle.

Number 9, we're counting down. We're down to the last two chapters of our book. And it is my most sincere hope that all of our classes so far have been leading you to find more purpose and joy in your own lives.

And it's really about bringing clarity to finding your inner purpose. And so I think this is my most exciting chapter of all. I know I say that every chapter.

I didn't say that last chapter, and I'll tell you why in a few moments. Well, we're discussing chapter 9, your inner purpose. Finding your purpose is what I believe we're all put on the planet to do.

So many people spend their lives trying to figure out what job, what job to do, what to do, what to do, what to do. I think when you figure out what your purpose is and you align the outer purpose with the inner purpose, then the job really doesn't matter. Right.

That's the essence of what you're saying in this chapter. Let us begin. Page 257.

As soon as you rise above mere survival, the question of meaning and purpose becomes a paramount importance in your life. Many people feel caught up in the routines of daily living, you say, that seem to deprive their life of significance. Some believe life is passing them by or has passed them by already.

Others feel severely restricted by the demands of their job in supporting a family. Some are consumed by stress, lost in frantic doing. Many people long for the freedom and expansion that prosperity promises.

Others already enjoy the freedom that comes with prosperity and discover that even that's not enough to endow their lives with true meaning. There is no substitute for finding true purpose. So how do we do it?

[Speaker 1] (4:22 - 6:57)

Now, what you just read basically, of course, means that many people spend their lives in a state of almost permanent dissatisfaction. Right. Unfortunately.

They are maybe looking for some purpose or they may have given up hope that there is some purpose for them and they're just surviving or making a living. Or caught up in the doing. Caught up in the doing, in the stress of it.

Right. And so usually when we talk about purpose, when people talk about purpose, they think of purpose in terms of future. Where am I going?

What am I supposed to do? What's the direction I'm going? What is my goal?

The goal that I want to achieve? And that, of course, is there. It has its place.

But I call that the outer purpose. More fundamental than the outer purpose is what most people usually overlook. And that is the realization that what matters most is finding your inner purpose.

Now, to most people that initially doesn't mean anything, inner purpose. And this is why I explain it briefly in the dialogue that is there in that chapter where somebody asks about, I want to know what my purpose is. And I tell that person, your purpose is to be here at this moment and asking that question because this is where you are.

So inner purpose is aligning your life fully with the present moment. So that you are no longer out of alignment with the present moment, which leads to the state of dissatisfaction that we talked about. That is the reality for many people.

So you have to go, first of all, beyond the state of dissatisfaction that is so many people's reality. Right. But you cannot go beyond the state of dissatisfaction through some future goal that says one day I would like to be in a state of fulfillment or satisfaction.

No. You have to enter the state of fulfillment and satisfaction by becoming one internally with the present moment. And your purpose then, your inner purpose is that alignment with where you are right now.

To be totally where you are and whatever you are doing, even if it doesn't look like the life purpose that you want for the next 30 years. Right. Whatever you are doing now, to be total in doing it.

And no matter what it is, to be true to life by being true to this moment.

[Speaker 2] (6:57 - 8:13)

Yeah. As you say on page 271, there is always only this one step. And so you give it your foolish attention.

This doesn't mean that you don't know where you're going. It just means that the step that you're taking right now is primary. The destination is secondary.

And what you encounter at your destination once you get there depends on the quality of this one step. I love this so much because I discovered this when I was in the third grade. I couldn't articulate it this way in the third grade.

When I was in the third grade, I turned in a book report early in Ms. Driver's class. And the reaction that I got from my third grade teacher taught me or informed me that when you do your best, when you do your best in any given moment, that is well received. Because my third grade teacher told all the other teachers in the teacher's lounge, and I became known as this kid who really loved to read.

And that's why we're sitting here today, because of that. But I learned in the third grade this whole process of whatever you're doing in any given moment, if you do it your best, it leads you to the next best moment. So you don't have to worry about what's the next moment coming if you only do your best in this moment.

[Speaker 1] (8:13 - 8:37)

That's right. Because when the next moment comes, it comes as this moment. Right.

The future, you never experience the future as the future. You experience the future when it comes as the now, because that's all there is. It's all there ever is.

And that's an amazing realization for people to realize life is always just this. It's always the now.

[Speaker 2] (8:37 - 8:47)

Yeah. It's interesting, because last week we had Nick, and you said when Nick was up talking about he had to, well, you have to worry about your bills. And you said, well, you don't have to worry about your bills.

[Speaker 1] (8:47 - 8:48)

You have to pay your bills.

[Speaker 2] (8:48 - 9:02)

You have to pay your bills. But you don't have to worry about paying your bills. So any time I'd find myself, you know, in the mind worrying about something, I don't have to worry about this.

I can either figure out what to do about it or release that thought.

[Speaker 1] (9:02 - 9:02)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (9:02 - 9:02)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (9:03 - 9:08)

Yes. So if the bill is here, but the money is not there right now, I can't do anything, put it aside.

[Speaker 2] (9:09 - 9:09)

Put it aside.

[Speaker 1] (9:09 - 9:18)

And then see what action can I take now. And then you do whatever action you can take now. Yeah.

If you can't take any action, then you just be with it. Yeah. Right.

[Speaker 2] (9:19 - 9:43)

But I love that when I read that there is always only this one step. And so you give this one step your fullest attention. That's in the middle of page 271, everybody.

And this doesn't mean you don't know where you're going. It just means that this step is primary and the destination is secondary. And what happens is most people are living their lives as though the destination, the end, the end is what it's all about.

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (9:43 - 10:07)

As if the end were more important than the means. And so the means and the end, however, are one. Right.

So if there's dissatisfaction and a denial of the present moment, which is a denial of life. Right. You're not honoring life if you don't honor this moment by being open to this moment, then that is how you will experience the future, because the future is no more than an extension of now.

[Speaker 2] (10:07 - 11:05)

Right. You also say on page 271, the unconscious assumption behind all such action is, is that success is a future event and that the end justifies the means. But the end and the means are one.

You say that. Let's say you're a business person. After two years of intense stress and strain, you finally managed to come out with a product or service that sells well and makes money.

Success in conventional terms, yes. But in reality, you spent two years polluting your body as well as the earth with negative energy. You made everybody crazy.

Don't say that. Made everybody and everybody around you crazy and affected others you didn't even know. The unconscious assumption behind all of this action is that success is a future event and that the end justifies the means.

But the end and the means are one. And if the means did not contribute to human happiness, neither will the end. Yes.

So whatever the end result is, it's going to carry the energy of what it took to get there.

[Speaker 1] (11:05 - 11:21)

Yes. That's exciting. Yes.

And that means you actually you determine what kind of future you're going to experience by deciding to be totally, totally aligned with the present moment. That's right.

[Speaker 2] (11:21 - 12:07)

It's your it's your state of consciousness now that will determine whatever is manifested in the future. And when that happens, that'll just be now. I got that.

I got that very much. OK, so let's continue with this lesson. You say the true or primary purpose of your life cannot be found on the outer level.

To me, that's the essence of what this book is all about. Everybody who's searching and waiting for answers and looking for it on the outer level, it does not concern what you do, but what you are, that is to say, your state of consciousness. So the most important thing to realize is this.

Your life has an inner purpose and an outer purpose. Inner purpose concerns being and is primary. Outer purpose concerns doing and is secondary.

You want to elaborate on that?

[Speaker 1] (12:08 - 12:53)

So once you realize that the primary purpose of your life is this is the inner and this is what becomes the main purpose, then the secondary purpose, the outer purpose falls into place by being true to life and being true to now. Life will bring to you whatever is most appropriate as far as your inner purpose is concerned. Life will become helpful.

Suddenly, sometimes the helpful idea comes from within a sudden realization. Oh, this is what I want to do. This is what I have to do.

But the realization only came because you were aligned with the present moment.

[Speaker 2] (12:53 - 13:00)

So let's say this. Everybody, everybody who was born is alive and breathing, has an inner purpose.

[Speaker 1] (13:01 - 13:40)

Yes. The inner purpose is the same for all of humanity, which is being aligned with life, saying yes to life by saying yes to now, aligned with the power of the present moment, which is the power of life. That's everybody's purpose.

Then the outer purpose varies from person to person. How that translates into what you do varies from person to person. And even in one lifetime, it can vary.

You may have a certain outer purpose for 10 or 20 years of your life and suddenly it changes completely. So that that varies and is subject to time. It doesn't necessarily last your whole lifetime.

[Speaker 2] (13:40 - 14:03)

You say finding and living in alignment with the inner purpose is the foundation of fulfilling your outer purpose. It's the basis for true success. Without that alignment, you can still achieve certain things through effort, through struggle, to determination and sheer hard work or cunning.

But there is no joy in such endeavor and in such endeavor. And it invariably ends in some form of suffering.

[Speaker 1] (14:04 - 14:18)

Yes. That is, you're struggling to make it. You're struggling and fighting and basically you're making, you're fighting against life or the world.

Me against the universe is what the ego, how the ego sees it.

[Speaker 2] (14:18 - 14:41)

And isn't it sort of like swimming upstream? I always compare it to swimming upstream. When you're like going against the grain of your life, there's a flow to all of our lives.

And if you are suffering, if you are in pain, if you can't figure out what it is you're supposed to do, if you're worried, worried, worried all the time, it is because you're going against the flow or the grain of your life.

[Speaker 8] (14:41 - 14:41)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (14:41 - 14:47)

Means you're going against inner purpose. Yes. That when you align with inner purpose, everything flows.

[Speaker 8] (14:47 - 14:48)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (14:48 - 14:48)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (14:48 - 15:13)

And any negative state, whenever negativity arises and you dwell in negative inner states, then you're not going with the flow of life. You're against the flow of life. And then you experience life as not helpful.

You experience life as even as hostile because you are in a state of inner denial. You're in state of negativity. You're not open to life.

[Speaker 2] (15:14 - 15:49)

Okay. I got that. I really got that.

I really got that. Another friend of mine, a teacher who wrote a book called Seat of the Soul, Gary Zukov calls it, says, when the personality or ego comes to serve the energy of the soul or consciousness, we've been calling that, when the personality comes to serve the energy of the soul, that is authentic empowerment. I take that to mean from Seat of the Soul that when you align your personality or use your personality to serve the inner purpose, to serve the soul or the consciousness, then you are your most powerful.

[Speaker 1] (15:50 - 16:05)

Yes. In the world. Yes.

And then you're not run by the mind anymore because the mind becomes the servant of what I sometimes call awareness or presence. The mind then serves something greater than itself, which is the consciousness.

[Speaker 2] (16:05 - 16:33)

You say on page 259, instead of being lost in your thinking, when you are awake or aware, you recognize yourself as the awareness behind it. Thinking then ceases to be a self-serving, autonomous activity that takes possession of you and runs your life. Awareness takes over from thinking.

And instead of being in charge of your life, love this everybody, instead of being in charge of your life, thinking becomes the servant of awareness.

[Speaker 1] (16:33 - 16:44)

Yes. And then the mind is quite helpful. The mind can be used for many wonderful things.

Right. When it no longer controls you. I got it.

[Speaker 2] (16:45 - 17:07)

So in essence, our goal on earth as human beings, these spiritual beings in the body, higher consciousness inside this flesh-filled membranous whatever body, our goal is to allow the light of inner purpose or consciousness to come through everything that we do.

[Speaker 1] (17:08 - 17:38)

Yes. This is why we're here. And that is then also the entire universe is, the purpose of the universe, one could say, is the flowering of consciousness.

It moves towards more and more consciousness. So we then become bringers of that, which is why we are here. So then the consciousness, you could call it the light, the light of the source, the light of God comes through the human form.

That's right.

[Speaker 2] (17:38 - 17:54)

And so when you allow the light of God, the light of consciousness to come through you, and it is allowed to fuel whatever it is you do, whatever it is you do will be fueled with a spiritual power that will allow you to be the best at what you do.

[Speaker 1] (17:54 - 18:13)

Yes. And then that also means that what you do is not of primary importance, but how you do what you do is what matters, how you do it. And you could be doing something that the world would regard as relatively insignificant and yet make an enormous difference to the consciousness on the planet.

[Speaker 2] (18:14 - 18:22)

Ivy is from Richmond, Virginia. Hi, Ivy. I hear you have a question about one of my favorite quotes.

Go ahead. What is the question?

[Speaker 3] (18:22 - 19:29)

Well, my question deals with trying to find a career path that merges your inner purpose with outer purpose. And on the top of page 274, you say, Eckhart says, there may be a period of insecurity and uncertainty. And he goes on to say that if you're able to live with uncertainty, even enjoy it, you become comfortable with uncertainty, infinite possibilities open up in your life.

And my question is this. I'm 26 years old. And in the past few months, I've tried to find a career path that merges my inner purpose with my outer purpose and haven't really been able to do so.

I began to think a lot about my life's purpose and question whether or not I would ever find a career that merged my life's work with something I was passionate about. So my question really is twofold. The first is, how should I approach finding a career that is fulfilling but doesn't strengthen my ego?

And secondly, and perhaps the more pressing question for me is, how do I do this while also becoming comfortable and embracing the uncertainty that's defining my life right now?

[Speaker 1] (19:30 - 19:53)

Good question. Yes. So to what extent have you become successful in embracing and accepting at this time of your life that you don't know yet what your purpose is?

To what extent are you able to say, well, see, can I become comfortable with not knowing? Have you been able to do that?

[Speaker 3] (19:53 - 20:02)

There are periods where I've been able to, but mostly it's just a lot of thinking and feeling very uncomfortable about not knowing.

[Speaker 1] (20:02 - 22:09)

Yes, and often the uncomfortableness are certain thoughts that go through your mind that tell you that it's not okay to be in this state. And then you have certain emotions which are the body's reaction to those thoughts. So when these thoughts arise, they tell you it's not okay, the way you are right now is not okay.

Realize that these are thoughts that arise in your mind, conditioned by the surrounding culture and so on. And you don't necessarily need to believe in each thought that comes and tells you it's not okay not to know what to do. Life is an adventure.

It's not a package tour. When you travel, you can take a package tour and everything is already planned. There's no uncertainty.

And every year you go to a nice hotel in a more exotic country, but you won't even know it's exotic because your hotel room is the same as every other hotel room. You're totally sheltered, but everything is planned. You know beforehand where you're going to be in 10 days time exactly.

That's not an adventure and it's unlikely that you are going to evolve internally through a trip like that. But if you went into a true trip into some exotic country, thrown back on your own resources, then you would encounter true adventure and you would probably not be the same person when you come back. Why not?

Because we are constantly faced with uncertainty. And if you're able to accept that, you can actually enjoy the adventure. If you cannot accept it, I'm giving this analogy of a trip because life is a journey.

And so the person who cannot enjoy the uncertainty when adventure comes is going to be in a continuous state of negativity or fear. I don't want to be here. I'd rather be at home.

So realize that life is an adventure and part of the adventure of life is being in that state that you are in now. If everything were already clear to you now, everything were already mapped out, there would be no evolution of yourself as a human being.

[Speaker 2] (22:09 - 22:21)

And may I say, Ivy, that is part of what being 26 is all about. That is what 26 is. You're trying to figure it out.

That is what the 20s are for.

[Speaker 1] (22:21 - 22:53)

Yes. And another very helpful thing to remember is one of the most wonderful things in your period of life is to make mistakes. Yeah.

Because mistakes means you realize, oh, that's not that wasn't my purpose. Yes. And so you're a little bit closer to your true purpose.

And then perhaps you think, oh, baby, that is my purpose. And then after a while you realize, no, that's not. And it's very helpful to make mistakes because gradually you begin to realize what it is that is right for you.

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (22:53 - 24:03)

And many times, as Eckhart says in this chapter, Ivy, and you will find in your 20s, the 20s are about figuring out where you want to be. And there's this frustration. That's why they call that show The Young and the Restless, because there's a restlessness about it.

And I know that because I've kept journals since I was 15 in my 20s. I'm just restless, restless, restless. And when I was your age, 26, I was an anchorwoman in television doing the evening news.

I hated it every single day. And what I now realize, and even then, my displeasure with being in that place every day was really informing me what I needed to do. What I needed to do was to get out of that space.

And many times being in a space that you can clearly identify as, this is, I do not want to do this. I want to be in television, I knew, but I do not want to do this. And I had my father and everybody around saying, you're going to give up that job in television?

I knew I could not do that. News felt exploitive to me. So many times, if you're in a position where you know what you don't want to do, isn't that also helpful, Eckhart?

[Speaker 1] (24:03 - 24:21)

Oh, yes. Yes. For a while, I thought my life purpose was to be an academic at university.

And then the realization, after years of spending time working hard to become a professor, I realized that's not my life purpose at all. But I had to go through that.

[Speaker 2] (24:21 - 24:24)

Didn't you give up a promising career as an academic?

[Speaker 1] (24:24 - 25:49)

Yes. I gave up the PhD. I gave up the promising career.

And my relatives, my mother thought I was insane to give that up. But I knew this is what I had to do. It was so clear, there was no doubt about it anymore.

For a little while, there was doubt. And then the realization was so strong, I had to walk out of there. And that led to a period of uncertainty.

For a few years, I didn't know what am I supposed to do with my life. Here I am. I was just barely managing to survive.

And gradually, I lived, but I was not unhappy. I was happy with the present moment then already. And then gradually, something evolved.

People started asking me questions. People that I met casually, in parks, casually. And gradually, a kind of spiritual teaching started to happen.

And after a little while, when somebody called me for the first time, oh, you are a spiritual teacher. Oh, that's what I am. And so the purpose came by itself.

It came just out of that state of just being with what is and not being unhappy with not knowing. Being at ease with not knowing. Then it's much more likely to come to you when you are at ease with not knowing.

So the question that you can ask yourself, can I be at ease with not knowing?

[Speaker 2] (25:49 - 26:12)

Because what you say on 274 that Ivy had mentioned earlier, you become comfortable with uncertainty. Infinite possibilities open up in your life. And it means when you become comfortable with uncertainty, it means fear is no longer a dominant factor in what you do and no longer prevents you from taking action to initiate change.

That's the big thing.

[Speaker 8] (26:12 - 26:12)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (26:13 - 26:22)

Because as long as you are afraid, you cannot allow the energy of what is supposed to happen to come into your life, as long as you're afraid, right? The fear blocks that.

[Speaker 8] (26:22 - 26:22)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (26:23 - 26:49)

So be alert and watch your mind to see what kind of thoughts it produces. Feel also there may be the emotion of fear, as Oprah says, arising occasionally associated with a thought. Like what's going to happen to me?

Yes. Because the mind wants to know what the future is going to bring. But how dread life would be, how dreadfully boring it would be if you knew already what's going to happen.

[Speaker 2] (26:49 - 27:17)

Well, part of that is because, too, people get afraid because of, again, what Nick said. Nick is our spiritual teacher this week. Because of what Nick said last week about worrying about your bills.

Because you're living outside yourself. You're creating more debt, creating more debt, creating more debt, allowing yourself to operate from the thinking mind. Yes.

At the time that you made these decisions for yourself, you were living on, in practically, you said, at the poverty level.

[Speaker 1] (27:18 - 27:34)

Yes. So. Yes.

And so you survive somehow. You make it. One more question before you go.

Is there anything in your life that you truly enjoy? Are there certain things that you enjoy doing that may not be necessarily associated in your mind with career?

[Speaker 3] (27:37 - 27:41)

Not really. That I can think of. Nothing I can think of.

[Speaker 1] (27:41 - 27:48)

OK. Then what's left is for you to enjoy the present moment and make that your spiritual practice. Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (27:49 - 27:59)

But I thought you were saying earlier, Ivy, about, you know, trying to align your passion, what you love, and getting paid for it. Is that what you were talking about earlier?

[Speaker 3] (27:59 - 28:09)

Well, something I was passionate about. To align something. To align what I'm passionate about once I figure that out.

I don't really know what that is right now.

[Speaker 2] (28:10 - 28:25)

Yeah. To reiterate something that Eckhart was saying last week, it doesn't come out of your head. For everybody who's looking for that answer, for the purpose of your life, or what should I be doing, it does not come from your head.

It's not something that you're ever going to think up.

[Speaker 9] (28:25 - 28:26)

No.

[Speaker 2] (28:26 - 28:57)

You don't think it. Being still and allowing the presence of a universal energy, the presence of consciousness to come through you in such a way that it's a feeling. It is a feeling.

It is not something you're going to think up how to do it. And you will just, you will start to feel that I feel better doing this thing than I feel doing the other thing. It's a feeling that comes to you, not something that comes in your head.

[Speaker 1] (28:57 - 29:15)

Correct? That's right. Yes.

And you need to be careful that you are not in a state of dissatisfaction because when you're in dissatisfaction, the answer is not likely to come, neither from within nor from without. So keep your inner space clear, aligned with now, so that no negativity arises.

[Speaker 2] (29:16 - 29:48)

And then may I add also, for you and everybody else who's trying to get this whole idea of purpose, some clarity about that, when you allow yourself to be still with it, you're not afraid of the uncertainty. The universe rises up to meet you. The world, Eckhart says in here, I can't remember what page in this chapter, but he talks about how coincidences happen.

You know, little things and big things happen. So you then have to be alert and paying attention to your life so when the opening shows itself, you're ready.

[Speaker 1] (29:48 - 30:10)

Yes. And that's much more likely to come when you're in a state of clarity, aligned with now, then the answer can come from within or the answer can come from without. Right.

As some chance encounter, something you see in the paper, or something you can't even think where it might come from, a synchronistic event, a coincidence.

[Speaker 2] (30:11 - 30:12)

It shows itself.

[Speaker 1] (30:12 - 30:12)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (30:12 - 30:35)

That's right. In ways that you hadn't seen before. Thank you, Ivy, from Richmond, Virginia.

Thank you so much. So you say on 261, while you're perhaps still waiting for something significant to happen to your life, you may not realize that the most significant thing that can happen to a human being has already happened within you. The beginning of the separation process of thinking and awareness.

[Speaker 1] (30:35 - 31:08)

Which is the awakening, which is another way of explaining what the term awakening means, that before your awareness or your consciousness was totally identified with thought processes, but now, and this is the case for everybody who reads this book and finds it meaningful. It means if you are reading this book and you find it meaningful, something within your response, it means you have already begun to awaken. If you haven't, the book will be meaningless.

Got it.

[Speaker 2] (31:08 - 31:34)

You say as long as you are unaware of being on 263, you will seek meaning only within the dimension of doing and the future. That is to say, the dimension of time. Whatever meaning or fulfillment you find will dissolve.

Invariably, it will be destroyed by time. And meaning we find on that level is true only relatively and temporary. So you're saying looking outside yourself, you're not going to find the meaning.

No, that's right. Well, Nick, you're back.

[Speaker 4] (31:35 - 31:35)

Good to be here.

[Speaker 2] (31:36 - 31:37)

Okay. You have a question?

[Speaker 4] (31:37 - 32:21)

Actually, my question kind of relies on a premise that's not exactly stated in the book. But the premise is God is love. And if God is love and you love what you're doing as far as a career, then does God then sanction that career?

And is it then meant to be? Is it right? Let's say if you don't go to church, but if you enjoy doing something like reading, and if you're reading constantly and you get a more spiritual feeling from reading than ever walking into a church, then isn't that right?

Isn't that in alignment with, or is love not anything that matters in a career choice?

[Speaker 1] (32:22 - 35:03)

Well, good question. Now, love, of course, is used in a very loose sense. It means so many different things to different people.

And the expression, I love this or that, or I love doing this or that, is used casually by people, often meaning totally different things. For example, if somebody is obsessed with what they do in an ego way, totally focused, but in a negative way to a large extent, totally obsessed with what they are doing. And an outside observer might say, oh, he loves what he's doing.

He loves it so much that he gets up at five every morning and doesn't leave the office until 10 at night. But he's totally obsessed with what he's doing. And there's no love in it.

It's an obsession. Because love is used in such a loose way, sometimes we call that love. So when you actually love what you're doing, it's a totally different energy field that moves into what you are doing.

It means you are aligned completely with what you do. And then, yes, then you do bring a different consciousness. You bring the unconditioned consciousness into this world through whatever you do.

And it might be a doing, or it may just be being somewhere. You mention a church, you can find God in many places. Any place is holy.

And the present moment, when you only pay attention to it, completely, then you realize, actually, it's sacred. The present moment is sacred when you really bring attention to it. And then it doesn't matter where you are.

You can be in a building. You can be out in nature. You can be in the middle of a traffic.

And you really bring your attention to this moment. And you realize there is a sacredness here. You may be able to feel it more deeply when you're out in nature than in the middle of LA freeway.

But even there, it can be sensed if you are present enough. And there, that's love. There, love arises.

And if you're doing something, you're totally in what you do, not obsessed, not wanting the future more than you want the present, but totally wanting the present, totally wanting what you are doing. Then, yes, then you love what you're doing. That is true love.

And anybody who embodies that energy is creating the new earth.

[Speaker 4] (35:04 - 35:06)

So that's correct, then?

[Speaker 1] (35:06 - 35:06)

Yes.

[Speaker 4] (35:06 - 35:45)

There's a difference. I guess I'm thinking of Joseph Campbell, where he talks about following your bliss. And he talks about how appetitive desires like eating and sex and drugs, things through the body, loves that come through the body, are nothing compared to the love that comes from the spirit, which makes everything else pale in comparison.

And that is the bliss that Joseph Campbell talks about. And that's what I think you mean when you say that we are present and we're doing what we're supposed to do, because we feel that feeling that makes everything else pale in comparison.

[Speaker 2] (35:46 - 36:34)

Yeah. Nick, that's what he's talking about at the bottom of 261. So while you're perhaps still waiting for something significant to happen in your life, you may not realize the most significant thing that can happen has already happened within you, the beginning of the separation process of thinking and awareness.

When you take yourself out of your head and take yourself out of the doing, doing, doing, doing, and allow yourself to connect with the consciousness or spirit or soul, whichever word you want to use for it, that is connected to all consciousness. The spirit that is connected to the greater spirit is what he's talking about. Yes.

And... You got it, Nick. It's a lot of hard work.

Nick, listen, I didn't worry this week because he's told you not to worry. Have you been worried about your bills this week?

[Speaker 1] (36:35 - 36:37)

No, he just... Yeah, a little bit.

[Speaker 2] (36:40 - 36:41)

Oh, wow.

[Speaker 1] (36:41 - 37:32)

One more thing when, just to add to this, when the doing, when you're doing in that state of consciousness, that means whatever you do is not primarily a means to an end.

Correct. But an end in itself.

Right. You know what you want to achieve through the doing, that's fine, but the essence of the doing is in the doing, not the goal that you want to achieve through it. So often the question you can ask yourself is, is what I'm doing right now primarily a means to an end or am I total in what I do?

And there's a different quality flows into what you do when it is not just a means to an end. And that is doing in a state of presence and different energy flows into that.

[Speaker 2] (37:32 - 38:21)

I love that. We're at the bottom of 263. You say, for example, if caring for your children gives meaning to your life, because everybody's looking for meaning, what happens to the meaning when they don't need you anymore and perhaps don't even listen to you anymore?

If helping others gives meaning to your life, you depend on others being worse off than yourself so that your life can continue to be meaningful and you feel good about yourself. If the desire to excel, win or succeed, I'm at the top of page 264, everybody, at this or that activity provides you with meaning, what if you never win or your winning streak comes to an end? Making it in whatever field is only meaningful as long as there are thousands or millions of others who don't make it.

So you need other human beings to fail, so that your life can have meaning. I was going to ask though, what if you're making it, you're aligned with your purpose?

[Speaker 1] (38:22 - 38:27)

Yes. Now, after that, it doesn't say that those things should not be pursued immediately after what you just read.

[Speaker 2] (38:28 - 38:43)

Yes. It says, I'm not saying here that helping others, caring for your children or striving for excellence in whatever field are not worthwhile things to do. For many people, they're important.

In the end though, you say it means you should connect them to your inner primary purpose so that a deeper meaning flows into what you do.

[Speaker 1] (38:43 - 39:52)

Yes. For example, then if, for example, we talked about looking after your children and that being the main purpose of your life. Yeah.

And again, we have the two dimensions of purpose. Outer purpose, which is what a good parent does anyway. Right.

You look after the needs of the child. Right. And you protect the child as much as possible.

But is the inner purpose there also? Which the inner purpose is there when a field of awareness arises between you and the child. There's a space.

Are you able to give the child spaciousness or space? Are you able to be open and listen to the child in non-judgmental way? Are you able to be with your child?

Are you able to be with your child or are you continuously doing? Or can you bring being into your relationship with your child? And if you bring being in, that is you're fulfilling the inner purpose.

And then when the child grows up, it's much less likely or improbable that you will get attached to your role of parent. You will then be able to let go of the role and then be able to be whatever you need to be in any given situation.

[Speaker 2] (39:53 - 40:36)

All right. You say if you ignore your inner purpose, that's why I keep reading from the book because I think I want to stress how important it is to connect your inner purpose. If you ignore your inner purpose, bottom of 264, no matter what you do, even if it looks spiritual, the ego will creep into how you do it.

And so the means will corrupt the end. The common saying, the road to hell is paved with good intentions points to this truth. So in other words, not your aims or your actions are primary, but the state of consciousness out of which they come.

Fulfilling your primary purpose is laying the foundation for a new reality, a new earth. Doesn't that mean that it's not just what you do, but it's the intention behind what you do it?

[Speaker 1] (40:36 - 41:21)

Yes, the consciousness that flows into what you do. And there's no future is always secondary in the doing. That is the future is not that you look forward to primarily, but totality in what you do being totally here.

Any performer, any artists know this very well. When you are total, then a completely different energy arises. That's right.

The moment and the artist performs, sometimes there's an empowerment that suddenly comes in because then it's sometimes only then that this person can be absolutely total.

[Speaker 2] (41:21 - 41:36)

Yeah, I see that. So Gwen and Bob have spent years teaching at schools on US military bases throughout Europe. They now live outside Munich, Germany.

Hi, Gwen and Bob from Munich. Hi, what's your question?

[Speaker 5] (41:38 - 42:30)

Well, my question is about apologizing. I'm reading on page 258. You say the most important thing to realize is your life has inner and outer purpose.

And I have found that apologizing when it's the right time helps me get back in alignment. However, when I've been wronged by someone, I expect to hear that apology to help build the relationship and get it back to a positive way. And I like feeling comfortable around others.

And when there's not closure and apologies don't come, I feel very uncomfortable. And I'm beginning to wonder if this is my ego at play and how can I maintain an inner and outer alignment when I don't feel I've had an appropriate apology from the person I expected it from?

[Speaker 2] (42:30 - 42:48)

Well, you just answered your own question, really. I'm going to let Eckhard answer that. But you just answered your own question because you just, key word here, appropriate.

I've not received the appropriate apology from people. That would be your ego that needs that appropriate apology. Take it away, Eckhard.

[Speaker 1] (42:50 - 44:11)

Mr. Thole. And adding to that, of course, the ego, another thing the ego does, it keeps accounts. And it says, you owe me.

And in this case, of course, it says, you owe me an apology. Now, this is good because this is an opportunity for you to become aware of the ego in you. So whenever the ego arises and you recognize it as the ego, it's a great opportunity of saying, oh, there's the ego.

There are the thoughts that the ego produces in my mind which say, he should apologize. She should have apologized. And another thought that comes, I can't be comfortable with this person anymore unless he or she apologizes.

So you can observe the thoughts that the ego produces and you can observe the emotions that are there as the result of those thoughts. So it's a wonderful opportunity for you to see your own ego, which is no more than the human ego. It means there's anything wrong with you.

Right. But to observe the ego in action. This is always the greatest thing.

And then, at that moment, when you become aware of this kind of thought, emotional, mental-emotional pattern in you, who are you? When you recognize it, you're already in the space of awareness from where you recognize it.

[Speaker 2] (44:11 - 44:14)

And you take away its power. You diminish its power.

[Speaker 1] (44:14 - 44:38)

Yes. And so people, there are many reasons why people don't apologize. People don't apologize because they may not even know that there is anything to apologize in their view of things.

Or they may not apologize because their interpretation of what's happened is the complete opposite of your interpretation. And perhaps they think, or their ego thinks, that you should apologize. Or, or...

[Speaker 5] (44:38 - 44:40)

I like to think I do.

[Speaker 2] (44:41 - 44:42)

And other...

[Speaker 5] (44:42 - 44:43)

I get it.

[Speaker 2] (44:43 - 44:57)

But also, that's how you're using it, based on what you're saying, based on what you've just told us here. It's your ego's way of feeling superior because you like to think you do, and you're the one that goes and says, well, I apologized and you didn't.

[Speaker 1] (44:59 - 46:09)

Or, or you can keep a resentment inside for quite a while. And in a resentment, whenever you think of that person, or you meet that person, there's a little resentment at the back, which is also the ego. The resent...

Ego loves hanging on to resentments. And when resentments go on for a long time, as I've described somewhere in the book, they become grievances. Right.

Grievances are heavy, long-term resentments. So you can observe that in yourself, and again, be happy that you are observing, able to observe the ego in you. It's a wonderful thing to be able to do that.

And of course, if... And then another person, the other person who is not apologizing, perhaps it's the ego who prevents them from apologizing, because the ego, in many people, this is not a particular function, perhaps, of your ego, but in many other people, the ego finds it almost impossible to apologize, because it believes that it would be losing something by apologizing, which, of course, is a delusion. So these things happen.

It's a wonderful opportunity for you to see your own ego, and by seeing it, realize awareness grows in you.

[Speaker 2] (46:09 - 46:11)

That's right. Bob, what's your question for Eckhart?

[Speaker 7] (46:12 - 46:27)

Yes. On page 265, Eckhart refers to your external purpose becomes charged with spiritual power, because your aims and intentions will be one with the evolutionary impulse of the universe.

[Speaker 2] (46:28 - 46:29)

I love that.

[Speaker 7] (46:29 - 46:32)

What is the evolutionary impulse of the universe?

[Speaker 2] (46:32 - 47:07)

That is so great. Let's read that one more time. Once that foundation, he says, fulfilling your primary purpose is laying the foundation for a new reality, a new earth.

Once that foundation is there, your external purpose becomes charged with spiritual power, because your aims and intentions will be one with the evolutionary impulse of the universe. Thank you. Because I had written, aha, and did three little, I've read it three times, stars, circles, everything around that.

That's great. Thank you for bringing that up, Bob. Okay.

What do you mean by that?

[Speaker 1] (47:10 - 49:11)

Now, I'm not sending you back to the book, but the answer is somewhere in the book. I'm not sending you there now, so let's look at it. The evolutionary purpose of the universe is the growth of consciousness.

It's going towards, something is flowing into this world of so-called matter, physicality. Something is flowing into this world of physicality or matter that comes from a different dimension, almost one could say. Well, how do I know this?

Because I know it in myself. And I know it, I've observed it in other people too. Something is flowing into this world of this, it seems to be very heavy, the heaviness of matter.

Something very different flows in, which I call consciousness, which you can call spirit. So a spirit is beginning, has already started a long time ago, but now beginning more fully through the human form, amongst other forms, to come into this world more and more fully. This is the arising of awareness, the arising of presence.

And all that is part of the greater evolution because there's a famous dictum, which is so true, as above, so below. So whatever happens here on this planet and in the human form will be reflected throughout the universe. These are universal movements, as above, so below, as below, so above.

So what happens here in the microcosm of the earth will also be happening in the macrocosm. So when I say how, people might ask me, how do you know what the purpose of the universe is, the evolution of the universe is? Because I know it in myself.

If you know it in yourself, you know many, many answers, even about the macrocosm, because the macrocosm is no more than a reflection of the inner.

[Speaker 2] (49:12 - 49:27)

And you see it all the time in nature. Yes. You see it all the time in nature.

The whole process that's going on in nature is also going on with humans, if you compare ourselves to nature. Yes. Yeah, the principles are the same.

Yeah. Did that answer your question, Bob?

[Speaker 1] (49:29 - 50:00)

Kind of. No, you have to really know the answer. You have to go within.

It's not through the mind or through somebody like listening to me and then saying, okay, I believe what you said. I don't want anybody to believe what I said. I want people to really go within and verify within themselves whether or not that is true in their own experience.

So by becoming more conscious of your inner being, many answers will come.

[Speaker 2] (50:01 - 51:54)

Okay, let me take a stab at it, interpreting what I hear Eckhart saying. He's saying that there is, you know, there's a universal source or power of energy that all of us, that we all stem from that universal power or source or energy. You're with me, right?

And you can call it God. You can call it whatever you choose to call it. You can call it, you know, higher consciousness, or you can call it universal energy.

You can call it the divine. When you tap into the part of you that is, we're calling consciousness or presence or inner purpose, when you tap into that, that is connected to the source of all universal power and energy. You're with me so far?

Yeah. Okay. And when you tap into that part of you that is connected to all universal power and energy, your aims and intentions will be one with what all universal power and energy is striving for.

And what it's striving for is for you to allow the consciousness to come through you as a human being. So that's what he means by evolutionary impulse. The impulse of the universe is to support you and you bringing about your higher consciousness.

That's why you're here, is to allow that part of you that is connected to all that is universal energy, the source or God. To better explain it, it is the God in you. When you allow the God in you to come forth, the God of all things supports that.

[Speaker 1] (51:56 - 52:10)

And you just gave us a demonstration of that because the whole energy shifted when you spoke those words, a very powerful energy came through. So beyond what you said, energy that came through with it was actually a demonstration of that.

[Speaker 2] (52:10 - 52:41)

Well, thank you. It's true. Did it?

Good. You got it now, Bob? Yeah.

Thanks Gwen and Bob. Thank you guys. Well, shall we continue here?

You say your inner purpose is to awaken. It's as simple as that. You share that purpose with every other person on the planet because it is the purpose of humanity.

So let's again talk about what it means to awaken. Doesn't the very word purpose imply that you can do something about it? Purpose means on purpose.

[Speaker 1] (52:41 - 52:43)

That's right. I asked that question.

[Speaker 2] (52:43 - 52:46)

You say you can't make it happen that it is an act of grace, this awakening.

[Speaker 1] (52:46 - 54:54)

Yes. And what I talk about is the first moment of awakening. It happens or it doesn't happen.

First moment, which is the disidentification from the stream of thinking and the arising. It might only be a glimpse at first. The arising of awareness.

You're suddenly becoming aware that there is a realm underneath thinking. There's a realm of stillness inside you. You touch it.

Maybe you're out in nature, but that stillness is primarily an inner dimension and it can arise anywhere. But sometimes it's good to have experienced it there where the environment is most conducive to experiencing ultimately the inner because if you don't feel it on the inner, you won't really be aware of the silence around you. That's right.

It's only through the inner that you can be aware of the outer silence. So to be aware of silence, how can you be aware of silence? Only by being still.

Yeah, yeah. Because it's only the stillness in you that is aware of the silence. If your mind were totally occupied with noisy thinking, you wouldn't even know it's still around you.

Or you would say for a moment, oh, it's very still and then you carry on thinking. Right. Wouldn't really experience it.

So there's the equivalent of outer stillness. This is the outer dimension of spirit. You can sense the spirit that's out there in nature but you can only sense it because you already have it within you.

It's that in you that responds, that senses it. So only people whose mind is not totally noisy can actually be aware of silence. And so I sometimes observe when I go for a walk in the forest every day, and often I see people who are jogging or walking their dogs and very few are really there.

They're talking, they're talking on the phone, they have headphones on, they're talking to their friends and all that immersive thinking could be anywhere in the office.

[Speaker 2] (54:55 - 55:12)

Right. Someone asked, Eckhart, everything you say in your book resonates with my spirit so I believe it to be true. However, do people ever ask you how you know all of this?

If so, how do you respond? Where does your knowledge come from? This is Renee in Indianapolis.

Well, that's it. Where does your knowledge come from? How do you know what you know?

[Speaker 1] (55:13 - 56:32)

The essence of it comes through inner realization. In other words, it's by touching the consciousness that one is, that you are. It comes through becoming still and listening for what comes out of the stillness.

It's not primarily based on knowledge, although of course I have read spiritual books, quite a few. I use sometimes some of the terminology that is already in existence, has been in existence for a long, long time. But the book is more than just a compilation of other spiritual books that I have read.

The essence of the book is in my own realization. In other words, the answers come by being still. When I write, I sit there with a notepad, a pen, and become still.

Not on computer? No. Everything is done by hand.

And then I wait for some movement of thought to come out of the stillness. And then gradually a thought formulates itself. And then there is a critical faculty that says, okay, does that make sense?

Sometimes it does, sometimes it doesn't. If it doesn't make sense, I become still again. And then perhaps a thought that is more suited to what I can sense comes up.

And then I write it down.

[Speaker 2] (56:32 - 56:58)

So did you write this book from the place of inner space? Last week we talked about inner space. And I was a little frustrated until the end of the class, because I was trying to get this concept of inner space across to all of our listeners.

Remember I said to you, I'm a little frustrated. And you said, because you cannot understand it through concepts and language, that inner space isn't something you can understand with your mind.

[Speaker 1] (56:58 - 57:15)

No. So as an explanation, it's not very satisfying when one talks about inner stillness and then people try to understand, okay, what's he actually talking about? And you can see already when you're in your head and say, inner stillness, what's that about?

Well, that doesn't make any sense. It doesn't make, of course it doesn't to the mind.

[Speaker 2] (57:15 - 57:16)

Well, people say, that's all that woo-woo stuff.

[Speaker 1] (57:16 - 57:39)

Yes, that's what some journalists often say. They come to spirituality and say, oh, it's all that stuff. They don't give themselves a chance.

Yeah. You really, you have to give yourself a chance and see whether you can sense in yourself that to which these words point. Yes.

So and only then does it become real and alive.

[Speaker 2] (57:39 - 58:13)

And that is the same thing we're saying to Bob and Gwen. When Bob is trying to say, what do you mean by the evolutionary impulse of the universe? What that really means is that when you are in alignment, when your inner purpose is aligned with what you do, that you will be supported by the spirit of God or by universal energy in such a way that life opens up to you.

And people think, oh, it's about you being lucky or gee, isn't that strange that this happened or serendipitous things happen. Things fall into line. Right, when you are in alignment.

[Speaker 1] (58:13 - 58:44)

Yes, that they fall into line. That's one way or another. Everybody can experience that.

So why not give it a try? Live as if the present moment were more important than past and future. On a practical level, of course, you still use past and future.

But give your attention to this. Spend a few days or a few weeks living in that way. Immediately surrendering negativity when it arises and recognizing it as ego based or pain body based.

[Speaker 2] (58:44 - 58:47)

Because all negativity is ego based?

[Speaker 1] (58:47 - 59:45)

Well, negativity loves ego. It's a denial of life. The moment you identify with negativity, that's part of the ego.

So experiment with, because you've lived in one particular state of consciousness for many years, try something different and see what happens. And what happens primarily and first of all, is an inner shift. And after a little time gap sometimes, it gets reflected in the outer realm also.

But that's no longer the main thing because the main thing is already that you enter that state of peaceful, alive presence in yourself when you're aligned with what is, aligned with the now. And that's what matters. The rest is the icing on the cake.

When good things happen to you, it doesn't mean you now feel good because something good has happened to you. Something good has happened to you because you've already found the goodness within you.

[Speaker 2] (59:45 - 59:50)

That's right. So you can only manifest that which you already are.

[Speaker 1] (59:50 - 1:00:23)

Yes, yes, you already are that. Whatever people are looking for, whatever form, they already are that. They're looking for God.

And I'm not saying that this form is God. I'm not saying that this person is God. I'm saying the essence, if you go deep enough within, there is a realm where you and God merge.

And it's everybody's destiny and purpose to live from that place of connectedness.

[Speaker 2] (1:00:23 - 1:01:10)

Yes, because the I am, the I am, is I am that which comes from God. Yes. I am that which comes from God.

Yes. So here we are at week nine, only one more class to go. And I bet so many people can relate to this.

Many people, you say on page 262, who are going through the early stages of awakening are no longer certain what their outer purpose is. What drives the world, you say, no longer drives them. Seeing the madness of our civilization so clearly, they may feel somewhat alienated from the culture around them.

So what do you do in this case? If you're at this point in your life where reading this book is shaking you up and you realize more than ever what you don't want to do. You realize I have been on the wrong course.

You realize you have an awakening. Now what do you do? I'm all awakened.

[Speaker 1] (1:01:11 - 1:03:19)

Now what? Well, the awakening, of course, is the realization of your inner purpose primarily. Yes.

So don't come into conflict with where you are now or what you're doing now. If you cannot surrender to what you're doing now and be okay with it, at least bring acceptance. We talk about in the next chapter.

At least bring acceptance to whatever you're doing now so that you're okay with it. That is vital. Then you are in a state of clarity.

You enter a state of clarity when you're no longer in opposition to your present moment, life where you live or what you're doing. If you cannot surrender, if whatever you are doing continues to produce unhappiness in you and no matter how hard you try, then of course it's a clear sign that you need to leave that situation. Right.

So either you let go of the resistance and see if you can. And sometimes people say, no, I can't. But what they really mean is, I'm not willing to.

Not willing to. Which is very different. You need to see the difference between not being able to and not being willing to.

Whatever applies to you, am I not willing to accept this moment or am I truly incapable of accepting this moment? If you find you're truly incapable of accepting this moment where you're doing your job or whatever you're doing, then this is a sign that it's time for change. Got it.

Many times you will be able to have this energy flow into what you're doing already and transform how you do, perhaps what you've been doing for many years, perhaps in a state of resistance. And suddenly how you do it changes. You're no longer doing it in a state of inner resistance.

And then you bring a completely different energy into what you do. Consciousness flows into what you do. And often either this is deeply fulfilling and it affects many people around you.

Or it could also happen that now that you're no longer resisting what you do, change suddenly comes into your life.

[Speaker 2] (1:03:19 - 1:03:48)

I got that. This is a beautiful quote from page 266. You say that the great arises out of small things that are honored and cared for.

Everybody's life really consists of small things. Greatness is a mental abstraction and a favorite fantasy of the ego. The paradox is that the foundation for greatness is honoring the small things of the present moment instead of pursuing the idea of greatness.

Yes. It's that one step.

[Speaker 1] (1:03:49 - 1:06:16)

That's right. So many people have this idea, I want to achieve something great or be somebody great. And they neglect the step that leads to greatness.

They don't honor this step at this moment because they have this idea of some future moment where they're going to be great. Right. And then it's surprising when you truly look at people, perhaps, who you would say have achieved great things, that even in their life, it really is a sequence of small steps because every moment is quite small.

You are wherever you are at this moment. Some people believe, not to mention you, some people believe I'm doing great work. I mean, I am because the consciousness is moving through this form.

I don't feel personally responsible for what I do as such. But even there, it is small steps. When the writing happens, there's a notepad and a pen and there's the present moment and there's the stillness.

Very small. There's not some idea, I'm going to create a work that's going to change everybody's consciousness. No, I'm just true to this moment.

What this moment requires, it's a blank piece of sheet of paper and a pen and the stillness. It's a small thing. Or when I give a talk, talk, maybe 2,000 people come.

If I had this idea, I'm now going to give an important big talk that would lead to stress and fear because maybe it's not going to be that great. But if you can, with every step being present, it's time to, the car comes to pick me up. If you step into the car and I sit in the car, the car moves towards the venue where the talk is going to be.

I look out of the window. Simple. People walking past the tree, the sky.

Just this moment. Step out. Sit in the waiting, the green room to wait for the talk to start.

Breathing. Simple. Nothing big.

Just a little moment. This moment. Being true to that.

Then step onto the stage. There's an empty chair. I sit in it.

Still. Breathe. I know there's 2,000 people there and I also know I have no idea what's going to come out of this mouth.

Being happy with not knowing. Still. Not big.

It's all small. It's all a sequence of very small moments. And by being true to the small moment, something great arises.

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (1:06:17 - 1:06:51)

And the biggest lesson from tonight is by being true to the small moments, by being true to this moment, it means to bring the sense of presence, the sense of consciousness to every single moment so that everything that you do is fueled from a deeper level than your ego. Everything you do is fueled from a deeper level than your thoughts. That everything you do is fueled from your being and that is what gives meaning and purpose to whatever you do.

[Speaker 1] (1:06:51 - 1:06:58)

That's the essence. Yes. Right.

It's wonderful to see you when the power comes through. You talk. It's beautiful.

The words are so true.

[Speaker 2] (1:06:58 - 1:07:19)

Thank you. Thank you, everybody. I want to thank you for joining us tonight.

As I said, next week will be our last class on A New Earth, the finale. Get ready for our last class, Chapter 10, A New Earth, how to bring awareness to every moment of your life. There really is no higher calling.

This was great. Thank you.

Eckhart Tolle A New Earth : Finding Who You Truly Are (Chapter 7) [gid : //art19-episode-locator/V0/CKOn3z1LpNCByrQYjgpSD3-weFSBLudjVimcPYs5xY]

[Speaker 2] (0:00 - 4:12)

Hello to all you podcast listeners. We're bringing you something really special. One of the great spiritual thinkers of our time, Eckhart Tolle and I, are giving you a chapter-by-chapter class on what I believe is his groundbreaking masterpiece, Eckhart's best-selling book, A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose.

This book resonated with me in such a profound way. I truly think that it's the most important book I've ever read. It's changed the way I live my life, so much so that I always have a copy on my nightstand, because I constantly give myself a refresher course.

And now more than ever, we need to create what Eckhart calls a new earth, inside our personal lives, in our communities, and the world. Give it a listen, and over 10 episodes, you too will be opened up and learn how to quiet your mind, get your ego in check, live a fully more present life. We're talking deep, big picture, even delving into consciousness and the reason why we're all really here.

My greatest hope is that Eckhart's quiet wisdom and patient teachings will resonate with you as they have with me. Each podcast episode will start with my conversation with Eckhart about a chapter, and then Eckhart answers questions from people who are reading along in the book. So I encourage you to get your own copy of A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose, and join us for a thrilling, enlightening, and spiritual experience.

Hi again. So glad you're joining me today, because this class is another one of my favorites. I know I say that.

I've only said it about three times, because I have three really favorite chapters in this book. Chapter seven. Now, you know the full title of Eckhart's book is A New Earth, Awakening to Your Life's Purpose.

And in order to awaken to your purpose, you have to be able to answer the question, who am I? Who are you? Who are you at your core?

Once you take away all the labels, what's really left of you, with a capital Y? Well, figuring out who you are, and perhaps more importantly, who you are not, is what this class really is all about. And hopefully, that is all becoming a little clearer to you as you read the book.

As you'll see, you'll have little epiphanies. I'm a little under the weather. But I can tell you, I love doing this so much.

Nothing dampened my spirits or enthusiasm for these conversations with Eckhart. So my apologies for the stuffy nose and the sniffing. On to chapter seven of A New Earth.

I truly believe that as each one of us becomes more awake and aware in our own lives, so will our families and everyone we encounter, our communities and our countries and eventually our world. And so Eckhart, Tole and I welcome you once again to yet another lesson. Chapter seven, my favorite chapter thus far.

All right, everybody, we're discussing chapter seven, finding who you truly are, which I know is the reason why so many of you picked up this book in the first place, because when I first announced it, I was reading the subtitle that the book is A New Earth Awakening to Your Life's Purpose. Let's start with an overview of what this chapter is really about. You begin with know thyself.

Chapter seven starts with those two words that you say are inscribed above the entrance of a famous Greek temple. You say on page 186, what those words imply is this. Before you ask any other questions, first ask the most fundamental question of your life.

Who am I? And then you say on page 189 that you are not the ego. So when you become aware of the ego in you, it doesn't mean you know who you are.

It means you know who you're not. But it is through knowing who you are not that the greatest obstacle to truly knowing yourself is removed. So let's start off with these two questions.

Who aren't I? And who am I?

[Speaker 1] (4:14 - 8:26)

And of course, the best starting point is the first question. Who aren't I? Because what is left when you realize, and it's usually a process for most people, realizing who you are not letting go of identification with things and so on.

When you realize who you are not, then suddenly who you are becomes revealed to you. And who you are cannot easily be put into words, because if it could, then it could be answered in one simple sentence, and then everybody could repeat that answer and believe that they know who they are. So we start with knowing who you are not, and that begins for people sometimes with loss, where they lose something valuable that they had identified with, or death comes into their lives, some kind of breakdown or disaster happens.

Sometimes those people suddenly... WINFREY. Awaken.

DR. SCHAUER. Awaken. Something has been taken away from them that they had identified with for many years that had become part of their sense of self.

And if something very fundamental that has been part of your sense of self is removed, death, loss, collapse... WINFREY. Even if it's a person, a human being who you loved.

DR. SCHAUER. Yes, it could be somebody close to you who dies. Then of course, at first it leads to enormous suffering, and you feel as if part of you had died also.

And for some people that happens even if they lose possessions, because they were so identified with their possessions that when their possessions are removed, they feel there's nothing left of me. Another, related to possessions, is social position. If people fall from some high social position, there's a scandal that happens all the time in the news.

Not mentioning any names. WINFREY. Yes, don't.

You don't have to. DR. SCHAUER. And then these people can be extremely painful if they had become totally identified with either their possessions or their social position, and they are suddenly faced with a kind of huge emptiness in their lives.

And then the question arises, I'm nobody anymore. And this is the point, a decisive point is reached there where they can either continue to resist and suffer, resist what has happened internally, complain about it, tell themselves story about it, how it's all collapsed. Or they can suddenly come to a point of acceptance of what happened, and acceptance of the present moment.

So the thing that was so important in their lives, actually left behind, I sometimes compare to, if you look at a person's life, it's a tapestry. Consists of all kinds of things that one identifies with. And when a great loss happens, it's almost as if suddenly there's a huge hole in that tapestry of my life.

WINFREY. Correct. DR. SCHAUER. And that is painful when you identify with a tapestry. But behind the tapestry, there's a light that shines through. Because without that light, there wouldn't be anything at all.

That's why you can even see your life. Without the light of consciousness, nothing would be. WINFREY.

Behind the tapestry, there's a light. DR. SCHAUER. I'm using a kind of analogy.

So when you don't resist this hole that has suddenly appeared in this tapestry of your life, then there's a light that shines through then. And I'm using that as an analogy. There's suddenly a peace that comes when the emptiness that is left behind by the form that has dissolved is not resisted internally.

And then through that empty space, there comes what the Bible calls the peace that passes all understanding. Because you can't explain suddenly. And people have reported that this has happened to them.

They lost, sometimes in some cases, everything. They suffered at first. And then suddenly, an inner shift happened.

They accepted.

[Speaker 2] (8:26 - 10:26)

WINFREY. And this also happens when you are grieving somebody that you loved. Isn't it true?

Because when you come to understand fully who you are, it doesn't mean that you will no longer be saddened when you lose loved ones. But you will also, when you become conscious, you then understand that they have just moved from form to formless, and that the formless can have an easier way to come through, come through now even more strongly than it did in the form, if you allow yourself to be with it and to see it and to experience it. Let's go here to page 186, everybody.

This is one of my favorite things. Unconscious people, and many remain unconscious, trapped in their egos throughout their lives, will quickly tell you who they are, their name, their occupation, their personal history, the shape or state of their body, and whatever they identify with. Others may appear to be more evolved because they think of themselves as an immortal soul or divine spirit.

But do they really know themselves? Or have they just added some spiritual-sounding concepts to the content of their mind? Knowing yourself goes far deeper than the adoption of a set of ideas or beliefs.

Spiritual ideas and beliefs may at best be helpful pointers. But in themselves, they rarely have the power to dislodge the more firmly established core concepts of who you think you are, which are part of the conditioning of the human mind. This is my favorite in this chapter, one of my favorites.

I have three stars, then another star when I read it a second time, and another star. Knowing yourself deeply has nothing to do with whatever ideas are floating around in your mind. Knowing yourself is to be rooted in being instead of lost in your mind.

That was beautifully written.

[Speaker 1] (10:26 - 10:48)

Yes. And so I mentioned that because some people identified, many people identified with external things. You mentioned, I believe, a week or two ago, somebody mentioned to you that they suddenly realized that they are not their car.

They're not their car. That's the beginning, early stage of disidentification. But it's good.

[Speaker 2] (10:48 - 11:06)

But we do think we are, and that's why you wrote the whole chapter, we do think we are our roles. Yes, our roles. Because a lot of people have important roles, roles as parents and roles in important positions that affect a lot of people's lives.

And people think that they are their roles and they identify with their status in the world and what they have achieved.

That's right. And of course, it's a question of finding a balance of honoring the role that of honoring the function that you have in this world. So that's fine.

You have to do whatever you're doing. You fulfill your function as mother, as father, or in some other capacity, some public function, business function, whatever it is. So to honor the function without becoming totally identified with the function so that always there's still a human being there, not just a function.

[Speaker 2] (11:38 - 11:42)

So knowing yourself deeply has nothing to do with whatever ideas are floating around in your mind.

[Speaker 1] (11:42 - 12:16)

And also what I meant, what you just read is people sometimes have certain ideas in their mind of who they are. And they may be spiritual ideas. I'm eternal spirit.

That's, of course, wonderful. And basically it is true. But do you truly know that?

Because in order to truly know that you are more, you are much deeper than this form goes far beyond holding certain concepts in your mind. Yeah. It goes to this kind of knowing is a knowing that it goes beyond conceptual.

[Speaker 2] (12:16 - 12:23)

Because if you really knew that you would have a certain way of being or living in the world that would manifest that in the world.

[Speaker 1] (12:23 - 12:35)

Exactly. That would manifest your being. That's right.

And particularly when situations happened, your reaction to a situation always tells you where you are at as far as your level of consciousness.

[Speaker 2] (12:35 - 12:44)

That is why a lot of people become annoyed with people who claim to be so spiritual or so religious who are intolerant of other people.

[Speaker 6] (12:45 - 12:45)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (12:45 - 13:31)

Intolerant of other ideas. Self-righteous. Imposing their ideas on other people because if you truly were what you say you are.

Yes. So moving on to who you think you are. It's a beautiful statement here.

On page 187, everybody. If small things have the power to disturb you, then who you think you are is exactly that small. That will be your unconscious belief.

What are the small things? Ultimately all things are small things because all things are transient. And you say your sense of who you are determines what you perceive as your needs and what matters to you in life.

And whatever matters to you will have the power to upset and disturb you. So people all the time say, you know, I'm a peaceful person. I'm a loving person.

Yes. I'm a kind person. I'm a generous person.

[Speaker 1] (13:31 - 13:33)

I'm a good person.

[Speaker 2] (13:33 - 13:33)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (13:33 - 14:00)

And then the slightest thing goes wrong and suddenly something else comes up, which is total opposite of the good person. And so this is not the deep knowing of who you are. The deep knowing really is, we use the word no here in a somewhat differently from the conventional way of using the word no.

Usually knowing is conceptual knowing.

[Speaker 2] (14:01 - 14:07)

So to be rooted in being instead of lost in your mind. And what does that mean to be rooted in being?

[Speaker 1] (14:08 - 14:14)

And again, we are using words here to describe something that really is beyond words. It's not describable.

[Speaker 7] (14:14 - 14:14)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (14:15 - 15:17)

But just a little hint is we always come back, of course, here in this teaching to the present moment. Absolutely. So when your attention moves fully into the present moment, at that moment you go deeper into being.

You could say that life has two dimensions. There's the horizontal dimension of life, past, future, where everything happens. And most people, their whole existence is on that horizontal surface dimension.

And they think that's their life. They think that's all there is. And of course, then life is quite a threatening place because all that is transient.

Very transient. And you've never encountered the deeper dimension. This, by the way, is a few people have interpreted the Christian cross, which we mentioned also last time in a slightly different context, the Christian cross as being, showing the horizontal dimension of life.

And suddenly it intersects with the vertical dimension. It's also the dimension of the sacred.

[Speaker 6] (15:17 - 15:17)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (15:17 - 15:36)

And so you enter the vertical dimension by becoming present, by bringing your attention into the now. So then, because then past and future disappear from your consciousness. At this moment, there's only the now.

And suddenly a depth opens up within you.

[Speaker 2] (15:36 - 15:47)

And so what you've been saying throughout this book is that if you are living your life in the horizontal, the past and the future, then you're not really living. You are making enemies of this present moment.

[Speaker 1] (15:47 - 15:47)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (15:48 - 15:48)

And you're not truly living.

[Speaker 1] (15:49 - 15:49)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (15:49 - 16:01)

And that when you say, what I interpret when you say knowing yourself is to be rooted in being instead of lost in your mind, is to, in every encounter, and I've been doing this more and more, coming back to your breath.

[Speaker 1] (16:01 - 16:02)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (16:02 - 16:25)

Coming back to the present moment in such a way that you are aware and conscious of everything that's going on around you and recognizing that you, you, you are that awareness. That's who you are. You are the observer of all these things that are going on in the horizontal plane of your life.

[Speaker 1] (16:25 - 16:43)

Exactly. So the, with the vertical comes the, the witnessing presence. That's right.

The observer. Yeah. Oh, that's, and so that's the liberation.

You, that's, you know, sometimes this word liberation is used in spiritual context. That's the liberation from the horizontal dimension, which Jesus calls the world. Yes.

[Speaker 2] (16:43 - 16:51)

Debbie's from the Netherlands. Einstein, you have a question about the quote on page 187 about small things disturbing you. I love this quote.

Go ahead, Deb.

[Speaker 4] (16:53 - 17:26)

Hi. Hi, Oprah. Hi, Eckhart.

Hi. My question is about high sensitivity. I always considered myself as a sensitive person, and that means I'm easily overwhelmed by day-to-day life things that might be considered small.

I've been practicing staying in the moment with challenging moments, but I think I need some more advice. Is high sensitivity just a narrow egoic state, and do you have some tools that might help me to stop feeling so overwhelmed by all these small things?

[Speaker 2] (17:27 - 17:29)

It does sound like a label you've given yourself.

[Speaker 4] (17:30 - 17:30)

Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (17:30 - 17:33)

Yeah. I know. I'm a highly sensitive individual.

[Speaker 1] (17:33 - 17:45)

Yes. Yes. Yes.

That is true. So that's, that also we need to address. Can you give two, perhaps two or three examples of what kind of things you are very sensitive to?

[Speaker 4] (17:46 - 17:58)

Well, a lot of things, but usually when I go into a shop and there's loud music there, I just want to run away. I have a hard time dealing with noise and chaos.

[Speaker 1] (17:59 - 18:02)

Yes. Or being in a big city, traffic.

[Speaker 6] (18:03 - 18:03)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (18:03 - 20:37)

Yes. I suggest that you experiment a little bit when these situations arise and you feel the same thing happening again. And if you bring a very alert attention to the situation, you realize that really there are three levels to this situation.

Level one is whatever it is that disturbs you, the external noise, the chaos, the traffic, whatever it may be. So there is the thing that disturbs you, level one. Level two, there is your reaction to that thing that disturbs you, which could come as, it could be an almost physical reaction as perhaps a contraction in your body.

It could be also an emotional reaction of frustration, irritation, anger. I assume something like that. Right.

And also in addition, the reaction could be certain thoughts in your head about the situation that says, I can't stand being here any longer. It's dreadful, dreadful. Right.

This is level two. Now, be aware of that. These two are first of all separate.

There is the triggering event or situation, and then there is your physical, emotional, mental reaction to that. And now what is level three? That is usually overlooked.

But level three is where ultimately freedom lies. Level three is your awareness of both these levels. You are aware that there is the situation, the event, there is my reaction, physical, emotional, mental, and there is myself being the aware space for those two.

And if you can bring your attention more to that deepest level, then you realize changes will happen on the other two levels. If you recognize yourself not as the reacting entity that happens in you, but that's not who you are, but you recognize yourself as the awareness that is aware of the thing that's happening out there, of the thing that's reacting inside.

[Speaker 2] (20:38 - 20:44)

So it's actually like, Debbie, you're observing your own behavior. You're observing your ego's behavior to it.

[Speaker 1] (20:44 - 20:45)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (20:45 - 20:46)

You're observing your ego's behavior.

[Speaker 1] (20:46 - 20:50)

With no judgment, just as pure observation, pure awareness.

[Speaker 2] (20:50 - 20:55)

Like, oh, isn't that interesting? I'm getting so upset over this guy pulling in front of me.

[Speaker 1] (20:55 - 21:31)

Just being there as the awareness. And that's already the beginning of freedom. And then increasingly you realize that you are that.

You are not the entity that is reacting. And then, as Oprah said, you can let go of thinking of yourself, of having this concept of yourself as a highly sensitive person that perhaps you might, it's not natural, nothing personal in this, you may have become attached to because you've lived with this concept of who you are for many years. So that's where freedom lies.

[Speaker 2] (21:31 - 21:57)

But in addition to Debbie's question, let's say, and for her, you know, she labels herself or defines herself as a highly sensitive person. But let's say a person gets upset about someone putting a dent in his or her car. Or you spill coffee on your blouse right before an important meeting.

Or your child gets sick. Or you get sick. Or are you saying that if we get upset about these things, these kinds of things, that we don't know who we truly are?

[Speaker 1] (21:58 - 22:12)

If the dimension of presence or awareness is missing, then you are lost in the reaction. You think you are the reaction. Yes, then you become the reaction.

And when you become the reaction, you don't know who you are. It's a misperception of who you are.

[Speaker 2] (22:13 - 22:27)

You got that, right, Debbie? Yeah, yeah, I got it. Yeah.

Yeah, I got it, too. That could help you a lot. Isn't it good when you get it?

Yeah. I got it, too. I got it, too.

And just detaching yourself, it doesn't, that doesn't change the situation.

[Speaker 1] (22:27 - 23:11)

It doesn't immediately change the situation. But you do find that as you practice this, changes suddenly appear. Changes sometimes first appear in the force that is behind your reaction, that lessens.

You react, still react, but less, not as strongly. And miraculously, you sometimes even find that if you, if you're totally, because really the awareness level is also part of the acceptance, completely accepted at this moment, this is what I feel. And this is the external situation is.

With complete acceptance, even changes often happen miraculously in the external situation. Yeah.

[Speaker 2] (23:11 - 23:23)

I think acceptance of the situation, which you talk about in Power of Now, and also repeatedly in A New Earth, acceptance, non-resistance to the moment, is one of the most important things we can learn.

[Speaker 6] (23:24 - 23:24)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (23:24 - 23:38)

And that is whether or not you are facing a crisis, whether you're facing someone, you've lost a loved one, or whether you're, you know, in traffic and are a highly sensitive person, non-accepting what is in that moment. Yes.

[Speaker 1] (23:39 - 24:07)

Is the most important. Yes. And you can practice with little things, because little things happen throughout the day that people feel irritated about, angry about, protesting against, and so on.

Or with little things, you will have many opportunities to practice. So it's a wonderful spiritual practice. So you use what before you wanted to get rid of, you use it as part of your spiritual practice, and then as a by-product, you also eventually get rid of it.

[Speaker 2] (24:08 - 24:33)

Thanks, Debbie. Thanks so much. Okay.

Thank you. From the Netherlands. Thank you.

Thank you. Everybody says they want peace, inner peace and peace on Earth. On page 188, you say, peace is really what you want, then you will choose peace.

And if peace mattered to you more than anything else, and if you truly knew yourself to be a spirit rather than a little me, you would remain non-reactive and absolutely alert when confronted with challenging people or situations.

[Speaker 1] (24:33 - 24:34)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (24:34 - 24:34)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (24:34 - 25:35)

That's the, so there's, you can either be reactive, act according to your, the way you've reacted for many years, your past conditioning, or you can become more alert when a challenging situation happens so that you don't internally separate yourself from the situation. So that when you completely open yourself to the situation, that you bring an alertness to it, an alertness of presence. So you're facing the situation totally with that state of alert presence.

You're not reactive anymore. And if something needs to be said or done in the situation, the words will suddenly come from that level of consciousness, from that alert stillness. If you need to do something, then you, the right thing, the right doing will happen.

Instinctively, or instinctively is not the right word, intuitively, the right thing, you will do the right thing. So...

[Speaker 2] (25:35 - 25:37)

Because it will be born out of a sense of presence.

[Speaker 1] (25:37 - 25:38)

Out of presence.

[Speaker 2] (25:38 - 25:41)

Or a sense of being, which is another word that we're using.

[Speaker 1] (25:41 - 26:01)

Yes. Yes. That's right.

And so any, whenever you are upset about any situation, there's a line in the Course in Miracles that says, I am never upset for the reason I think. Yes. So because when you're upset, you have lost yourself on the external level, what we call the horizontal.

[Speaker 2] (26:01 - 26:10)

But aren't there some things worth upsetting you? I mean, there are injustices in the world, and there are horrible things happening all the time in the world that we should be upset about.

[Speaker 1] (26:10 - 26:20)

I wouldn't say that we should be upset about. It would, it is normal for people to be upset about this, but it is not the most effective way of bringing about change. I got it.

[Speaker 2] (26:21 - 26:23)

You can be upset all day long and nothing changes.

[Speaker 1] (26:23 - 26:23)

Nothing happens.

[Speaker 2] (26:24 - 26:26)

Because people have been upset for years and things don't change.

[Speaker 1] (26:26 - 27:04)

Yes. People are upset about violence, they're upset about war, continuous war between nations and so on. It continues to happen.

And you cannot, you cannot fight against... But being upset about it changes nothing. No.

So it's more powerful to face a situation and see this is how it is, and then see if action is possible. What is it that can be done? Got it.

And then there's no negativity in the action. But if you are resisting, if you're complaining about a situation already, whatever you do, the negativity flows into what you do.

[Speaker 2] (27:04 - 28:19)

Yeah. I just got something earlier, and the reason I'm thinking about this, because a friend of mine had lost his brother and was saying that, you know, he was having such a hard time letting go. And what I just had in this moment, something clicked for me, is that when people do finally are allowed to move on from their grief, it's because they have come to the point of acceptance that their loved one is gone.

Yes. And what you're saying is, in any situation, whether it's the loss of a loved one, or loss of a position, or loss of whatever that you're faced with, acceptance of the situation and beginning to deal with what is going on now, instead of wondering or worrying about what could have been, should have been, might have been, changes the situation and the way you feel about it. Yes.

And that your pain and suffering is cause, and stress is cause, because you refuse to accept the now. Yes. You're not one with the now.

Got it. Continuing on with who we are, because I know so many people have this as a prominent question for themselves. You say on page 189, nobody can tell you who you are.

It would just be another concept. So it would not change you. Who you are requires no belief.

In fact, every belief is an obstacle.

[Speaker 1] (28:20 - 28:30)

What does that mean? It means who you are has nothing to do with any thought that you might have about yourself. So does who you are have nothing to do with what you've done?

[Speaker 2] (28:30 - 28:47)

So you spend your life here doing all this work, and working, working, working, working, making money, taking care of your family, doing all the things that people do, and that has nothing to do with you? And then you, at your funeral, they read your, you know, words about you and say, this is who you are?

[Speaker 1] (28:47 - 29:34)

Well, and then there's the gravestone. And on the gravestone, there is the date of birth. And there is a one or two inch dash.

Yes. And then there's the date of your death. And the dash is really all your ambitions, and your fears, and your drama, and your problems.

That's what's left on that level. So I'm not saying not to honor the level of form, because that's what we are talking about. Whatever you do in this life, this horizontal level, where we do things, where we have our functions, and play roles, you honor that level.

But realizing there is something more vital, there is something deeper than just that. Okay.

[Speaker 2] (29:34 - 29:43)

Bridget says, Dear Oprah Decker, can you explain the quote on page 192, but nothing you can find out about yourself is you. Nothing you can know about you is you.

[Speaker 1] (29:43 - 30:59)

Yes. Okay. So I'm making a difference here between knowing yourself and knowing about yourself.

Okay. And I mentioned as an example, if you go to a conventional psychoanalyst, let's say, you will spend some years examining the makeup of your conditioning, of your past, your childhood, and so on. You find out more and more about yourself, things that perhaps you hadn't seen clearly about your emotions, about the makeup of your thoughts, and so on.

And all that is knowing about, it's to do with content. Right. The content of my life, and the content of my mind, ultimately, because my life is, I know it only as the content of my mind.

So that is knowing about yourself, and you can know thousands of facts about yourself and your history, and still not know who you are, because that knowing has nothing to do with conceptual knowing, with bits of information. It's the deeper knowing, I gave the analogy earlier of the honey. The honey.

You can know about the honey.

[Speaker 6] (31:00 - 31:00)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (31:00 - 31:24)

Or you can taste the honey, because when you taste the honey, the honey becomes you. It merges with you. That's right.

That's right. In that sense, knowing who you are in a non-conceptual way is being fully who you are. It's being in touch with that deeper level of being that you can only access in the present moment, the vertical dimension.

[Speaker 2] (31:24 - 31:38)

Well, if you are reading this book, and suddenly become to understand, or not reading this book, and understand, as you say, many people say, well, I'm a spiritual being. I'm on my spiritual path.

[Speaker 1] (31:38 - 31:38)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (31:38 - 32:03)

As many people have said. They say, I've been on this spiritual path for many years, or I'm a spiritual person. Aren't you just a little step closer thinking you're a spiritual person, or is that another form of your ego, saying I'm a spiritual person?

Well, you have to- Yes, that is- Come from the greater spirit. So I can use the word I am consciousness, come out of the greater consciousness that I call God.

[Speaker 1] (32:03 - 32:04)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (32:04 - 32:11)

Or spirit that come out of the greater consciousness, spirit that I call God. Yes. So I recognize that.

I know that intellectually.

[Speaker 1] (32:11 - 33:01)

Yes. So in that sense, you can say intellectually, that is a true statement. Yeah, but I also feel it deeply.

The question is whether, and this is, I know that you do, but any, the question is whether you truly feel that as a reality and a way of finding out how deeply you truly know this is when, how you react to situations in your life, and how you react to other people in your life. It's there that you find out whether your belief that you are spirit, whether you truly know that, or whether it's no more, as I put it, than an idea floating around in your mind. Do you know it in the depths of your being?

Because then the way in which you deal with situations and people is very different. Correct.

[Speaker 2] (33:01 - 33:27)

I've always believed that I really was God's child, that I was, you know, come from, and as I've gotten older and could articulate it better, you know, I use other ways of describing it, but I believe that I came from that which is God. Yes. And was born of that, and so therefore really have no real fears in the world.

I've always believed everything would be okay. No matter what, I'm going to be okay because of that.

[Speaker 1] (33:27 - 33:47)

And that's more than a belief, actually. More than a belief. You can sense that in some way that it's hard to describe, but you can sense that ultimately there isn't you and God.

There is a deep place where you and God merge. There's a oneness with that. Well, I've just gotten that later in life.

[Speaker 2] (33:47 - 33:50)

Yes. I used to think God was out there. Yes.

Hi, Eleanor.

[Speaker 3] (33:51 - 33:57)

Hi, Oprah. Hi, Mr. Tolle. This is such a great experience.

I really thank you so much for it.

[Speaker 2] (33:57 - 33:59)

Well, thank you. Your question is?

[Speaker 3] (34:00 - 34:54)

My question is, on page 192, you say, you may not want to know yourself because you are afraid of what you may find out. Mm-hmm. And my question is about letting go of your insecurities or what you would call your ego.

For many years now, I've been handling, so to say, an eating disorder, and it's pretty much been, it's consumed a great part of my identity. That's how I identify myself, and I feel like that causes a great lacking in me. Mm-hmm.

And in a way, I do want to let go, but then a great part of me just wants to hold on to this identification of myself. And I guess my question is, what is this next step from awakening to the fact that I should move on and acting upon that?

[Speaker 1] (34:55 - 35:23)

Mm-hmm. That's the deriving your sense of who you are from certain thoughts or mental images that you have about yourself. And that's the normal identity that people have.

They derive their sense of self from certain mental images or thoughts they have about themselves, which they repeat to themselves, which they talk to others about.

[Speaker 2] (35:23 - 35:31)

Yes. It's what Debbie was saying to us earlier from the Netherlands. I'm a very sensitive person, so therefore, lots of things overwhelm me.

[Speaker 1] (35:31 - 35:43)

Yes. Yes. And that's already, on one level, that is true.

But if you become too identified with a label like that, then that becomes a hindrance in going beyond it.

[Speaker 7] (35:43 - 35:43)

Mm-hmm.

[Speaker 1] (35:44 - 35:48)

That's why you immediately said when she said that, ah, there we have a label.

[Speaker 7] (35:48 - 35:48)

Mm-hmm.

[Speaker 1] (35:48 - 37:14)

And so there's a similar thing, perhaps, that happens to you. So it's really finding within yourself something that is more powerful, more genuine, more truly who you are than any image that you have in your mind. And we have to come back here to really the essence of this teaching, which is present moment.

You have to invite the present moment into your life as frequently as you can. You have to make room for the present moment, because it's only when you make room for the present moment that these images and mental concepts about who you are do not operate. So when you become present, and I've already given hints about how little things you can do to become present, then the alertness rises.

The key is here, another word for presence, is the alertness. And so you become alert also within. You feel the aliveness of your inner body.

Rather than having a mental concept of who you are, you feel the entire energy field, that which animates the physical form. And you are in touch with that.

[Speaker 2] (37:14 - 37:57)

Yeah. And Eleanor, what I would say, add to that is that you haven't done that enough, because once you start to do that, when you get in touch with the inner body, when you begin to feel the inner space, when you begin to feel the presence and being that is really you, you realize you're bigger than your little self with an eating disorder. When you start, and the reason why you're still attached to this idea of having an eating disorder, because that's as big as you know yourself to be right now.

And when you know yourself to be something more, you will choose to be the something more, and not this little me that has an eating disorder. That's how I see it.

[Speaker 1] (37:57 - 37:58)

Yes, that's it.

[Speaker 2] (37:58 - 38:04)

That's how I see it. And that's why you're clinging to it, because you don't know who you are. Because you don't know who you are.

[Speaker 3] (38:05 - 38:17)

It's very difficult to move beyond that. I mean, I may, in my mind, understand that intellectually that I'm greater than this issue, but it's hard.

[Speaker 2] (38:18 - 38:41)

You're not going to help yourself through your mind. That's what Eckhart is saying in this whole book. That real healing, real everything, creativity, real joy, real presence and being comes from that space, the inner space of consciousness or presence and being.

And the reason why you're attached to the idea, because that works for you. That works for you right now.

[Speaker 3] (38:42 - 38:43)

Very easy.

[Speaker 2] (38:43 - 39:06)

Yeah, that works for you because you like playing small right now. And so maybe you're not ready. But what he just described for you is exact.

And it doesn't happen overnight. It doesn't mean that tomorrow you're going to wake up and not have an issue. It's slowly bringing more and more consciousness into your daily way of being that allows you.

[Speaker 3] (39:06 - 39:08)

It's a lot of effort, that's for sure.

[Speaker 2] (39:09 - 39:12)

And I would say this, Eleanor, I would say you're worth it.

[Speaker 3] (39:12 - 39:15)

Thank you. Thank you so much for this opportunity.

[Speaker 2] (39:15 - 39:17)

I would say you're worth the effort. I would say you're worth the effort.

[Speaker 3] (39:17 - 39:18)

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (39:18 - 40:01)

Thank you. I want to move on to abundance. And there was a question I had earlier that you had on here about abundance.

I love that question. But there's a lot in Chapter 7 about abundance and that we are not the little me that we think we are. You say on page 190, whatever you think the world is withholding from you, you're withholding from the world.

And you're withholding it because deep down you think you're small and that you have nothing to give. Try this for a couple of weeks and see how it changes your reality. Whatever you think people are withholding from you, praise, appreciation, assistance, loving, care, and so on, give it to them.

What's so great about this, I think, is that it's something people can do every day right now, is to start to give that which you say you most want.

[Speaker 1] (40:02 - 41:14)

Yes. And it starts with recognizing external abundance. That if the act of recognition that there's external abundance, and what that is we'll see in a second.

The act of recognition of external abundance already brings out the abundance that is an essential part of your very being. So when you recognize abundance without, and what I'm suggesting there is just to look at, you're walking past a store where there's a display of fruit, apples, oranges, and you see the abundance and the aliveness that is there. You acknowledge it there.

Abundance doesn't mean that you need to buy many things. You can buy or not buy. But you see the abundance of water, rain falling from the sky.

There's an abundance of water. There's an abundance of aliveness. There's an abundance of joy in the dog that's going past you there.

And so to recognize, to see the abundance that surrounds you, even if you're very poor in the eyes of the world, the abundance is always there around you. But you need to recognize it, acknowledge it. And another word for that is gratitude.

[Speaker 2] (41:14 - 41:17)

I know. I was going to say, that's why I've kept a gratitude journal for years.

[Speaker 1] (41:18 - 41:18)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (41:18 - 41:31)

If you keep a gratitude journal listing, I do this thing, just five things in the day that made you most grateful, what you start to notice is, is that there are more things added to your list and you don't even have time to write them all.

[Speaker 6] (41:31 - 41:32)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (41:32 - 41:40)

And when you start to pay attention to the things, okay? And you also say acknowledging the good that is already in your life is the foundation for all abundance.

[Speaker 1] (41:40 - 42:13)

Yes. And again, many people make that mistake because they believe that there is nothing good in my life. And that's absurd.

It means they are not present. They are trapped in certain stories in their head, which tell them continuously that there is nothing good in my life. And if they only opened their eyes and looked around and if they smelled the air, saw the sunlight, the most abundant thing you can see is the sun.

Well, I think the most abundant thing you can have is your breath. The breath? Come back to your breath.

Yes, come back to the breath. So you can be with that and...

[Speaker 2] (42:13 - 42:16)

When you can't think of anything to be grateful for, go to your breath.

[Speaker 1] (42:16 - 42:20)

Breath or the aliveness in your hands and in your arms to feel that.

[Speaker 2] (42:20 - 42:32)

And you sum this up, this abundance, by using a quote from Jesus saying, Give and it will be given to you. Good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over, will be put into your lap. That is the truth, so help me.

[Speaker 1] (42:32 - 43:51)

That is just the truth. Yes. It's an amazing, amazing statement.

And also somewhere else, Jesus talks about... You must like Jesus. You talk about him a lot.

Oh, yes. There was a time when I was brought up as a Catholic and then for many years I wasn't interested anymore. And then after I went through this inner shift, a couple of years afterwards, I happened to pick up the New Testament and I happened to read the Gospels and I suddenly saw how deep all this is, these statements.

That's right. It became more than doctrine for you. Yes, yes.

And so Jesus somewhere else says, I want you to have life in its fullness. I want you to have the fullness of life. And that's a beautiful statement and people sometimes don't realize what he means by the fullness of life because in our civilization particularly, the fullness of life means having as many things as possible.

Yes. And of course, I'm convinced that Jesus was not talking about shopping malls. No.

Because if he was talking about shopping malls, then the kingdom of heaven has already arrived and it's in the shopping malls. So he was not talking about many, many things. Eckhart made a joke, y'all.

[Speaker 2] (43:54 - 43:55)

Eckhart made a funny.

[Speaker 1] (43:58 - 44:09)

He was talking about something that is within you. The fullness of life is a dimension within you and he said, I want you to be in touch with that dimension within you.

[Speaker 2] (44:09 - 44:15)

And you are absolutely right. If you get nothing else from this book, if you can get that, then your life will change.

[Speaker 1] (44:16 - 44:16)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (44:16 - 44:17)

Your life will change.

[Speaker 1] (44:17 - 44:17)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (44:17 - 44:43)

That abundance comes only to those who already have it. Page 192. It sounds almost unfair, but of course it isn't.

It's a universal law. Both abundance and scarcity are interstates and manifest as your reality. Jesus puts it like this, for to the one who has, more will be given and from the one who is not, even what he has will be taken away.

And he's not talking about things. He's talking about your inner state of gratitude for what you already have.

[Speaker 1] (44:43 - 44:44)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (44:44 - 45:15)

And your life will change. All right. Let's talk about the joy of being.

Unhappiness or negativity is a disease on our planet. What pollution is on the outer level is negativity. Page 213, everybody.

What pollution is on the outer level is negativity on the inner. It is everywhere. Not in just places where people don't have enough.

I love this. But even more so where they have more than enough. Their fluent world is even more deeply identified with form, more lost in content, more trapped in ego.

I thought that was interesting.

[Speaker 1] (45:15 - 46:19)

Yes. Sometimes you see, you know, when you visit certain places where people have relatively little, often you see more happy faces and radiant faces than in our rich society. So the passage is about negativity.

And there's an enormous amount of negativity in the collective energy field of our planet. But it is generated by individuals. So it's everybody's task to be alert so that when negativity arises within them, they recognize it and then ask themselves whether that is what they choose.

When you recognize it, you can be there as the presence and you have a choice. Is negativity ever the optimum way of dealing with any situation? And if you look closely, you'll see it never is a good way of dealing with any situation.

[Speaker 2] (46:19 - 46:53)

OK. You say on page 214, the joy of being, which is the only true happiness, cannot come to you through any form, possession, achievement, person, or event. And that means people who think that I'm with you and I love you and you're going to bring me joy cannot.

Yes. You either are joy or you're not. Yes.

OK. Through anything that happens, that joy cannot come to you ever. It emanates from the formless dimension within you, from consciousness itself, and thus is one with who you are.

[Speaker 1] (46:54 - 47:41)

Yes. It comes from within and not from without. People conventionally expect it to come to them from without, and then it usually doesn't because you need to discover it in yourself first.

And this is why when you try to manifest things in your life, which is a fine thing to do, but the vital question is, have you, first of all, already come to that place of fullness and joy within yourself right now? Have you found a right relationship with the present moment? If you haven't, because that's where it resides.

It's only by having a right relationship with the present moment that the joy can arise from within you.

[Speaker 2] (47:41 - 48:27)

You talk about that on 210 when you say, to awaken within the dream is our purpose now. When we are awake within the dream, the ego-created earth drama comes to an end, and a more benign and wondrous dream arises, this new earth. Also, let's go to page 215, everybody.

The top of 215, you talk about a powerful spiritual practice is consciously to allow the diminishment of ego because what we've been learning through A New Earth is that most of us have, until reading this book, believed we were our egos, believed we were, as Eckhart has said earlier in tonight, we believe we were our horizontal life without the vertical. We believe we were our past. We believe we are what we're going to do and what we have done.

And the now was always just a sort of means to an end.

[Speaker 6] (48:28 - 48:28)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (48:28 - 49:03)

Okay. So you say a powerful spiritual practice is consciously to allow the diminishment of ego when it happens without attempting to restore the ego. I recommend that you experiment with this from time to time.

For example, when someone criticizes you, blames you, or calls you names, I got to tell you, it's hard to say, is that so? Instead of immediately retaliating or defending yourself, do nothing. Allow the self-image to remain diminished and become alert to what that feels like deep inside you.

So what's that supposed to do for us?

[Speaker 1] (49:03 - 49:34)

Now, it's not, I'm not saying in each case you should do that. Experiment with this from time to time when, particularly when nothing depends on that situation. So you don't have to explain something so that a situation can be put right or whatever.

Somebody just calls you, we talked about it the other day. Somebody cuts you off in traffic? Yes.

So that would be a good practice, but it's totally pointless to retaliate.

[Speaker 2] (49:34 - 49:34)

Yes.

[Speaker 1] (49:34 - 50:08)

It makes no sense whatsoever. But the retaliation when somebody calls you names in traffic or whatever. Or does something to upset you.

Yes. Try doing nothing. Yes.

The retaliation is automatic and unconscious because it comes from the ego. Because when somebody calls you stupid, for example. Or somebody calls you idiot, it injures the ego.

It hurts the ego. And it's the ego that's being injured, not you. Not you.

It's nothing because deep down you know that it's not you. It's just the ego image of who I think I am.

[Speaker 2] (50:08 - 50:15)

Deep down you, well, deep down you know it's not you. But if you are a person who lives unconsciously, if you live out of your ego, you think it's you.

[Speaker 1] (50:15 - 50:26)

Yes. And immediately the ego will go into what I call instant self-repair mechanism. And this instant self-repair mechanism, which is totally unconscious.

[Speaker 2] (50:26 - 50:28)

Says, I am not stupid.

[Speaker 1] (50:28 - 51:04)

Well, it will call the other person something worse than stupid. And by that, the ego believes that it has repaired itself. And on that level, it has.

So this person has taken something away from you. The imaginary ego. And then you take something away from that other person.

That's how the egos work. And then, of course, it's probably not the end because the other person is going to retaliate again. Right.

And now you're in it. The whole madness starts. You're in the drama.

Yes. So this is a good example where you can practice being non-reactive. So when somebody calls you something, remain total.

[Speaker 2] (51:05 - 51:21)

And you say when that happens, just do it for a few seconds. It may feel uncomfortable, as it will, just to keep your mouth shut. It feels like you've shrunk in size momentarily.

Then you may sense an inner spaciousness that feels intensely alive. You haven't been diminished at all. In fact, you have expanded.

What do you mean by that?

[Speaker 1] (51:22 - 52:05)

So somebody, what you are not defending is your egoic identity, the image identity. And suddenly, that has become diminished by somebody calling you stupid, for example. This entity has become diminished.

You don't resist the diminishment. So it has become smaller, so to speak. And therefore, suddenly, something that is deeper than that can suddenly come through.

Because the ego has shrunk in size. I got it. Now, the ego doesn't like that.

That's right. It's a wonderful experiment when you allow the ego to shrink. And then suddenly, you feel there is a power underneath that that's far greater than the ego.

[Speaker 2] (52:05 - 52:07)

And it shrinks every time you become aware of it.

[Speaker 1] (52:08 - 52:08)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (52:08 - 52:10)

Even when you don't do what you're supposed to do?

[Speaker 1] (52:10 - 52:11)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (52:11 - 52:28)

Okay. I like this question from Suhad in Clifton, New Jersey. How can we use the high-quality no that you talk about on page 216 in our lives?

Can you please provide us with some real-life examples? 216, high-quality no. What did you mean by high-quality no?

[Speaker 1] (52:29 - 53:36)

In some cases, sometimes people misunderstand when I say, say yes to the present moment. They believe then whenever somebody asks you something, you have to say yes. Yeah.

No, when I say yes to the present moment, it's to do with an inner state of consciousness. Yes. That is open to what is.

That does not resist what is. It does not necessarily mean that every time somebody asks you something, you say yes. So let's say a person comes to you.

You've known him. You've already lent him money five times. He's never returned it.

Or two. Two is enough. Two is enough.

And so he says, I need another $500 now. And then you perhaps, this may be a good opportunity and occasion where you can use a high-quality no that is not reactive and does not make that person wrong and, say, becomes angry and or shouts at him. And so you are dishonest.

You haven't returned my money. And I'm not giving you a penny more. Well, this is a low-quality no.

It's a low-quality no. A high-quality no is to say.

[Speaker 2] (53:36 - 53:38)

Who do you think you are?

[Speaker 1] (53:38 - 53:41)

All that kind of stuff. Stories in order to make wrong.

[Speaker 2] (53:41 - 53:44)

Yes. I've given you money so many times before.

[Speaker 1] (53:44 - 53:46)

Yes. And then you make yourself into a victim.

[Speaker 2] (53:46 - 53:51)

Yes. It's all part of. Or make yourself into the great person who's been so benevolent.

[Speaker 1] (53:51 - 54:15)

Yes. Whatever the egoic game is. So the high-quality no is to simply state, well, I've already given you that money twice and you haven't returned it yet.

So I won't give you any more. You have to return my money first. I'm not going to give you.

Can you sense that there's no negativity? You simply state clearly, this is what I'm going to do or not do. I won't give you any more because you haven't returned that.

[Speaker 2] (54:16 - 55:06)

I just want to say here that I love this on 220. What you see, hear, feel, touch, or think about is only one half of reality, so to speak. It is form.

In the teaching of Jesus, it's simply called the world. And the other dimension is the kingdom of heaven or eternal life. Then toward the bottom of the page, second to last paragraph, you say, the collective disease of humanity is that people are so engrossed in what happens, so hypnotized by the world of fluctuating forms, so absorbed in the content of their lives, they have forgotten the essence, that which is beyond content, beyond form, beyond thought.

They're so consumed by time that they have forgotten eternity, which is their origin, their home, their destiny. Eternity is the living reality of who you are.

[Speaker 1] (55:06 - 55:52)

And you can actually sense it, although that's a wonderful thing when you can be surrounded by the stillness. Yeah. But the amazing thing is you can actually sense that even in the midst of chaos, even in the midst of noise, I've also very often felt that in nature.

But I have also felt that extreme peace in situations where one wouldn't expect it. I felt it in the middle of London, in busy streets, walking around, especially after I went through this shift. Before I went through this shift, I was always anxious and fearful, and I couldn't stand the traffic and the noise.

And suddenly I was able to just walk along Piccadilly Circus and be totally at peace, as if I were on a mountaintop inside. So when you...

[Speaker 2] (55:53 - 55:54)

A mountaintop inside.

[Speaker 1] (55:54 - 55:55)

Inside, yeah.

[Speaker 2] (55:55 - 55:57)

And that's what presence is, is it not?

[Speaker 1] (55:57 - 55:57)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (55:57 - 56:00)

Presence is being on the mountaintop inside.

[Speaker 1] (56:00 - 56:22)

That stillness is always there in you as the essence of who you are. And when we call it stillness, we already limit it because it's so vast, you cannot describe it with one word. Right.

So whatever word you use is already a limitation. But words are limited, of course, because words refer to tangible things, but not to the inner reality.

[Speaker 2] (56:22 - 56:29)

So before we say goodbye, let's sum up what we've covered in this class. Knowing who you really are means knowing.

[Speaker 1] (56:30 - 57:23)

Yes. Knowing at a level beyond the level of concepts. Knowing yourself ultimately is being yourself fully.

Being in touch with being, the being that you are. To sense the I am, that is the essence of your identity, when you remove all the identifications that usually... You say, after you say I am, you say what you are.

But if you say I am and add nothing to it, that gives a good practice. It can get you in touch with the essence. I am not this, I am not that.

I am, as a simple meditation, repeat the words I am to yourself. It's so powerful. I started to do that.

It is so powerful when you do that. And don't fill in the blank after the words.

[Speaker 2] (57:23 - 57:23)

Yeah.

[Speaker 1] (57:24 - 57:53)

Very powerful. Another similar one is, who am I? It's a question, but don't look to the mind for an answer.

In fact, don't look for any answer, especially not on the level of mind. Who am I? And then allow the stillness to be there after the question.

Don't look for an answer. And in not looking for an answer, there's the answer. But it's not a mental concept as of sensing.

Wow. Feeling. I am.

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (57:54 - 58:59)

And just be with that. Yes. And so for whether it's an addiction or an eating disorder or nothing, you think you have a really wonderful life, but you are connected to all the things in your life, to the content of your life.

Just being able to sit with yourself and to say those words to yourself, I am. It's wonderfully liberating. And to recognize them, to know them.

Yes. Like honey. Yes.

To know them. That's right. Thank you again.

Thank you. I want to thank you all for joining us. Get ready for our next class on Chapter 8.

It's the discovery of inner space. I love this. It's my next favorite chapter.

I think 7, 8, 9 are really the essence of the book. Inner space is about allowing the inner space of your life to connect to the outer purpose of your life. The inner and outer purposes of your life.

Right? That's right. Love it.

Again, we thank you. This was a long chapter, lots to cover. Every time I read it, I go a little deeper and awaken a little more.

[Speaker 6] (58:59 - 58:59)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (58:59 - 59:01)

So this is one you need to be with for a while.

[Speaker 1] (59:01 - 59:02)

Definitely.

[Speaker 2] (59:02 - 59:03)

Over and over.

[Speaker 1] (59:03 - 59:09)

And after you've read it once, you don't need to read long pages. Just read sometimes half a page is enough.

[Speaker 2] (59:09 - 59:29)

Yes. One page. What I do is I go back and read, as you're using your highlighters, just go back and read what you've highlighted and just be with that.

Because the things that you highlight are usually things that resonate with you more deeply. It's a good way of reviewing it. And every time you come back to it, you know, two weeks from now, you'll get something that you didn't get the first time.

Oh, yes.

[Speaker 1] (59:29 - 59:29)

Yes.

[Speaker 2] (59:29 - 59:30)

Thank you.

[Speaker 1] (59:30 - 59:31)

Thank you.

[Speaker 2] (59:31 - 59:32)

Thank you, Eckhart. Thanks, everybody.

[Speaker 5] (59:34 - 1:00:13)

Hey, Supersolars. Looking for a great new read or listen? Well, that's why we're so excited about Oprah's new book, The Path Made Clear, Discovering Your Life's Direction and Purpose.
